FINANCIAL.

CALM FOLLOWS STORM IN FINANCIAL WORLD.

Clearinghouse Certificates Prove Solution to Problem Confronting Banks.

Great Money Institutions of New York City Pass Through Trying Week Intact and General Sentiment Is That Crisis Is Over and Acute Strain Will Gradually Disappear.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—Calmness and growing encouragement were the dominant features of the financial situation, when the great banking institutions closed their work today, with all the great financial institutions of the city intact, after having met the unprecedented demands of the past week.

With this signal demonstration of the resisting powers of the banks, came the adoption of new and important measures to prevent a recurrence of the acute strain.

Although the Stock Exchange and other sensitive points were free from trouble, several banks and trust companies suffered withdrawal of funds, these withdrawals being for the most part of smaller depositors. All institutions affected continued to pay on demand up till noon, the usual hour of closing on Saturday.

REMEDIAL MEASURES.

First of importance in the remedial measures was the action of the clearinghouse in voting to issue loan certificates for the use of the banks themselves in settling their daily balances at the clearinghouse. The certificates will not get into general circulation, but their use will enable the banks to keep in circulation, for the needs of general business, large amounts of currency which otherwise would be required for the settlement of the daily clearinghouse balances.

Plans were formulated to extend the benefit of clearinghouse certificates to the trust companies, as well as to the banks which are at present members [illegible] by the City National Bank, which has engaged $5,000,000 in gold for import. It is believed by the bankers and brokers that this engagement is the beginning of what will probably be a continuous movement of gold to New York from abroad. The existing market is very favorable for the importation of gold, and it is believed no difficulty will be met with in securing the metal from Europe, so far as may be needed.

CLEARINGHOUSE CERTIFICATES.

The clearinghouse certificates will be issued to those banks making application and proving to the satisfaction of the committee appointed for the purpose, the need for the certificates, and their ability to deposit the proper collateral.

No limit was fixed to the amount to be issued, but it is hoped the amount asked for will be small.

Another step was taken also of first importance, designed to offset the unfavorable effect which might be produced by the fact that the clearinghouse banks were in a position to obtain certificates, while the trust companies were left out of the arrangement. The fear that the trust companies would be unfavorably affected by such a decision, was one of the influences which led several members of the Clearinghouse Committee to oppose the issuance of certificates.

The step taken to offset this danger was the presentation of a resolution by the Clearinghouse Committee to members of the association, to the effect that the trust companies should be admitted to the clearinghouse. It was provided that this resolution might be considered at a meeting of the association to be held hereafter.

Thus far there have been no applications by the trust companies for admission to the clearinghouse, and the exact condition on which they might be admitted has not been fixed. The requirement made from banks admitted to the clearinghouse is that they shall keep in their own vaults a reserve of 25 per cent. of their deposits. This is a larger reserve than most of the trust companies have carried since the requirements of the law of 1906 did not go beyond 10 per cent. in cash on hand, or on deposit in other banks.

SITUATION RELIEVED.

While the action taken today is not immediately effective, so far as it relates to trust companies, it shows a willingness of the clearinghouse banks to coöperate with the trust companies, which greatly relieves the situation and removes the danger which some have feared, that each individual trust company would be left to shift for itself, while the associated banks, in the clearinghouse, stood firmly together.

It is felt by conservative bankers that, under present conditions, it will not be prudent to pursue a narrow policy and, if it is necessary to bring the important trust companies to full fellowship with the clearinghouse, it will be done.

The clearinghouse certificates authorized today will be issued in substantially the same form as those authorized from 1860 down to 1893. When a bank satisfies a committee that clearinghouse certificates are needed and the request is granted, the bank will be required to deposit first-class bills receivable, or other good collateral, and will receive 75 per cent. of the ascertained market value of such collateral in clearinghouse certificates. These certificates will be accepted in all settlements of debit balances against the banks at the clearinghouse.

MORAL EFFECT.

The effect of the decision to issue [illegible] anticipated in view of the previous demand for currency.

The largest issue of certificates up to the present time was in 1893, when the total output was $41,490,000, and the maximum outstanding at any one time was $38,280,000. The first issue was made in that year on June 21, just before the announcement that the government of British India had suspended the free coinage of silver and fear spread that it would be impossible to maintain the value of the silver dollar.

No such menace faces the money market at the present time, and under the operations of the gold standard law, the accumulation of gold in the Treasury, including that held against gold certificates, now stands at $928,000,000, which is the largest gold stock in the world.

It is not believed that the demands of the present occasion for certificates will be large. The clearinghouse banks showed today specie holdings of $196,426,000, of which nearly all was in gold, and legal tender holdings of $58,283,700.

These items showed a decrease of $12,900,000 in the bank statement of today as compared with that of a week ago, but the total reserve stood at $254,709,700, which was only $1,233,300 below the legal requirement of 25 per cent. While a decline of the reserve below the legal limit is always a subject of remark, it is not infrequent during the crop moving season, and still leaves so large a fund of cash at the command of the banks that under ordinary conditions this would not excite any uneasiness.

The indications are that the cash reserve of the associated banks will be kept substantially intact hereafter by the importation of gold.

The sharp fall in exchange yesterday

TRUST COMPANY SURVIVES GREATEST RUN ON RECORD.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] No man living can remember such a week as Wall street has just experienced. Runs on banks and trust companies have been a feature of every financial disturbance, but the survival of a banking institution after four days' pounding by its depositors is unprecedented in the history of this or any other country. That is exactly what happened to the Trust Company of America. It was only made possible by the aid of the government through the channels of the national banks.

Early in the week J. P. Morgan and his advisers decided that the Trust Company of America was solvent and that it must keep its doors open if order was to come out of panic. Without doubt that decision was wise. Other trust companies closed their doors as a protection to their depositors. The fact that the Trust Company of America stood ready to pay its last depositor with cash has done more than any one thing to restore confidence.

Beyond question the crisis was passed late on Thursday afternoon, when J. P. Morgan, in answer to a desperate appeal, sent $25,000,000 over to the Stock Exchange to b loaned out on call. The crash ended with the news that a syndicate of bankers had agreed to lend $25,000,000 in small lots from 10 per cent. down.

After what Wall street has experienced for the last ten days it is unreasonable to expect the return of normal conditions for some time to come. The situation has been on the mend, however, ever since 2:30 o'clock p.m., Thursday.

LIVING PICTURES.

SOCIETY WOMEN IN GILT FRAMES.

NOVEL EXHIBIT WILL BE GIVEN IN CHICAGO.

For Sweet Charity's Sake, Mrs. Potter Palmer and Other Leaders of Upper Tendom Will Be the Living Reproductions of Masterpieces of Famous Painters.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Leading Chicago society women, including Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Harold F. McCormick, Mrs. Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor and many others, will pose in living pictures for the aid of the Home for Destitute Crippled Children.

The exhibit will be a gallery of living reproductions of the masterpieces of Gainsborough, of Hoppner, of Reynolds, of Raeburn, of Boucher and of the paintings of the masters of a century or two ago, whose beautiful women still live in the canvases of the Louvre, of Versailles and of Luxemburg.

In a great gilt frame and with a Gainsborough background, reproduced with faultless accuracy, Mrs. Harold F. McCormick will appear as the famous Mrs. Branfoy. In another frame Mrs. Honore Palmer will take the place of Gainsborough's Duchess of Devonshire in the forest clearing, with the lowering sky over her, trees all around her and the ducal palace looming in the background.

In another frame Mrs. Henry Dibblee will represent the Princess de Lamballe; in another, Mrs. Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor will take the role of the beautiful Recamier.

In all there will be forty masterpieces on the wall of the gallery. They will be shown one at a time, twenty on the first night and twenty on the second night. Others, Mrs. John J. Mitchell, wife of the president of the Illinois Trust Company, will portray Gainsborough's Mrs. Hallum. Mrs. P. A. Valentine will be Marie Antoinette at the age of 16. Others to take part, but who have not yet selected their pictures, are: Mrs. John B. Murphy, Mrs. Leroy Fuller, Miss Alice Runnells, Mrs. Edward A. Leicht, Miss Mabel Dick, Mrs. A. A. Carpenter, Jr., Mrs. Paul Morton of New York, Mrs. Morris Johnston, Mrs. J. Lewis Cochran, Mrs. William C. Pullman, Mrs. Lockwood Honore, Mrs. James Thorne and Mrs. Andrew Sherriff.

THANKSGIVING DAY NAMED.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—President Roosevelt today issued his Thanksgiving proclamation through the Secretary of State, naming the last Thursday in November, the 28th.

TURN FOR THE BETTER.

COPPER MARKET NOW HAS A BRIGHTER LOOK.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Developments in copper during the last few days have been more encouraging than at any time since prices for the metal began their sensational decline, and indications now point strongly to a decided turn for the better.

For months, producers of the metal have given out nothing but information of a discouraging character. Consumers would not buy, and declines in prices were reported almost daily.

The sales that have been made since the first of the month by leading copper selling agencies have not been of a speculative character, so it is said. The representative of a large copper concern says that producers realize that sales of copper to speculators at this time would only serve to make the situation worse, and for this reason all orders are scrutinized very closely.

One metal selling company has sold almost 40,000,000 pounds of copper, mostly to foreign countries, since the first of the month, and it is stated other agencies and producers have disposed of at least 20,000,000 pounds, which make a total of 60,000,000 pounds within three weeks.

The total sales for the month of October aggregate 75,000,000 pounds. Transactions have been at the rate of 900,000,000 pounds a year or 400,000,000 pounds in excess of the present estimated anual rate of production.

MYSTERY DEEPENS.

Police Unable to Trace Theft of Money Packages from Express Company in Milwaukee.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) Oct. 26.—Further investigation into the robbery of the United States Express Company of money packages amounting to $24,000 reveals the fact that bags containing $60,000 remained untouched, although easily accessible to any one who could open the safe.

This seems to be negative to all the theories that the safe was rifled, and makes it more probable that the money was taken while in transit to the depot office. The local police were called upon to assist the company's detectives, and a minute inspection of doors, windows, safe, etc., was made

GOOD GOVERNMENT.

TAYLOR IS WINNING.

Bay City's Mayor Gaining Votes.

Cause of Good Government Promoted by His Silence and Honesty.

Makes Few Speeches, but Labors Faithfully in Interest of His City.

McCarthy Losing Union Labor Support, and Hearst Boost Hurts Ryan.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] After a week of the most strenuous campaigning by all parties, Mayor Taylor and the cause of "good government" have made decided headway in the face of the fiercest opposition. That he will be elected, a week from Tuesday, is my prediction.

The Mayor has made few speeches because he says he cannot afford to neglect the duties of office even to gain votes for two more years in the Mayor's chair.

The Mayor is a small man, of no imposing presence, but the apparent honesty and simplicity of the man have made a profound impression on all who have listened to him.

A stupid fake campaign device was originated by the Examiner, which is trying to make out that Taylor favors the naturalization of Japanese because he told the Japanese Consul that he would see his countrymen were protected in their rights. [illegible]

This appeal to race hatred has fallen as flat as has the Examiner's championship of Ryan.

After waiting for over two weeks without a word editorially on the men running for Mayor, the Examiner came out strongly for Ryan.

This was certainly the surprise of the campaign, as the tone of its local political articles had been in favor of McCarthy.

The Examiner is so thoroughly discredited here that its advocacy hurts instead of helps any public men. Its efforts to boom merely directed attention to the weak points in his armor.

Ryan has made a vigorous campaign, speaking a half dozen times every day. He is a good stump speaker and he has drawn fair crowds, but he seems to make little advance. What he has gained during the week has been at the expnse of McCarthy, who is losing ground every day.

Many union-labor partisans have announced that they will refuse to vote for McCarthy because of his rabid attacks on all the leading citizens who have done most to rebuild San Francisco.

HIS SELF-BOOSTING.

Ryan urges his own election because he is "young, enthusiastic and free from all corporation influences." He continually harps on the age and infirmities of Taylor, although Taylor is only 67 years old, and looks like a man of 55, being in robust health and accustomed to much executive work as practical head of law and medical colleges.

What Ryan does not bring out in his speeches is that behind him are Herrin and the Southern Pacific and the boodlers, as well as the tenderloin push.

There is no question that these people are working hard and putting up coin for Ryan, while at the same time they are doing their utmost to defeat Langdon for District Attorney. They know that the only way to insure the calling off of the graft prosecution is to defeat Langdon and put in McGowan, who will simply go through motions.

"PINHEAD" METHODS.

McCarthy started out his campaign with a big wagon, from which he delivers fiery oratory, and with three-sheet posters on all the billboards giving his life-size picture.

He also began with the grossest abuse of all his opponents. But early this week his advisers evidently warned him that his abuse was making votes for Ryan and Taylor, for he cut out much of his Billingsgate and confined himself to what he calls "arguments" showing "why" he should be elected.

McCarthy has the effrontery to claim that he can restore industrial peace, and he actually accuses Mayor Taylor of failure to suppress the streetcar rioting, when every child here knows that it is the union-labor sympathizers with the car strikers who are causing all the rioting.

McCarthy has lined up some of the minor unions, but the big Builders' Exchange, which he is supposed to control, has practically repudiated him, as more than half the members have gone over to Taylor.

WORKERS "WELCHING."

Many workingmen who have voted the straight union-labor ticket since it was first put in the field, are "welching" now.

What hurts McCarthy more than anything else is the charge that Schmitz framed up the Union Labor ticket, and that he is supplying most of the funds for the campaign.

The vehemence with which the Evening Post, Thomas Garrett's afternoon "newspaper," combats this statement, shows how much it hurts.

There is no question that Schmitz was consulted on all the nominations, and that he picked out McCarthy for Mayor. McCarthy has not had a word to say against Schmitz or his administration, though he has dealt out abuse to every one else.

The gamblers, who are usually pretty wise, are betting 3 to 1 on Taylor.

AERONAUTICS.

ST. LOUIS MADE AIRSHIP CENTER

Balloons May Become as Common as Autos.

Plant for Manufacturing Air Machines Proposed.

Aero Club Plans Western Invitation for Erbsloeh.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] As a result of the successful aëronautic exhibitions, airships in St. Louis may become as common here as automobiles, if the plans of the American airship and balloon corporation of New York to establish a manufacturing plant for air machines in this city are carried out.

J. C. Mars of Chicago, assistant vice-president and superintendent of the new company, is in the city, seeking a location. It is the intention to open a school of aëronautics in St. Louis in conjunction with the manufacturing plant. It is intended to keep at least three dirigible balloons at the school, on which daily experimental flights will be made.

Superintendent Mars said: "We hope to know by Tuesday whether we shall build our plant in St. Louis. The whole country is interested in aërial navigation since the big races here this week."

The company is capitalized at $200,-000. The officers are: Charles J. Strobel, president and general manager; J. A. Willett, first vice-president; A. E. G. Klor, assistant president and general counsel; J. C. Mars, superintendent; W. H. Hodge, treasurer; M. R. Nock, secretary.

Mr. Strobel is the owner of the "Beachey" and "Strobel," the dirigible balloons, which won first and second prize in the contests Wednesday.

WANT ERBSLOEH TO RETURN.

While Oscar Erbsloeh of Germany, winner of the Gordon Bennett cup in the international balloon races from St. Louis last Monday, is resting at the German Club in New York, after his flight of 876 miles, the members of the Aero Club of St. Louis are planning a real western invitation to him to make his second flight in a race for the Lahm cup from St. Louis.

It is believed that Herr Erbsloeh is so impressed with the gas and atmospheric facilities here that he will not refuse an invitation to return, particularly if that invitation is signed by the 400 members of the St. Louis Aero Club, as it will be.

Aëronauts here say that the favorable conditions cannot be secured in Dallas, Tex., from which point he is said to be contemplating making his start in the Lahm cup race.

CUP STIMULATES INTEREST.

The offer of a $1000 prize cup by multi-millionaire brewer, Adolphus Busch, as a contribution toward the proposed balloon races to be held from St. Louis next year, has stimulated interest in the proposal to hold such an event and to make it an annual fall attraction. Owing to the large expenditure which the holding of races here without the aid of the international aëronautic organization would entail, the Business Men's League will consider the question carefully before giving its approval to the plan.

The intended gift of the cup has been announced by August A. Busch and E. A. Faust. Like the Bennett cup, it is intended to be held for a year by the winner and to become the property of any aëronaut winning it three times.

FLINT AIDS AERONAUTICS.

California Senator Will Take Up the Study, and Congress May Be Asked for War Balloons.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] There is strong probability that the War Department will ask Congress to make a special appropriation for the purchase, or construction, of several war balloons, and experimental work on aëroplanes, or some form of heavier air machine.

There has been much regret expressed in various quarters since Prof. Langley's death that his experiments with his aëroplane were so lightly received by the public. The value of his work is beginning to be realized, and now that England, France and Germany are making elaborate experiments with dirigible balloons the United States army is taking more interest in this subject.

Senator Flint has been in consultation with the War Department on the subject, and is going deeply into a study of aëronautics. He says he favors army experiments in that line, and he bids fair to develop considerable enthusiasm on the subject.

If necessary, he might even introduce a bill, but any appropriation asked for by Secretary Taft for ballooning would probably be acted upon by a committee.

CHARGED WITH GRAFTING.

INDIANAPOLIS (Ind.) Oct. 26.—The Marion county grand jury today returned indictments against Henry Marshall of Lafayette, president of the Western Construction Company, and former Speaker of the Indiana House of Representatives. George W. Baxter, cashier of the company, was indicted also.

The company has contracts with the city of Indianapolis for repairing asphalt on asphalt streets.

Harry Brunaugh, agent of the company, charged with padding the inspector's reports, was brought back from Detroit today, whither he had fled.

Here are the actual figures of the foremost newspapers for last month, showing a lead of more than 600 columns for The Times over its nearest rival. The figures are absolutely correct, being furnished in nearly every case by the papers themselves.

SUFFRAGISTS ARE ACTIVE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Congress is to be bombarded by woman suffragists, if plans set on foot today at the thirty-eighth annual convention of the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association are carried out. Similar conventions are to be held in various States, and it is proposed that each State send representatives to Washington this winter to lobby in the interests of woman's rights.

WANTS HER MONEY BACK.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The stock market is not a fit place for Chicago widows, according to Mrs. Ysobel Bullen, No. 6621 Kimbark avenue. She intimated today that she gained this opinion at a cost of $15,000, when she filed a suit against the commission firm of J. H. Purdy & Co. for that amount. The defendants claim it is simply a case of the market going wrong.

Phelps, has started suit in the courts of Hancock county to recover the amount. By reason of their methods, the plaintiff, who is declared to have been interested in oil properties, alleges that she has been wrongfully deprived of $50,000.

Pretty College "Co-ed" Confesses to Using Mails to Defraud, but Judge Postpones Case.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Marion Grey of Elgin, Ill., young and beautiful "affinity agent" and "silent partner of Cupid," today pleaded guilty in Judge Bethea's branch of the United States Circuit Court to a charge of using the mails to defraud.

Incidentally, the twenty-year-old University-of-Michigan "co-ed" told for the first time how she started the now famous "searchlight" matrimonial agency.

While at college at Ann Arbor, she said, many of the "co-eds" answered matrimonial agency advertisements in a spirit of fun, and when her funds ran short she started an agency herself to secure funds to complete her education.

Judge Bethea said he desired to see what the girl's deportment would prove to be in the future, and con-

Mississippi Governor Says President Roosevelt Will Run Again, but That Bryan Will Win.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Gov. James K. Vardaman, Mississippi's picturesque Executive, took the role of a prophet in Chicago today.

"President Roosevelt will be renominated," he said, "and he will be beaten. Bryan will be nominated by the Democrats, and he will be elected. All that now makes Roosevelt popular he has stolen from Bryan, and if he runs on a platform of his policies he will be running on Bryan's platform.

"The putting forth of Taft as the administration candidate is only political play.

"All this talk about Roosevelt's popularity in the South, as shown by the enthusiasm on his recent visit, is nonsense. Those outbursts were only the expression of hospitality of the South and of genuine American feeling that animates the southerners."

tinued the case until next term of court.

ADAMS CASE FIRST.

Trial of Pettibone Postponed Owing to Engagement of Clarence Darrow.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

BOISE (Idaho) Oct. 26.—Attorneys for the State and defense in the case of George Pettibone, charged with complicity in the murder of ex-Gov. Steunenberg today signed a stipulation that the trial, which was set for next Monday, shall be continued until November 18.

The reason for the continuance asserted in the stipulation is the fact that Clarence Darrow, chief counsel for Pettibone, is engaged in defending Steve Adams, on trial at Rathdrum for the murder of Fred Tyler.

It is also agreed that if the Adams trial is not concluded by the date named there shall be further continuance.

INSURANCE FIRMS WIN.

VERDICT IN LAWSUIT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 26.—After a hearing lasting eight days, a jury in Judge Hebbard's court yesterday returned a verdict in favor of the defendants in the suit brought by Herbert E. Law and Dr. Hartland Law against the Northern Assurance Company of London. The Laws sued the company for $25,000 on a policy on the Fairmont Hotel, which expired at noon, April 18, 1906. At 9 o'clock on April 19 the Fairmont was burned. The jury decided that an assurance covering note does not stand in the same light as the policy itself, and must be renewed to make it binding on the company to pay when fire results.

ROBBER SUSPECT CAUGHT.

Two Men Arrested With Bags Containing $14,395 May Be Great Northern Bandits.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SPOKANE, Oct. 26.—The police are positive that C. McDonald and Ed Smith, the two men arrested on the Great Northern train last night, are the men who held up and robbed the Great Northern Overland Limited at Rondo, Mont., on the morning of September 12. Currency to the amount of $14,395 was found on the men. All this was wrapped up in packages of $500 each. Many of the wrappings were not broken, and they bore the initials of the tellers of the National Bank of Chicago.

The dates of the wrappers were September 5, 6 and 7, just preceding the day the $40,000 was shipped by the National Bank of Chicago to the Old National Bank of Spokane.

The two men maintain they are miners, and further than that will not talk.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 26.—In a cave-in which occurred in the new five-mile tunnel of the Western Pacific in Miles Cañon, in Alameda county, yesterday, two men were killed by suffocation, and several others were rendered unconscious by the noxious underground gases. The dead men are Peter Colozzi, an Italian, 50 years old, and Nick Neanravlogh, a Scandinavian, aged 40.

United States Sues Espee.

RENO, Oct. 26.—The United States began suit yesterday in the Federal Court at Carson to set aside Federal patents to 15,000 acres of land held by the Southern Pacific Company in the White Horse mining district, on the ground that the land was fraudulently represented by the railroad company to be agricultural, when it was "notoriously mineral."

Hurt by Runaway Car.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 26.—Nearly a score of persons sustained cuts or bruises this morning by jumping from a Glen Park electric car, which got beyond control and ran backward down the hill at Chenery avenue and Randall street, until it jumped the track and was wrecked by coming in contact with a guide pole on the corner. The only person badly hurt was Manuel Silva, who was taken to the Emergency Hospital. His injuries, though painful, will not prove fatal.

Every Possible Skin Eruption Cured In Marvelously Quick Time by the New Calcium Treatment.

Send For Free Sample Package Today.

Boils have been cured in 3 days, and some of the worst cases of skin diseases have been cured in a week, by the wonderful action of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. These wafers contain as their main ingredient, the most thorough, quick and effective blood-cleanser known, calcium sulphide.

Most treatments for the blood and for skin eruptions are miserably slow in their results, and besides, many of them are poisonous. Stuart's Calcium Wafers contain no poison or drug of any kind; they are absolutely harmless, and yet do work which cannot fail to surprise you. They are the most powerful blood purifier and skin clearer ever discovered, and they never derange the system.

No matter what you suffer from, pimples, blackheads, acne, red rash, spots, blotches, rash, tetter or any other skin eruption, you can get rid of them long before other treatments can even begin to show results.

Don't go around with a humiliating, disgusting mass of pimples and blackheads on your face. A face covered over with these disgusting things makes people turn away from you, and breeds failure in your life work. Stop it. Read what an Iowa man said when woke up one morning and found he had a new face:

"By George, I never saw anything like it. There I've been for three years trying to get rid of pimples and blackheads, and guess I used everything under the sun. I used your Calcium Wafers for just seven days. This morning every blessed pimple is gone and I can't find a blackhead. I could write you a volume of thanks, I am so grateful to you."

You can depend upon this treatment being a never-failing cure.

Just send us your name and address in full, today, and we will send you a trial package of Stuart's Calcium Wafers, free to test. After you have tried the sample and been convinced that all we say is true, you will go to your nearest druggist and get a 50c box and be cured of your facial trouble. They are in tablet form, and no trouble whatever to take. You go about your work as usual, and there you are—cured and happy.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

"RAID ON PROSPERITY."

DAY ATTACKS PRESIDENT.

Syracuse Educator Again Defends Trusts.

Denounces Chief Executive as a Demagogue.

Wants Him to Call Off His Investigators.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Daring and sensational in the extreme is the attack upon President Roosevelt which James H. Day, chancellor of Syracuse University, makes in a book, "The Raid on Prosperity," which D. Appleton & Co. are about to publish.

The famous educator holds up the President as the archenemy of his country, as a ruthless autocrat, defying the Constitution, a law unto himself, a frenzied demagogue, revelling in the plaudits of a brainless multitude.

The remedy he offers for the present panic is: That the President stop exposing rottenness in finance and let the country settle down and forget the lawlessness of predatory wealth—in short, that he call off his investigating commission and make no more speeches.

It is an amazing book to come out of a great institution of learning, hurled like a bomb at the President of the United States, but it is well to remember that Syracuse University has much to thank certain members of Standard Oil Company for, and this is not Chancellor Day's first essay in defense of trusts and trust methods. In his preface the chancellor says:

"My convictions have not come to me out of the exigencies of a college presidency or by the contaminating influence of millionaires."

The occasion for his speaking, he says, is due to "certain incidents in the administration of the government which I believe unwarranted by our Constitution and in their tendency destructive to our liberties and the progress of commerce. Carried to their conclusions—and these are not far away—they must result in an oligarchy. A lawmaking court—controlling executive department, government by commissions, a personal construction of the Constitution, is not a republic."

It would be a good thing, Dr. Day thinks, to limit the Presidential term to one year, and to bar out demagogues and men with a "policy" to exploit.

PRESIDENT'S BIRTHDAY.

Chief Executive Is Forty-nine Years Old Today, and Will Have Quiet Rejoicing.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—President Roosevelt will be 49 years old tomorrow. Besides a quiet family rejoicing, he will receive congratulations from members of the Hungarian Club of New York, thus continuing a custom instituted by that club several years ago in presenting themselves to the President of the United States on the anniversary of his birth.

AUTO AS A HEARSE.

Motor "Dead-Wagon," First of Kind, Goes Too Fast and Driver Is Arrested.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The motor vehicle has invaded almost every transportation plan, but it remained for an enterprising undertaker to adopt it for funeral purposes.

It had to come, and it arrived on Broadway today and created much interest among automobile dealers.

It remained for an Italian director of funerals to introduce the automobile hearse to New York.

CLOVER LEAF-ALTON MERGER.

Latter's Superintendent of Telegraph Takes the Same Position With Former.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The first official appointment indicating that the Clover Leaf will predominate in the merger of that road, the Alton and the Iowa Central has just been announced by T. P. Shonts, president of the St. Louis and Western Railroad.

The circular signed by him merely states that W. A. Freese has been appointed superintendent of telegraph of the Clover Leaf with headquarters at Bloomington.

The significance of the appointment lies in the fact that Mr. Freese is now superintendent of telegraph of the Alton road with his headquarters at Bloomington, which is one of the most important terminal points on the Alton but is not on the line of the Clover Leaf. In fact, the only place where the Alton and Clover Leaf roads connect is St. Louis.

How soon the jurisdiction of other officials of the Clover Leaf will be extended over the Alton is a question causing much conjecture in railway circles.

THOUSANDS LOSE WORK.

Oct. 26.—The New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company announced that over two thousand hands on the steam system will be laid off, besides several hundred more in the Rhode Island trolley service. "ROUND TABLE."

EDITOR HARDEN MAKES IMPASSIONED SPEECH.

Man Responsible for Exposing Rottenness in German Court Circles Is Cheered, While Gen. Von Moltke Is Greeted With Groans.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Pale with excitement, Editor Harden, whose trial on the charge of libeling Gen. Count Bruno von Moltke has laid bare the vicious doing of the court clique, familiarly known as the "round table," addressed the court today at the close of argument of counsel, after which the judge announced that he would make his findings known next Tuesday.

Though the officials of the court endeavored to suppress the applause during the editor's speech in his own defense, the outbursts proved uncontrollable. On leaving the courtroom a huge crowd on the street gave him an ovation.

The Socialists are jubilant over the exposure of rottenness in high places. They declare it will have the tendency to produce a state of mind in the public similar to that which started the trouble in Russia, and will eventually mean the downfall of aristocracy as a force in the nation.

Herr Harden's speech was a masterpiece of eloquence. He spoke with dramatic vigor, his face livid. Amid the applause which greeted Herr Harden as he left the courthouse could be heard cheers for the Crown Prince.

The trial has created a tremendous sensation in Berlin society. It has been the almost exclusive topic of conversation for weeks at dinners in the highest circles, especially among the military and government officials. Public opinion seems to be running strongly against Gen. von Moltke, and as he left the courthouse through the side door under police protection he was greeted with groans and catcalls.

Von Moltke also made a speech, before the ending of the case, in his own behalf. He asserted his complete innocence of the charges hinted at in Harden's articles. His speech made a strong impression on his auditors.

TAFT BRUISED IN TRAIN WRECK.

SECRETARY HAS BAD EXPERIENCE IN COLLISION.

Coach in Which He Is Riding in Philippines Runs on Top of Flat Car—He Is Rolled Over Many Times—Receives Bruises and Shock. Now at Baguio.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MANILA, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Secretary Taft had another escape from death today while inspecting the partially-completed extension of the Manila-Dagupan Railroad.

After the Secretary had traveled twenty-five miles on the first passenger train run over the line, and was approaching the terminus, a flat car in front of the coach in which he was riding suddenly left the rails.

Mr. Taft's car plunged forward with a tremendous jolt and hit the end of the flat car, which still projected over the track. Then, impelled by the impact of the following cars, it stood up on end and fell completely on top of the flat car.

If it had not been so perilous, the position of the Secretary of War would have been ludicrous.

With the rest of his party he was thrown on his back in the crash, and rolled over and over from one end of the car to the other, when the coach reared itself up.

As the coach came to a standstill on top of the flat car, the whole party found itself suspended in the air, and looked helplessly down upon their would-be rescuers through windows in which every vestige of glass had been smashed.

For more than an hour they occupied this position until the slow-moving Filipino railway employés had found a ladder upon which it was safe for the American official to trust his robust person.

Secretary Taft and his whole party received bruises, and are suffering from nervous shock.

Secretary Taft arrived at Baguio tonight, after making a distance of thirty miles in an automobile over the famous Benguit road. The natives turned out to welcome him, and scores of bamboo arches erected along the line of march served as ornaments under which bands provided music.

Early tomorrow golf and riding will be indulged in, and Secretary Taft and party will be entertained at luncheon by the Provisional Governor, Pack. At night there will be a reception given by the officers of the army to Secretary Taft at the John Hay Post.

A typhoon is impending, which, reports say, will be the most serious for the year, and this threatens to keep Mr. Taft storm-bound here for three or four days.

French Ensign, Charged With Being a Spy, Reveals Plot When Arraigned in Paris.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PARIS, Oct. 26.—Ensign Charles B. Ulmo of the navy, who was arrested at Toulon, October 24, on the charge of being a spy, and who confessed to having abstracted a secret naval signal book and the naval cipher code, and Berton, the army officer who was arrested yesterday at the Vendome, charged with negotiating with a foreign power for the sale of military secrets, were brought to Paris today and arraigned.

Ulmo confessed everything, declaring his object was to raise money. Berton denied the charge of treason, but the correspondence seized when he was arrested seemed to prove that he arranged to deliver certain military documents to an agent of a foreign power. The latter is not named, but is understood to be Germany.

COLLISION IN FOG.

Metropolitan Underground Kills First Passengers Out of Three Billion Persons Carried.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LONDON, Oct. 26.—Three persons were killed and a dozen others were injured this morning in a rear-end collision at the West Hempstead station of the Metropolitan underground railroad.

The rear train ran past the signals in a fog and crashed into a train standing at the station.

This is the first accident of the kind since the London lines were electrified and when a system of electric signaling was installed which, it was claimed, would absolutely preclude the possibility of such a catastrophe.

It is also said to be the first accident resulting in the death of a passenger, although three billion people have been carried since the opening of the road.

LIFE OF KING EDWARD OR PRINCE OF WALES IN DANGER.

London Police Arrest Man Found Wandering in Park Where British Ruler Was Hunting and Which Heir to Throne Will Visit This Week.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEWMARKET (England) Oct. 26.—The police here today arrested a man suspected of having designs on the life of King Edward, or the Prince of Wales.

The prisoner, J. H. Pearse, who was a member of the Bechuanaland, South African, police, was found wandering in Chippenham Park, where the King had been shooting this week, and in which the Prince is going to shoot on Monday.

Pearse, when taken into custody, said he intended to shoot the boss, who was shooting here. After a preliminary examination in the Police Court, he was remanded for further inquiry regarding his past life.

It appears that he participated in the Jamieson raid, and is laboring under the impression that he has a grievance against King Edward. His Majesty left Newmarket early yesterday, and returned to London.

TEST CASE IS ON.

Liability of Insurance Companies for Losses by Fire in Kingston Will Be Determined.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

KINGSTON (Jamaica) Oct. 26.—The first test to demonstrate the liability of insurance companies for losses sustained during the conflagration which followed the earthquake of January 24 last, in which the companies repudiate all liabilities under the earthquake clause of the policies, will begin Monday.

The amount of the claim, which is against the Scottish Union, is $4000, and by agreement between the parties, the only question which will be submitted to the jury is whether the fire and earthquake "had their origin in hazard."

STRIKE DANGEROUSLY NEAR.

Hope Not Abandoned of Compromise Between British Railways and Employees.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Though the controversy between the British railway managers and the employés, acting through the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, has reached a stage at which a record-breaking strike is dangerously probable, hope of a compromise has not been abandoned.

David Lloyd George, president of the Board of Trade, has wide powers of adjustment under the law.

It is believed that before permitting a general strike, which would tie up all British railways, he will use his prerogative to the full.

COLOR PHOTOGRAPHEY A FACT.

Magazine Devoted to Interests of Women of France Makes Successful Experiment.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] French scientists, notably M. Lippman of the Academy of Science, aided by the experiments of practical photographers, have been endeavoring for some years to make color photography simple enough for ordinary use.

Femina, a magazine devoted to the interests of the women of France, has succeeded for the first time in photographing in colors a living model. With characteristic good taste, it selected for that purpose the beautiful Mlle. Robinne, of the Comedia Française.

The photograph has all the appearance of an excellent painting.

Two Female Aeronauts Make Ascension Alone in Midst of Gale and Land Safely.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Two intrepid women balloonists, Mme. Garton (French) and Mme. Silberer (Austrian,) both well-known aëronauts, made an ascension the other day in the midst of a tempest.

After battling with the gale for a long time they descended with great sang-froid and landed safely and skillfully.

FOREIGN BRIEFS.

Chilean City Has Crisis.

SANTIAGO (Chile) Oct. 26.—There is a tremendous financial and commercial crisis in progress here. The gold premium is 70 per cent., a rate hitherto unknown here.

Lituania Is Floated.

MALMO (Sweden) Oct. 26.—The Russian steamer Lituania, from Libau for Copenhagen and New York, which went ashore off Skillings in a thick fog, October 22, was floated today.

CALM FOLLOWS STORM.

which made importations of gold possible at a profit, was not modified today. It resulted in the announcement by the National City Bank of the engagement of $5,000,000 of European, continent and South American, and rumors of other engagements of the yellow metal. The large credits created in favor of the United States by the movement of crops and to some extent of securities, which have been taken over at the present bargain prices, will enable this country to import gold in considerable amounts without resorting to the sale of the finance bills.

The disposition of European banks to curtail the acceptance of American finance bills during the last few months, is having at least one good effect—that there are but small obligations of that kind to be covered at this time, and hence the credits established by the movement of crops can only be met by the shipment of gold to this country.

If the Bank of England decides to realize the discount rate at the regular board meeting next Tuesday, or earlier, this may check, to some degree, the movement of gold toward New York, but as the English bank reserves are now large, there are indications that the Bank of England will not interpose serious obstacles to the relief of the American market.

CORTELYOU'S STATEMENT.

Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou caused the following statement to be given out tonight:

"On the occasion of a call on him this morning by representatives of the New York clearinghouse, Secretary Cortelyou asked that they convey to the clearinghouse his deep appreciation, on behalf of the government, of the courageous and high-minded manner in which they had upheld the interests, not only of the city, but in a sense of the people of the whole country.

"Later, Secretary Cortelyou called on J. P. Morgan and expressed, in similar terms, his appreciation of the services rendered by Mr. Morgan and all who had coöperated with him in meeting the emergency."

The sub-committee of the directors of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, who are hoping to bring about a resumption of business of the company, met in executive session today. After the meeting, Mr. Davies, counsel for the company, said:

"The committee met, and, after a discussion, decided on a plan of reorganization, with the end in view of resuming business."

TRUST COMPANY RUNS PROMPTLY CHECKED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] With the official announcement this morning that the Clearinghouse Association has authorized the issuance of certificates to tide the New York banks over the present financial crisis, and with only one failure reported today, a calm followed the exciting events of the last ten days in financial circles. All now look forward with anxiety, moderated by hopefulness, as to what Monday will bring forth.

The stock market held a short session today, at which trading was feverish, but stocks closed a trifle higher. The total sales for the two hours' trading were 253,340 shares, about what they were yesterday for the same length of time. Another cheering bit of news to the nerve-racked bankers was the announcement of the City National Bank that it had engaged $3,500,000 gold on the European continent and in South America. This engagement did not include the $5,000,000 South African gold expected to arrive in New York Monday, which, it is believed, will be open to engagement.

Runs on New York banks abated somewhat today. The number of depositors who withdrew money from the Trust Company of America and the Lincoln Trust Company was much smaller than on previous days.

Officials of the Trust Company of America announced today that it had received deposits of $500,000 during the morning. At the savings banks all was serene, owing to the decision of the presidents of these institutions to require thirty to sixty days' notice of withdrawals of deposits. While this ties up $1,000,000,000, it is believed that it will prevent runs developing among the smaller stockholders and depositors and spreading to the larger ones.

Reports from Providence, R. I., says that the invoking of the ninety-day rule as provided by the laws of Rhode Island, has put an end to runs on Providence banks and trust companies.

GOLDFIELD BANKS TO REOPEN TOMORROW.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Oct. 26.—The positive statement is made by the officials of both the John S. Cook & Co. Bank and the Nye & Ormsby Bank that they will reopen for business at the expiration of the bank holiday, declared by Gov. Sparks, which expires Monday morning.

Both institutions, it is claimed, have ample funds on hand to meet all demands and the officials have no fear of a run.

Another special train bringing a large consignment of gold coin for the Cook bank arrived in Goldfield last night, and more is expected tonight and tomorrow. The bank will have fully $1,000,000 on hand when it opens its doors again Monday.

The Nye and Ormsby bank has also been replenishing its reserves. The local depositors of the State Bank, in mass meeting, voted unanimously against applying for a receiver for the bank, as they have every confidence in its ability to pay all claims if given a little time.

CLOSED BANKS NOW SEEK REHABILITATION.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—Williams, State Superintendent of Banking, in speaking about the bank situation today, said: "Information received at the banking department today indicates that the improvement in the financial condition is continuing.

"The general appreciation of this is well illustrated by the fact that the directors of various banking corporations, who during the past few days announced their suspension, have reported today to the banking department that they desire, if they lawfully may, to undertake the rehabilitation of their respective institutions."

MORGAN HAS WORD FOR THOUGHTLESS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—In response to a request of the Associated Press as to his view of the present situation, J. P. Morgan said today:

"As I have already said, I cannot too strongly emphasize the importance of people realizing that the greatest injury that can be done in the present situation is the thoughtless withdrawal of funds from banks and trust companies, and then hoarding the cash in safe-deposit vaults, or elsewhere, thus withdrawing the supply of capital always needed in such emergencies as that which has been confronted during the past week."

James Stillman, president of the National City Bank, who, next to Mr. Morgan, has done more to bring out a solution of the financial difficulties in New York than any other man, said:

"The wise and heroic action of the Secretary of the Treasury and the splendid efforts of Mr. Morgan, with the assistance of the clearinghouse, have demonstrated the sound financial condition of the clearinghouse of this city. Now, however, in order to facilitate the shipments of cotton, grain, tobacco and other products, and to facilitate the imports of gold, the associated banks have wisely decided to combine their credit by the issuance of clearinghouse certificates and thus prevent the paralyzing of a very large part of the business of the country.

MORSE MAKES SOME RADICAL CHANGES.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—The recent report that Charles W. Morse was planning radical changes in the management of the constituent companies comprising the Consolidated Steamship lines was confirmed today, when the presidents of the different companies met in this city and made various changes in their management.

The effect of these changes was the practical restriction of active management of several of the subsidiary companies to their former owners and managers.

The Consolidated bonds were higher on the curb today, 50,000 shares being sold at prices ranging from 10¼ to 12⅝, compared with a low price of 9⅞ on the preceding day.

When Mr. Morse acquired the Ward and other lines for his combine, it was said he guaranteed the bonds taken in part payment at a certain figure. The difference between that figure and the present market price is probably considerable, thus giving opportunity to regain control of all lines except those actually bought into the combination of Mr. Morse and his close associates.

A change in the controlling officers was the principal thing effected today, as the personnel of subordinates did not change much when Mr. Morse formed the combine.

According to one report tonight, all the stock of subsidiary steamship lines has been placed in a voting trust, which is to continue for three years, the members of which are the original owners of the lines. They are H. P. Booth, Harry H. Raymond, Henry R. Mallory, E. J. Berwind and F. D. Monney.

DIME SAVINGS BANK ENFORCES LEGAL RULE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Union Dime Savings Institution of Brooklyn was the first savings bank to enforce the sixty days' rule from the opening of the doors yesterday. This led to a report that the bank was insolvent, but the depositors soon were assured that their money was safe.

President Sprague said that at no time had the line of depositors extended beyond the doors of the bank, many, after learning of the time limit, leaving without withdrawing the $50 to which each depositor was entitled.

"All I've got to say," said Sprague, "is that the bank is in a perfectly healthy and sound condition, and I believe almost all our customers realize that and believe in the step which I have taken in demanding legal notice for the withdrawal of deposits. One man who came to withdraw $3000 spoke to me personally and said he approved of the notice rule. He refused to take $50, which every one with an account in the bank is permitted to withdraw."

ST. LOUIS INTERESTS TO BE PROTECTED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The St. Louis Clearinghouse tonight decided by an unanimous vote to issue clearinghouse certificates in order to protect St. Louis interests against the existing stringency in the East.

This city has not been affected by conditions prevailing for several days and it is not believed that it will be effected.

The Mercantile, the St. Louis Union, the Mississippi Valley and the commonwealth Trust companies, all members of the clearinghouse, concluded to required from depositors thirty and sixty days' notice of the withdrawal of saving deposits.

The action of the clearinghouse has two aims in view. The first is to take precautions against the concentration of demands of outside cities and territories on St. Louis. The second is to assure the public in St. Louis and its environs that the local institutions are strong and united for safeguarding the interests of business institutions and depositors.

CARNEGIE RETURNS IN OPTIMISTIC MOOD.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Upon his return from Europe today after a long vacation abroad, Andrew Carnegie expressed himself in a most optimistic way concerning the financial situation.

"I was delighted to read the good news this morning," he said. "I am surprised that the fall in stocks has been so small. This proves that the situation is not alarming and that the country is all right. Investors have only to hold on. The financial authorities have acted boldly, but wisely, and the flurry will blow over soon.

"It lies in the nature of things that the attempt to attribute the recent and spasmodic fall in prices to the wise, and in the truest sense, the conservative, resolve of the President and his Cabinet to enforce the salutary laws against the abuse of their powers by certain trusts as only a device to serve political intrigue."

AMERICA'S POSITION IS NOT IMPERILED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Europe has followed with profound interest, but without alarm as to the outcome, the sensational happenings in American financial affairs since the collapse of the attempt to "corner" the stock of the United Copper Company.

At all the great monetary centers a relief that the foundations of the American credit system are unshaken accompanies a disposition to congratulate the conservative banking element in the United States upon having cut out a fungoid growth.

The theory that the commercial position of the United States is imperiled will be entertained by no European, says an eminent economist, who has personal knowledge of the country and the spirit of its people.

CHICAGO ASSOCIATION TO ISSUE CERTIFICATES.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—The Chicago Clearinghouse Association tonight announced through a committee that it has decided to issue clearinghouse certificates.

It was also resolved that the savings banks should require from their depositors the notices provided for in connection with accounts.

AERO CLUB MEETS NEXT IN NEW YORK.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—President Willis I. Moore, of the International Aëronautic Congress, today issued this announcement:

"The General and Executive Committees of the Aëronautic Congress have decided to hold the next meeting at the Aero Club in New York, November 28, instead of Jamestown."

Chief Draughtsman Welsh of the Signal Corps of the army, who was designated to make the official measurements of distances covered in the balloon race at St. Louis, has decided to accept the figures made by the United States Geological Survey, and these will be made official records by the Aero Club of America in governing the award of prizes. These figures made the Pommern the winner by six miles.

CREDITORS ENJOINED FROM TAKING ASSETS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 26.—United States Circuit Court Judge Morrow this morning granted an injunction at the request of the Westinghouse Electric Company and the Atha Steel Manufacturing Company of New Jersey, enjoining the creditors of the Westinghouse Electric Company of Pennsylvania from attaching its assets in this State, valued at $500,000.

ATTACHMENT PLACED ON PROVIDENCE CHECK.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—The Corn Exchange Bank of this city today caused an attachment to be placed on a check for $17,217 made by the Union Trust Company of Providence on October 24.

It was drawn on the City National Bank of this city, and payment was refused on the ground that a receiver had been appointed for the trust company by the Rhode Island courts.

RUSSIANS FAVOR WESTINGHOUSE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 26.—Owing to the embarrassment of two of the American Westinghouse companies and the cessation of financial support from them, the municipality of St. Petersburg has assured the Russian Westinghouse company that payments on its electric street railway contract will be hastened so as to prevent a stoppage of the work.

Charcoal Kills Bad Breath

Bad Odor of Indigestion, Smoking Drinking or Eating, Can Be Instantly Stopped.

Sample Package Mailed Free.

Other people notice your bad breath where you would not notice it at all. It is nauseating to other people to stand before them and while you are talking, give them a whiff or two of your bad breath. It usually comes from food fermenting on your stomach. Sometimes you have it in the morning—that awful sour, bilious bad breath. You can stop that at once by swallowing one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful gas and odor absorbers ever prepared.

Sometimes your meals will reveal themselves in your breath to those who talk with you. "You've had onions," or "You've been eating cabbage," and all of a sudden you belch in the face of your friend. Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of odors, as every one knows. That is why Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are so quick to stop all gases and odors of odorous foods, or gas from indigestion.

Don't use breath perfumes. They never conceal the odor, and never absorb the gas that causes the odor. Besides, the very fact of using them reveals the reason for their use. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in the first place stop for good all sour brash and belching of gas, and make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, just after you've eaten. Then no one will turn his face away from you when you breathe or talk; your breath will be pure and fresh, and besides your food will taste so much better to you at your next meal. Just try it.

Charcoal does other wonderful things, too. It carries away from your stomach and intestines, all the impurities there massed together and which causes the bad breath. Charcoal is a purifier as well as an absorber.

Charcoal is now by far the best, most easy and mild laxative known. A whole boxful will do no harm; in fact, the more you take the better. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal and mixed with just a faint flavor of honey to make them palatable for you, but not too sweet. You just chew them like candy. They are absolutely harmless.

Get a new, pure, sweet breath, freshen your stomach for your next meal and keep the intestines in good working order. These two things are the secret of good health and long life. You can get all the charcoal necessary to do these wonderful but simple things by getting Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. We want you to test these little wonder workers yourself before you buy them. So send us your full name and address for a free sample of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. Then after you have tried the sample and been convinced, go to your druggist and get a 25c box of them. You'll feel better all over, more comfortable, and "cleaner inside."

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

OCTOBER THE BEAUTIFUL

IN spite of the chilly evenings and cold nights of October, this month is the most healthful month of the whole season.

There is one liability, however, which constantly hangs over the month of October—the liability to catch cold at night.

CLOTHING TOO THIN

People have been accustomed to warm nights during the summer. They go out for the evening without proper clothing. Before their return they find themselves chilled to the bone.

Sometimes people go to sleep without proper covering, only to waken in the morning and find they have caught cold.

PE-RU-NA tablets can now be obtained by those who prefer solid medicines,

UTE INDIANS THREATEN TO CAUSE TROUBLE.

Agent on Cheyenne River Reservation Reports That Redskins Must Be Disarmed and Urges Immediate Dispatch of Detail of Troops for That Purpose.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—Capt. Carter P. Johnson, Second Cavalry, stationed at Fort Robinson, Neb., has started for the Cheyenne River reservation in South Dakota, to use his influence with the troublesome Utes, with a view to suppressing the outbreak.

A telegram from Assistant Clerk Craig, in charge of the Cheyenne River reservation, says that Clerk Rastall has gone to the scene of trouble with twenty-five armed men, and that fears are entertained that communication had been cut off between the telegraph terminal at Whitehorse and Thunder Butte, where the Indians are located.

A telegram from Agent Downs says the Utes are quiet, but threaten to fight if compelled to observe the government regulations. He says the Indians must be disarmed at once and urges that a detail of troops be dispatched immediately for that purpose.

SCALPING RUMOR REPEATED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ST. PAUL (Minn.) Oct. 26.—A special to the Pioneer Press from Sturgis, S. D., says that Sergeant Baker, in charge of the distribution of rations to the Ute Indians, on the Cheyenne River reservation, has been killed.

There is also a rumor, though not credited, that the Indians have begun scalping.

Fort Meade is located near Sturgis, and the troops there are awaiting orders to move.

OFF FOR THE FRONT.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

OMAHA (Neb.) Oct. 26.—As soon as the arrangements with the Northwestern railroad can be made, which will be before 12 o'clock tonight, one squadron of the Second Cavalry, including ten officers, 200 men and 250 horses, from Fort Des Moines, will be on their way to the scene of the Indian troubles in South Dakota.

Orders for the movement were sent from army headquarters, of the Department of the Missouri in Omaha last night. The squadron will be under the command of Maj. Sibley, and will be at the scene of the trouble about 12 o'clock Saturday night.

No official advices have been received at the army headquarters in this city of a continuance of the Indian disturbances.

CASHIER INDICTED.

Two Indictments, One Containing Ninety Counts, Returned by Grand Jury.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 26.—Two indictments were returned by the grand jury against B. F. Rinehart, former cashier of the Farmers' and Drovers' National Bank at Waynesburg, Pa.

One indictment contains ninety counts, seventy-one of which are upon alleged false entries in the books of the bank and in the reports to the Comptroller of the Currency. Fifteen counts charge abstractions amounting to $110,146.25, and four allege misapplications amounting to $50,467.12. The other indictment contains nineteen counts, eight of which are for alleged false entries, and eleven for alleged abstractions amounting to $74,609.96.

The failure of the Farmers' and Drovers' Bank involved almost $2,000,000. For eight months efforts have been made to reopen the institution, but without success.

FOOD POISONS.

90 Per Cent. of All Diseases the Result of Undigested Putrefying Foods.

Men of affairs, women of society and children with active brains are too often sedentary in their habits, giving little time to exercise. To this evil is added that of high and irregular living—as a result, the stomach cannot stand the demands made upon it. The abused and overtaxed stomach does not properly do the work of digestion, food taken in ferments and the poison permeates the whole system. The body loses in weight and becomes a prey for the attack of whatever disease it may encounter.

Did it ever occur to you how busy that stomach of yours is? It only holds three pints, but in one year you force it to take in 2400 pounds of material, digest it and prepare it for assimilation into the blood. No wonder it rebels when overworked. We crowd it with steaks and pastry, irritate its juices with spices and acids, and expect the stomach to do its work. It can't do it.

All over the inner layer of the stomach are glands which secrete the juices necessary to digestion. The entrance of food into the stomach is the signal for these glands to do their work. The more the food, and the more indigestible, the greater the demand upon them, and upon the muscles of the wall adjoining.

Think of the tons of high-seasoned game, sweetmeats and appetizers crammed into this little four-ounce mill, and then wonder, if you will, why you are dizzy or nauseated or constipated. Don't blame your stomach or curse your fate that you should be born so unfortunate. Blame yourself and apply the remedy.

First, get a small package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, taking one after each meal and at bed time. They are not a medicine, but a digestive. Your stomach is worn out and needs help, not medicine. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will do the work that the stomach fails to do. There's enough power in one grain of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to digest 3000 grains of ordinary food, so you needn't fear that anything you eat will remain in your stomach undigested.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will rout the poison because they remove the cause—food fermentation. They are nature's own cure for dyspepsia. The host of troubles dyspepsia is father of cannot be numbered, for a healthy stomach is the source of all health.

Seize your opportunity before worse conditions confront you. Send today for a free trial package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. They will bring your stomach relief. F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

HERMIT LEAVES FORTUNE.

Laughter in Los Angeles, and Others, Get Nothing Because of Estrangement.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TRINIDAD (Colo.) Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Repulsed in the effort to effect a reconciliation with members of his family, Dr. J. F. Hall, 72 years old, a hermit druggist of Trinidad, died suddenly Friday afternoon, leaving an estate of $500,000 to his favorite niece, Nina Hall of Sangersville, Me., and to charitable institutions.

His daughter, Miss Kate Hall, a writer of Los Angeles, a married daughter and a brother, James, of Boston, were cut off without a cent.

Hall's property consisted of a four-masted schooner and smaller boats on the Maine coast; government bonds and Colorado real estate. His wealth was not known until after his death.

Hall was of a very secretive nature, and the cause of his estrangement from his family is not known, nor are the whereabouts of his two divorced wives known.

Grief at his ineffectual attempts to gain the respect and love of his daughters made him a hermit, and is said to have indirectly caused his death.

QUINSY, SORE THROAT, NEURALGIA OF THE NERVES

Mrs. Wm. Van Gaasbeek.

A remarkable cure was effected in the case of Mrs. Wm. Van Gaasbeek, of 14½ Foxhall Avenue, Kingston, New York, who suffered a long time from Quinsy, Sore Throat and Neuralgia. After all other medicines failed, Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey made a permanent cure.

In a recent letter Mrs. Van Gaasbeek wrote:

"I have been a great sufferer for a long time from quinsy, sore throat and neuralgia of the nerves. I had tried almost everything but nothing seemed to help me. A friend advised me to try Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, and after taking a half dozen bottles I was cured. Have never had any symptoms of the disease since. I recommend it to any one suffering from these diseases."

Thousands of unsolicited letters of gratitude like this of Mrs. Van Gaasbeek are received from grateful patients who are anxious to extol the merits of this great life-saver—Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey.

DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY

is an absolutely pure distillation of malted grain; great care being used to have every kernel thoroughly malted, thus destroying the germ and producing a predigested liquid food in the form of a malt essence, which is the most effective tonic stimulant and invigorator known to science; softened by warmth and moisture its palatability and freedom from injurious substances renders it so that it can be retained by the most sensitive stomach.

It is recognized everywhere as the unfailing specific for the cure of consumption, nervousness, typhoid, malaria, every form of stomach trouble, diseases of the throat and lungs, and all run down and weakened conditions of the brain and body. It restores youthful vigor to the old and maintains the health and strength of the young. It nourishes and feeds the vital forces. It is a form of food already digested. It is prescribed by doctors of all schools, is used in the leading hospitals of the world, and is recognized as a family medicine everywhere. It is absolutely pure.

CAUTION.—When you ask your druggist, grocer or dealer for Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey be sure you get the genuine. It is the only absolutely pure medicinal malt whiskey and is sold in sealed bottles only; never in bulk. Price $1.00. Look for the trade-mark, the "Old Chemist," on the label, and make sure the seal over the cork is unbroken. Illustrated medical booklet and doctor's advice free. of Howes was effected hours after he began to and just two hours after the were notified. Detectives Hosick are credited by superiors being taken one of the most clever forgers on the Coast. Four cases have been secured against Howes, the police say, and they expect that many more will be discovered within twenty-four hours.

Howes claims to have resided with his wife in Portland until recently. He is 23 years of age, and says he was employed as a candy maker in a large establishment there. In the confession Howes says that this is not his first offense, and that he was driven to commit the forgeries by straitened financial conditions.

IN SAN FRANCISCO.

About a year ago he made a trip to San Francisco, where he sought a position in a candy factory and failed. He declares he was made the victim of sharpers and swindled out of several hundred dollars in San Francisco by gamblers. One of the crooks, Howes asserts, explained to him that Los Angeles is an "easy field," and taught him how to forge checks and instructed him in the manner of passing them.

Under the pretext of working as a detective on a case, Howes says, he would disappear from the city, pass several checks, and return with the money. After working nearly every city between the Canadian border west of the Rockies and San Francisco, he decided to swoop down upon Los Angeles and clean up enough money in two days to keep him for several months.

TAKES BAD ADVICE.

Following the advice the gambler gave a year ago, Howes came here, arriving yesterday forenoon, and engaged sumptuous apartments at the Lankershim. He represented himself as the well-to-do Portland man. At the Central National Bank and the National Bank of California he secured pads of bank checks. These he took to his room and forged over fifty checks for $30 and $40 each.

About the time the banks closed at noon, Howes walked out into the business district. The first place he tried to pass a check at was R. E. McIntosh's store, No. 447 South Spring street. There he tendered one for $40 in payment for a small purchase of goods, and received the change.

Suspicion lurked in the minds of the clerks and they inquired his address. Howes weakened and gave the name of H. C. Cloud, Jr., No. 635 South Grand avenue. This satisfied the clerk temporarily, and Howes was allowed to go. The manager of the store was told of the check and sent out a clerk to investigate. The clerk found that no such person resides at the address on Grand avenue. Detectives were then notified.

Meantime Howes went to Kahn & Co.'s store, No. 457 South Broadway, where he made a small purchase, and secured the difference in cash for a $40 check. At J. A. Jepson & Co.'s, No. 537 South Spring street, he passed another check successfully. Just how many other persons cashed the worthless paper is not known by the police, but Howes said that there were at least fifteen.

HE WORKS RAPIDLY.

Howes worked rapidly and in most stores he was not questioned when he gave his address as the Lankershim. The name of S. S. Silverfield was looked up in rating books and his commercial standing was found to be so high that few doubts came up. Clothiers and haberdashers were the chosen victims in most instances.

At W. Hunter & Co.'s store, No. 541 South Broadway, Howes met his first defeat. He presented a check for $30 but he could not allay the suspicion of the manager. After remaining sometime Howes finally gave up trying to pass the check and started out.

All this time Detectives Craig and Hosick were on Howes's trail. As he passed out of the store they entered and were told he had just left. They ran down the street and overtook him.

A search of Howes's room at the Lankershim revealed that he had a badge "Portland Police, No. 5," and a pair of police regulation handcuffs. No communication could be established by the police with Portland last night. A suspicion lurks among the detectives here that Howes may be a patrolman in the northern city.

When confronted with the badge and the cuffs, about 10 o'clock last night, Howes again explained them by saying that he had been representing himself as a private detective. He says he is wanted in nearly every town of any size in the Pacific Coast States.

SAVAGE ASSAULT.

Two Men Pounce on Negro Teamster Downtown and Beat Him Brutally, Then Run.

Two unidentified men assaulted Walter Smith, a negro teamster of No. 1130 South Olive street, as he was passing along Third, between Los Angeles and San Pedro streets, last night, about 6 o'clock. Evidently robbery was not the motive, as a watch and $4.65 were found on the teamster when he was searched by the police.

Hearing cries of a man in distress, citizens ran to where Smith had fallen. He was unconscious. At the Receiving Hospital it was found he had sustained a deep laceration of the scalp and a possible fracture of the skull. His face was badly cut. A small boy saw two men run away when Smith cried out. Smith partially recovered consciousness, but could not tell what had happened to him.

Words fail to express my appreciation of the Schiffman method of extracting teeth. Two weeks ago I had twenty-five bad teeth, several of them ulcerated, extracted without the slightest pain, and absolutely no bad after effects. My mouth has healed splendidly. Stomach and Bowel Troubles, Convulsion

Tape Worms, Stomach, Intestinal, Thread Worms, and all other parasites which infest the human body, which are the cause of so many Chronic Troubles, can be removed without inconvenience of fasting.

Passing of Mucus Is An Important Symptom

Are there times when you have a ravenous appetite, and other times when the thought of food is revolting? Do you get dizzy? Is your mind dull? Is your memory poor? Are you easily dazed? Do your limbs get numb? Do you have headache? Are you easily excited? Do your temples throb? Do your hands tremble? Does your heart flutter? Are you easily irritated? Are you always anxious? Do your muscles twitch? Do you suffer from sleeplessness? Are you easily frightened? Does sleep not refresh you? Do you suffer from neuralgia?

Dr. Mettochnikoff of the Pasteur Institute declared in Paris lately that the taking of vermifuge medicine had been sadly neglected by the people of late, that observation had demonstrated not less than forty-five species of dangerous microbes domiciled in the large intestines, and that to them most diseases were due.

In the past six months I have cured over 500 cases of so-called stomach trouble, and have absolutely cured eight cases of epilepsy. I diagnose and tell you whether you have any of these parasites or not. All charges are moderate. No charge if no parasites are obtained.

NEWS REPORTS FROM CORRESPONDENTS OF THE TIMES.

FRICTION.

VETERINARIAN MAY RESIGN.

TROUBLE CROPS OUT IN CASE OF PASADENA OFFICER.

Says the Salary Is Not Sufficient to Justify the Number of Inspections Which He Makes Every Week—Has Made Many Enemies by His Administration in Office.

Office of The Times, No. 29 South Raymond ave.

PASADENA, Oct. 27.—Rumor around the City Hall and among all those who are close to the administration is that Dr. L. H. Médici de Biron will resign as City Veterinarian Monday, and that his resignation will be accepted. Dr. De Biron will enter upon the private practice of his profession. This veterinarian was previously the city humane officer, and during his term of office did more to suppress cruelty to animals than any official who has served the city. It may be said that there is some friction between Dr. De Biron and Mayor Earley. The veterinarian claims that he is not required by the city ordinances to make weekly reports and practically refuses to do so. He says that his salary of $75 per month is not sufficient to justify the number of inspections which he makes every week and at the same time to turn in a detailed report more than once a month.

Behind this statement, which is the bald view of the administration, is a story that Dr. De Biron has been called upon for reports and has been wanting in details. A case in point is the inspection of the Sibert and Spalding ranches. Dr. De Biron claims that he inspected a number of cows and tagged them. The owners claim that he did not. There is some controversy as to the time of the inspection. The reports make it recently, and when questioned Dr. De Biron says that the inspections were made last June. Under these circumstances it is stated that the Mayor feels called upon to accept the veterinary's resignation, which will be voluntarily tendered Monday as a method adopted by the doctor to relieve the situation.

Meantime there is a controversy between the city veterinarian and one of the largest dairy operators. Dr. De Biron would have tendered his resignation several weeks ago had it not been for this difficulty. Dr. De Biron is now working up the final facts in the case, and will include his findings in the matter in his final report.

Probably no city official who has ever been connected with local affairs has had such a picturesque career as De Biron. He is known throughout the county as a fearless officer and a stern suppressor of cruelty to animals. He has made many enemies by his administration of his office, and there will be a number of people who will read the story of his resignation with delight. The administration regrets that he cannot see his way to comply with orders.

ALLEGED HOLD-UP MAN.

Acting on a report from Patrolman Peck, Sergt. Longley arrested Gordon Meade, who was drunk and disorderly around the Santa Fé depot. When Longley took the man in charge he claimed to be a Santa Fé Railroad detective and showed a badge. He claimed to be from Bakersfield and in the secret service. It is suspected that the man is one of the trio who held up the Southern Pacific eastbound Bulldog freight last Thursday night and shot the fireman through the hand while robbing the train crew of two watches and somewhat more than $80 in money. The man has a pretty wife, who appeared to intercede for him, but without effect. He will be tried on the charge of intoxication, and when released will be confronted with a felony complaint for his impersonation of an officer.

WANTS CASH SUBSCRIPTION.

Some time ago Charles L. Hill applied for permission to care for the city garbage, and proposed at his own expense to install an incinerator. Now it develops that Mr. Hill would like a cash subscription for part of the expense. This has been refused by Mayor Earley as utterly beyond the provisions of all the early negotiations. Mr. Hill then wanted the city to pass an ordinance that would give him practical control of the garbage and refuse of the city. The Council was inclined to pass an ordinance that would compel the disposal of garbage and refuse under certain rules, which would have amounted to a practical monopoly, if Mr. Hill took up the proposition. As an outcome of the discussion between the Mayor, the city health officer, the Sanitation Committee and Mr. Hill, it was determined that Hill should propose in writing just what he would do, and what he would expect from the city. Originally, Hill's plan was very attractive, as he offered to use closed cans, sterilize them after every use and transport them in wagons at his own expense to the crematory under proper sanitary conditions. The city stands ready to give him a site free, but will require a bond of $30,000 for the proper performance of the work and a guarantee that the service will not cost the householder more than 50 cents per month for two visits weekly.

PASADENA NEWS NOTES.

Notification has been received that insurance rates in East Pasadena will be reduced according to the application of the local insurance men to the Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pacific Slope. All that remains to proclaim the rates is the necessary printing.

Some trouble has arisen in the installation of the police telephone system. The Home company, which has the contract, wants the city to guarantee the contract for a number of years, if they put in iron boxes inscribed with the police cipher. The city is unlikely to go outside of the specifications, and it is believed that as the switchboard is already built and installed, that the company will not back out of its agreement.

Harry M. Zier, the local speedomaniac along the primrose path, was released last night at 8 o'clock. Chief of Police Biggy of San Francisco wired, "Don't want Zier. Complainant refuses to pay costs of bringing him to San Francisco." Young Zier was treated at the City Jail during his twenty-four imprisonment exactly as any other prisoner. He was allowed to furnish his own meals, but was under close confinement.

GREAT SCOPE, THIS THEFT.

Blank Transcontinental Tickets Taken at Santa Monica May Cost High.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA MONICA, Oct. 26.—When the local passenger depot of the Southern Pacific was burglarized a few nights ago, it was given out that, while the passenger tickets had been tossed around promiscuously, none had been taken. The only articles reported as missing were two ticket punches, and this led to the supposition that the work had been that of either boys or amateurs. But, in checking up the tickets of different forms that are known to have been on hand at the time, Agent Julian finds that several hundred are missing. The tickets that were stolen were of the "point to point" skeleton form. When properly filled out with pen and ink, rightly punched and stamped and dated, they can be made to cover all of the leading transportation lines of the country for either first or second-class transportation, from one end of the continent to the other—from ocean to ocean. The stolen tickets represent more than $15,000 worth of transportation.

Along with the ticket forms an automatic dating machine and several ticket punches of the regulation form were taken. Thus equipped, the thieves may be able to dispose of their plunder at "scalper" offices in the East or elsewhere. Diligent efforts are being made to forestall the sale of any of the stolen tickets, but the chances of success along this line are remote, as the eastern cities are known to be full of convenient "fences" for the handling of just such property. The company cannot hope to hear the end of this burglary for years to come. The tickets that are not disposed of at this time may be held for years and then be suddenly sprung at some far off city long after the theft of the tickets shall have dropped from the memory of officers and railway conductors.

Friday afternoon and evening the pair match for gold medals and trophy was played under the Howell system, Mr. and Mrs. James Foord of Los Angeles winning, with a plus of 12. REDONDO.

REDONDO, Oct. 26.—Another run of yellowtail bigger than that of last Tuesday was on here today. There were not so many fishermen on hand today, however, as there were the other time, but the few there were made good use of their paraphernalia, and many fine fish were landed, although the actual catch was not so large as it was on the first day.

UNAUTHORIZED?

LUMBER PILES HOT SURPRISE.

COMPANY BEGINS OPERATIONS AT TERMINAL.

On Ground Which Has Been in Dispute Between Seashore Cities Concern Places Large Quantity of Woodstuff Without Securing a Franchise.

LONG BEACH, Oct. 26.—Interest is focused again on Terminal. About three months ago, on request of the Salt Lake Railroad, the Trustees ordered several streets closed in West Long Beach, or Terminal, in order to allow of several factory sites being leased. This action taken, it was announced that the Blinn-Robinson Company would invest $200,000 in a lumber yard and planing mill, employing 100 men. The company applied to the city for a wharf franchise, which was advertised, but on the day it was offered for sale, San Pedro secured an injunction restraining the city from completing the sale. Later an attempt was made to stipulate that the formalities should be completed, the money derived from the sale to be placed in escrow until the question of jurisdiction was decided, the lumber company to go ahead. San Pedro balked on the stipulations and the matter was dropped. Today it was discovered that the Blinn-Robinson people have taken possession, have piled up 400,000 feet of lumber and are preparing to erect the planing mill. Long Beach is willing this should be so, but it is not certain what San Pedro will say at this usurpation of land without her permission. The industry is an important one and adds to the population and resources of Long Beach.

SEASHORE NEWS NOTES.

Because the famous gopher hole on Hill street, which took care of the storm water in that section for many wet seasons, is too high from the neighborhood ditch to be any longer available, Street Superintendent Taylor, the property owners and the Supervisors have combined to grade Hill street west to American avenue, where the storm water will pass into a culvert under the Pacific Electric tracks and continue westward to the river. The draining of this territory will afford relief to hundreds of residents in the neighborhood.

After several months of dilatoriness the City Trustees yesterday decided that the Westminster and Oxford tunnel under the pier approach was responsible for the depression in the cement walk of the approach, and instructed the City Clerk to notify the companies to make repairs at once.

Doran, Price & Brown, contractors, who were recently awarded a $15,000 contract for oiling, grading and tamping city streets in Alamitos, have questioned the validity of the specifications under which other work has been done for years, and refuse to sign. The Trustees hold that the specifications are valid, and charge that the contractors made a price on the work lower than they can stand. The contract has been awarded to the next bidders, and the bondsmen of Doran, Price & Brown will be held responsible for the additional expense incurred.

A large warship, supposed to be one of those which have been at Santa Barbara, passed in front of the city at noon, going south under fast speed, and was viewed by hundreds until she passed from sight.

The Superior Court this morning made permanent an injunction restraining the city and property owners from tapping or using a private sewer, built in the alley between Pine, Pacific, Ocean and First, to connect the Bixby-Heartwell building with the main outfall sewer. An attempt made by the city to issue permits to tap this sewer led to the injunction.

Pacific Electric Instructs Motormen to Use Bells in South Pasadena. To Extend Westmoreland.

SOUTH PASADENA, Oct. 26.—The Pacific Electric Railway has issued orders that motormen shall not use the whistle within the city limits of South Pasadena, except at the interlocking switch at Huntington Drive and Marengo avenue. The practice of tooting the car whistles had become so common that there was much complaint in reference to it. Orders were also given to slow down on Fair Oaks avenue, where motormen had been in the habit of speeding to such an extent as to endanger life at the crossings. Local transfers are now issued entirely through the city, so that 5 cents will carry one to any point in South Pasadena.

At a special meeting of the City Trustees last evening, some changes were made in the report of the commission to extend Westmoreland avenue, and the report confirmed. This secures the extension of the street from Oxley street to Center street, where it will make a connection with Fairview avenue.

EMBARRASSING.

DILEMMA IS DISTRESSING.

FORMER CLUBMEN DO NOT CONFESS MEMBERSHIP.

Ocean Park Vegetable Dealer Wants Them to Pay Up Their Back Dues So He May Collect a Judgment — Many Los Angeles Business Men Are Involved.

OCEAN PARK, Oct. 26.—A little lawsuit, insignificant in appearance, but of tedious ramifications, is dragging its slow length through the court of Justice of the Peace Wheat. The action is that of a Pier-avenue fruit and vegetable vender to collect a bill of $38 for provender furnished the Ocean Park Country Club more than a year ago. Judgment was secured against the corporation, but when a levy was made nothing could be found. The club had "changed hands," as it were, and now the attorney for the fruit man has cited different members of the erstwhile club to appear in court and tell what they know about it, and incidentally, if they owe any back dues, to pay the same into the court in satisfaction of the judgment. This plan was decided upon in preference to bringing individual suits against the several members of the club for monthly dues, alleged to be unpaid. As beach mayors, city officials, trustees, good fellows, well-known bay and prominent Los Angeles business men, society favorites and well-known clubmen are on the list, there is a general expression of satisfaction that the bar bills, "I.O.U.'s" and other minor or major delinquencies are not to be thrashed out in the public eye.

The time was when the Ocean Park Country Club was one of the swell social organizations of the South. That was before the dream of fair Venice began to meet realization. Of all the tennis tournaments, dancing parties and card matinées, those held at the Country Club took first place. But when Venice, with its myriad attractions, took its place on the map, there was a condition of disuetude at the clubhouse. The old club lapsed into drowsiness. A. W. Lawe took charge and sought to revive it, and it was during his incumbency that debt stalked through the corridors and onto the court. Claims aggregating $1700 remain unpaid, but the fruit man stood alone in an attempt to force collections. And now the members, who thought they had resigned, or had been expelled for non-payment of dues, are backward about explaining their connection with the organization. They say they have a misgiving that the other creditors will follow in the lead of the fruit man and secure judgment. Should this be done, the lawyers say the bona-fide members will be held for their pro rata of whatever judgments may be secured, insomuch as a corporation cannot lawfully go out of existence so long as a debt remains.

Latterly the Country Club has undergone another reorganization, and again the comfortable quarters of the association resound with the laughter of the merry dancers.

WILL WORK IN UNISON.

Young People's Societies of Various Churches in Santa Monica to Hold Union Temperance Meetings.

SANTA MONICA, Oct. 26.—Beginning with tomorrow afternoon, the young peoples' societies of the different churches of the Santa Monica Bay section will inaugurate a series of union temperance meetings. The first meeting is to be held at the Methodist Church on Lake street, and will be addressed by Rev. W. M. Perry of the Baptist denomination. The session will be continued throughout the winter season.

The number of school children enrolled in the Santa Monica schools for the first month of the year is 1347, being an increase of 111 over the corresponding period of last year. The monthly examinations and the monthly reports have been eliminated, and in the opinion of City Superintendent Horace Rebok the change is a meritorious one. A primary ungraded room has been set apart for the purpose of assisting the individual pupil who, through one cause or another, has fallen behind his natural grade.

The baseball game that was to have been played here tomorrow between the Norwalks and the Santa Monicas has been called off, owing to the muddy condition of the grounds. Rain today also caused a postponement of the round-robin lawn tennis tournament that was to have been participated in by the Misses Sutton and other well-known Southern California racquet experts.

NEW TOWNSHIP LIKELY.

Project for Better Government for El Monte Is Before Board of Supervisors.

MONROVIA, Oct. 26.—Supervisor Manning conducted an investigation today relative to the division of El Monte township, as petitioned for by the residents of the southern section of the district. It is understood that final action will be taken at the meeting of the Board of Supervisors on Monday, and that the petition will be granted. The movement for the division was started over a year ago. Petitions asked for division at the old "Dalton road," which traverses the township southwest and northwest, about midway between Monrovia and El Monte.

The purpose of the partition is to give El Monte, which is not incorporated, better local government. Both the justice of the peace and constable reside in Monrovia, and the expense of bringing petty malefactors to book has militated against prosecution for minor offenses. Division at the present time will necessitate the appointment by the Supervisors of two justices of the peace and two constables.

The northern segment, including Monrovia and Duarte, will be Monrovia township. The southern will retain its present name of El Monte. Supervisor Manning intimated that Justice of the Peace J. B. Holloway and Constable John Thomas will be appointed to complete their terms of office in the Monrovia district, if they so desire. Appointment for the El Monte district has not been fully decided upon.

AZUSA CLEANS UP.

Citizens Turn Out and Remove Debris from Vacant Lots, Streets and Alleys.

AZUSA, Oct. 26.—As a result of the annual street-cleaning bee, Azusa is one of the cleanest cities in California today. Men and boys have worked hard all day hoeing weeds, while several teams were kept busy hauling away the rubbish as fast as the workers collected it. Not only have the weeds been eliminated, but old tin cans, etc., have been cleared away from the alleys and vacant lots, the street trees have been neatly trimmed, and the city presents a more attractive appearance than it ever has before. The fact that electric cars are expected to be running here from Los Angeles in a few days lent added enthusiasm to the street-cleaning campaign, as each citizen is anxious to have visitors receive the best possible impression of the place.

At noon the ladies of the city served lunch to the workers, a room in the Griffith Block being donated for the purpose. The long tables were well filled with good things for the inner man, and the hungry toilers did ample justice to the dinner. When dinner was over Rev. Dana W. Bartlett of Los Angeles gave a most interesting half-hour address on "The City Beautiful." After dwelling upon the widespread interest in civic beauty, Mr. Bartlett referred to the good work along this line in Los Angeles, and closed by urging upon the citizens of Azusa the importance of beautifying the streets by planting more oirnamental trees and keeping the streets and alleys clean. He predicted increased prosperity for the city with the advent of the electric railway, and hoped the citizens would pursue a far-sighted policy in laying out the city in such a manner that visitors would be attracted by its beauty and cleanliness.

FRICTION.

VETERINARIAN MAY RESIGN.

TROUBLE CROPS OUT IN CASE OF PASADENA OFFICER.

Says the Salary Is Not Sufficient to Justify the Number of Inspections Which He Makes Every Week—Has Made Many Enemies by His Administration in Office.

Office of The Times, No. 20 South Raymond ave.

PASADENA, Oct. 27.—Rumor around the City Hall and among all those who are close to the administration is that Dr. L. H. Medici de Biron will resign as City Veterinarian Monday, and that his resignation will be accepted. Dr. De Biron will enter upon the private practice of his profession. This veterinarian was previously the city humane officer, and during his term of office did more to suppress cruelty to animals than any official who has served the city. It may be said that there is some friction between Dr. De Biron and Mayor Earley. The veterinarian claims that he is not required by the city ordinances to make weekly reports and practically refuses to do so. He says that his salary of $75 per month is not sufficient to justify the number of inspections which he makes every week and at the same time to turn in a detailed report more than once a month.

Behind this statement, which is the bald view of the administration, is a story that Dr. De Biron has been called upon for reports and has been wanting in details. A case in point is the inspection of the Sibert and Spalding ranches. Dr. De Biron claims that he inspected a number of cows and tagged them. The owners claim that he did not. There is some controversy as to the time of the inspection. The reports make it recently, and when questioned Dr. De Biron says that the inspections were made last June. Under these circumstances it is stated that the Mayor feels called upon to accept the veterinary's resignation, which will be voluntarily tendered Monday as a method adopted by the doctor to relieve the situation.

Meantime there is a controversy between the city veterinarian and one of the largest dairy operators. Dr. De Biron would have tendered his resignation several weeks ago had it not been for this difficulty. Dr. De Biron is now working up the final facts in the case, and will include his findings in the matter in his final report.

Probably no city official who has ever been connected with local affairs has had such a picturesque career as De Biron. He is known throughout the county as a fearless officer and a stern suppressor of cruelty to animals. He has made many enemies by his administration of his office, and there will be a number of people who will read the story of his resignation with delight. The administration regrets that he cannot see his way to comply with orders.

ALLEGED HOLD-UP MAN.

Acting on a report from Patrolman Peck, Sergt. Longley arrested Gordon Meade, who was drunk and disorderly around the Santa Fé depot. When Longley took the man in charge he claimed to be a Santa Fé Railroad detective and showed a badge. He claimed to be from Bakersfield and in the secret service. It is suspected that the man is one of the trio who held up the Southern Pacific eastbound Bulldog freight last Thursday night and shot the fireman through the hand while robbing the train crew of two watches and somewhat more than $80 in money. The man has a pretty wife, who appeared to intercede for him, but without effect. He will be tried on the charge of intoxication, and when released will be confronted with a felony complaint for his impersonation of an officer.

WANTS CASH SUBSCRIPTION.

Some time ago Charles L. Hill applied for permission to care for the city garbage, and proposed at his own expense to install an incinerator. Now it develops that Mr. Hill would like a cash subscription for part of the expense. This has been refused by Mayor Earley as utterly beyond the provisions of all the early negotiations. Mr. Hill then wanted the city to pass an ordinance that would give him practical control of the garbage and refuse of the city. The Council was inclined to pass an ordinance that would compel the disposal of garbage and refuse under certain rules, which would have amounted to a practical monopoly, if Mr. Hill took up the proposition. As an outcome of the discussion between the Mayor, the city health officer, the Sanitation Committee and Mr. Hill, it was determined that Hill should propose in writing just what he would do, and what he would expect from the city. Originally, Hill's plan was very attractive, as he offered to use closed cans, sterilize them after every use and transport them in wagons at his own expense to the crematory under proper sanitary conditions. The city stands ready to give him a site free, but will require a bond of $30,000 for the proper performance of the work and a guarantee that the service will not cost the householder more than 50 cents per month for two visits weekly.

PASADENA NEWS NOTES.

Notification has been received that insurance rates in East Pasadena will be reduced according to the application of the local insurance men to the Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pacific Slope. All that remains to proclaim the rates is the necessary printing.

Some trouble has arisen in the installation of the police telephone system. The Home company, which has the contract, wants the city to guarantee the contract for a number of years, if they put in iron boxes inscribed with the police cipher. The city is unlikely to go outside of the specifications, and it is believed that as the switchboard is already built and installed, that the company will not back out of its agreement.

Harry M. Zier, the local speedomaniac along the primrose path, was released last night at 8 o'clock. Chief of Police Biggy of San Francisco wired, "Don't want Zier. Complainant refuses to pay costs of bringing him to San Francisco." Young Zier was treated at the City Jail during his twenty-four imprisonment exactly as any other prisoner. He was allowed to furnish his own meals, but was under close confinement.

GREAT SCOPE, THIS THEFT.

Blank Transcontinental Tickets Taken at Santa Monica May Cost High.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SANTA MONICA, Oct. 26.—When the local passenger depot of the Southern Pacific was burglarized a few nights ago, it was given out that, while the passenger tickets had been tossed around promiscuously, none had been taken. The only articles reported as missing were two ticket punches, and this led to the supposition that the work had been that of either boys or amateurs. But, in checking up the tickets of different forms that are known to have been on hand at the time, Agent Julian finds that several hundred are missing. The tickets that were stolen were of the "point to point" skeleton form. When properly filled out with pen and ink, rightly punched and stamped and dated, they can be made to cover all of the leading transportation lines of the country for either first or second-class transportation, from one end of the continent to the other—from ocean to ocean. The stolen tickets represent more than $15,000 worth of transportation.

Along with the ticket forms an automatic dating machine and several ticket punches of the regulation form were taken. Thus equipped, the thieves may be able to dispose of their plunder at "scalper" offices in the East or elsewhere. Diligent efforts are being made to forestall the sale of any of the stolen tickets, but the chances of success along this line are remote, as the eastern cities are known to be full of convenient "fences" for the handling of just such property. The company cannot hope to hear the end of this burglary for years to come. The tickets that are not disposed of at this time may be held for years and then be suddenly sprung at some far off city long after the theft of the tickets shall have dropped from the memory of officers and railway conductors.

WOMEN WIN.

Capture Prize from Men in the Southern California Whist Tournament.

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 26.—The seventeenth annual meeting of the Southern California Whist Association was held at Hotel Hollywood Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. Some forty players, representing clubs from Los Angeles, Pasadena, Ventura, Santa Paula, Pomona, Santa Barbara and Long Beach taking part. Compass whist was played Wednesday afternoon, and evening, the winners of the afternoon game being Gibbings and Orban of Pasadena, playing north and south, with a plus of 4.5, and Mrs. C. E. Linzee of Miramar and R. D. Richards of Long Beach, playing east and west, with a plus of 5.5. The winners of the evening game were Mrs. S. S. Wilder and R. A. Hamilton of Los Angeles, playing north and south, with a plus of 5.8, and Guggenheim and Teague of Ventura, playing north and south, with a plus of 9.2.

The team championship match for the trophy and challenge cup was played Thursday morning, afternoon and evening, and resulted in a victory for the Woman's Club of Los Angeles, composed of Mrs. S. C. Baxter, Mrs. Addie L. Buckler, Mrs. Alice Waterman and Mrs. Frances E. Dickson, winning forty matches out of seventy-two.

Friday afternoon and evening the pair match for gold medals and trophy was played under the Howell system, Mr. and Mrs. James Foord of Los Angeles winning, with a plus of 12. A rule was also made that the total of the highest averages of three out of the four open events be presented with a trophy, and under this rule Mr. R. A. Hamilton was winner, with a plus of 13.9.

The regular business meeting was also held, E. Musselman of Long Beach being elected president, E. E. Armour of Pomona, vice-president, and H. C. Osborn of Los Angeles, secretary and treasurer of the association. Long Beach was chosen as the next place of meeting, the date being April 15, 16, 17, 1908. The meeting was unanimously declared to be one of the most pleasant in the history of the association.

REDONDO.

REDONDO, Oct. 26.—Another run of yellowtail bigger than that of last Tuesday was on here today. There were not so many fishermen on hand today, however, as there were the other time, but the few there were made good use of their paraphernalia, and many fine fish were landed, although the actual catch was not so large as it was on the first day.

UNAUTHORIZED?

LUMBER PILES HOT SURPRISE.

COMPANY BEGINS OPERATIONS AT TERMINAL.

On Ground Which Has Been in Dispute Between Seashore Cities Concern Places Large Quantity of Woodstuff Without Securing a Franchise.

LONG BEACH, Oct. 26.—Interest is focused again on Terminal. About three months ago, on request of the Salt Lake Railroad, the Trustees ordered several streets closed in West Long Beach, or Terminal, in order to allow of several factory sites being leased. This action taken, it was announced that the Blinn-Robinson Company would invest $200,000 in a lumber yard and planing mill, employing 100 men. The company applied to the city for a wharf franchise, which was advertised, but on the day it was offered for sale, San Pedro secured an injunction restraining the city from completing the sale. Later an attempt was made to stipulate that the formalities should be completed, the money derived from the sale to be placed in escrow until the question of jurisdiction was decided, the lumber company to go ahead. San Pedro balked on the stipulations and the matter was dropped. Today it was discovered that the Blinn-Robinson people have taken possession, have piled up 400,000 feet of lumber and are preparing to erect the planing mill. Long Beach is willing this should be so, but it is not certain what San Pedro will say at this usurpation of land without her permission. The industry is an important one and adds to the population and resources of Long Beach.

SEASHORE NEWS NOTES.

Because the famous gopher hole on Hill street, which took care of the storm water in that section for many wet seasons, is too high from the neighborhood ditch to be any longer available, Street Superintendent Taylor, the property owners and the Supervisors have combined to grade Hill street west to American avenue, where the storm water will pass into a culvert under the Pacific Electric tracks and continue westward to the river. The draining of this territory will afford relief to hundreds of residents in the neighborhood.

After several months of dilatoriness the City Trustees yesterday decided that the Westminster and Oxford tunnel under the pier approach was responsible for the depression in the cement walk of the approach, and instructed the City Clerk to notify the companies to make repairs at once.

Doran, Price & Brown, contractors, who were recently awarded a $15,000 contract for oiling, grading and tamping city streets in Alamitos, have questioned the validity of the specifications under which other work has been done for years, and refuse to sign. The Trustees hold that the specifications are valid, and charge that the contractors made a price on the work lower than they can stand. The contract has been awarded to the next bidders, and the bondsmen of Doran, Price & Brown will be held responsible for the additional expense incurred.

A large warship, supposed to be one of those which have been at Santa Barbara, passed in front of the city at noon, going south under fast speed, and was viewed by hundreds until she passed from sight.

The City Trustees yesterday adopted an ordinance fixing the bonds of the City Clerk at $10,000; Treasurer, $50,000, and Tax Collector, $50,000.

The lumber cargo of the schooner Wilbert L. Smith, tied up at the Crescent wharf, West Long Beach, was attached yesterday by Lester W. David of Seattle, for $6584.64, which, it is claimed, the Culver Lumber Company of Los Angeles owes the Seattle man.

Mrs. F. S. Volk went to the dance and concert at the Sun Parlor last night, carrying a purse containing $25 in bills. When she reached home she found the purse open and the money gone. There is no clue to the light-fingered thief.

The Superior Court this morning made permanent an injunction restraining the city and property owners from tapping or using a private sewer, built in the alley between Pine, Pacific, Ocean and First, to connect the Bixby-Heartwell building with the main outfall sewer. An attempt made by the city to issue permits to tap this sewer led to the injunction.

The yacht Aloha, belonging to Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Bell and at anchor near West Long Beach, was atached yesterday by the Fulton Marine Works for $325, alleged to be due the company for repairs on the yacht.

Pacific Electric Instructs Motormen to Use Bells in South Pasadena.

To Extend Westmoreland.

SOUTH PASADENA, Oct. 26.—The Pacific Electric Railway has issued orders that motormen shall not use the whistle within the city limits of South Pasadena, except at the interlocking switch at Huntington Drive and Marengo avenue. The practice of tooting the car whistles had become so common that there was much complaint in reference to it. Orders were also given to slow down on Fair Oaks avenue, where motormen had been in the habit of speeding to such an extent as to endanger life at the crossings. Local transfers are now issued entirely through the city, so that 5 cents will carry one to any point in South Pasadena.

At a special meeting of the City Trustees last evening, some changes were made in the report of the commission to extend Westmoreland avenue, and the report confirmed. This secures the extension of the street from Oxley street to Center street, where it will make a connection with Fairview avenue.

EMBARRASSING.

DILEMMA IS DISTRESSING.

Ocean Park Vegetable Dealer Wants Them to Pay Up Their Back Dues So He May Collect a Judgment — Many Los Angeles Business Men Are Involved.

OCEAN PARK, Oct. 26.—A little lawsuit, insignificant in appearance, but of tedious ramifications, is dragging its slow length through the court of Justice of the Peace Wheat. The action is that of a Pier-avenue fruit and vegetable vender to collect a bill of $88 for provender furnished the Ocean Park Country Club more than a year ago. Judgment was secured against the corporation, but when a levy was made nothing could be found. The club had "changed hands," as it were, and now the attorney for the fruit man has cited different members of the erstwhile club to appear in court and tell what they know about it, and incidentally, if they owe any back dues, to pay the same into the court in satisfaction of the judgment. This plan was decided upon in preference to bringing individual suits against the several members of the club for monthly dues, alleged to be unpaid. As beach mayors, city officials, trustees, good fellows, well-known bay and prominent Los Angeles business men, society favorites and well-known clubmen are on the list, there is a general expression of satisfaction that the bar bills, "I.O.U.'s" and other minor or major delinquencies are not to be thrashed out in the public eye.

The time was when the Ocean Park Country Club was one of the swell social organizations of the South. That was before the dream of fair Venice began to meet realization. Of all the tennis tournaments, dancing parties and card matinées, those held at the Country Club took first place. But when Venice, with its myriad attractions, took its place on the map, there was a condition of disuetude at the clubhouse. The old club lapsed into drowsiness. A. W. Lawe took charge and sought to revive it, and it was during his incumbency that debt stalked through the corridors and onto the court. Claims aggregating $1700 remain unpaid, but the fruit man stood alone in an attempt to force collections. And now the members, who thought they had resigned, or had been expelled for non-payment of dues, are backward about explaining their connection with the organization. They say they have a misgiving that the other creditors will follow in the lead of the fruit man and secure judgment. Should this be done, the lawyers say the bona-fide members will be held for their pro rata of whatever judgments may be secured, insomuch as a corporation cannot lawfully go out of existence so long as a debt remains.

Latterly the Country Club has undergone another reorganization, and again the comfortable quarters of the association resound with the laughter of the merry dancers.

WILL WORK IN UNISON.

Young People's Societies of Various Churches in Santa Monica to Hold Union Temperance Meetings.

SANTA MONICA, Oct. 26.—Beginning with tomorrow afternoon, the young peoples' societies of the different churches of the Santa Monica Bay section will inaugurate a series of union temperance meetings. The first meeting is to be held at the Methodist Church on Lake street, and will be addressed by Rev. W. M. Perry of the Baptist denomination. The session will be continued throughout the winter season.

The number of school children enrolled in the Santa Monica schools for the first month of the year sis 1347, being an increase of 111 over the corresponding period of last year. The monthly examinations and the monthly reports have been eliminated, and in the opinion of City Superintendent Horace Rebok the change is a meritorious one. A primary ungraded room has been set apart for the purpose of assisting the individual pupil who, through one cause or another, has fallen behind his natural grade.

The baseball game that was to have been played here tomorrow between the Norwalks and the Santa Monicas has been called off, owing to the muddy condition of the grounds. Rain today also caused a postponement of the round-robin lawn tennis tournament that was to have been participated in by the Misses Sutton and other well-known Southern California racquet experts.

SOLDIERS' HOME, Oct. 26.—Mrs. E. C. McCullough, accompanied by her little daughter, Lois, and a native maid, arrived from Manila, P. I., yesterday on an extended visit with her parents, Prof. and Mrs. Fred Elser. Shortly after the occupation of Manila by the United States troops, E. C. On the termination of his contract, he had found and grasped business opportunities in a variety of directions, and is now regarded as one of the most enterprising and prosperous business men of that far eastern city. NEW TOWNSHIP LIKELY.

Project for Better Government for El Monte Is Before Board of Supervisors.

MONROVIA, Oct. 26.—Supervisor Manning conducted an investigation today relative to the division of El Monte township, as petitioned for by the residents of the southern section of the district. It is understood that final action will be taken at the meeting of the Board of Supervisors on Monday, and that the petition will be granted. The movement for the division was started over a year ago. Petitions asked for division at the old "Dalton road," which traverses the township southwest and northwest, about midway between Monrovia and El Monte.

The purpose of the partition is to give El Monte, which is not incorporated, better local government. Both the justice of the peace and constable reside in Monrovia, and the expense of bringing petty malefactors to book has militated against prosecution for minor offenses. Division at the present time will necessitate the appointment by the Supervisors of two justices of the peace and two constables.

The northern segment, including Monrovia and Duarte, will be Monrovia township. The southern will retain its present name of El Monte. Supervisor Manning intimated that Justice of the Peace J. B. Holloway and Constable John Thomas will be appointed to complete their terms of office in the Monrovia district, if they so desire. Appointment for the El Monte district has not been fully decided upon.

AZUSA CLEANS UP.

Citizens Turn Out and Remove Debris from Vacant Lots, Streets and Alleys.

AZUSA, Oct. 26.—As a result of the annual street-cleaning bee, Azusa is one of the cleanest cities in California today. Men and boys have worked hard all day hoeing weeds, while several teams were kept busy hauling away the rubbish as fast as the workers collected it. Not only have the weeds been eliminated, but old tin cans, etc., have been cleared away from the alleys and vacant lots, the street trees have been neatly trimmed, and the city presents a more attractive appearance than it ever has before. The fact that electric cars are expected to be running here from Los Angeles in a few days lent added enthusiasm to the street-cleaning campaign, as each citizen is anxious to have visitors receive the best possible impression of the place.

At noon the ladies of the city served lunch to the workers, a room in the Griffith Block being donated for the purpose. The long tables were well filled with good things for the inner man, and the hungry toilers did ample justice to the dinner. When dinner was over Rev. Dana W. Bartlett of Los Angeles gave a most interesting half-hour address on "The City Beautiful." After dwelling upon the widespread interest in civic beauty, Mr. Bartlett referred to the good work along this line in Los Angeles, and closed by urging upon the citizens of Azusa the importance of beautifying the streets by planting more ornamental trees and keeping the streets and alleys clean. He predicted increased prosperity for the city with the advent of the electric railway, and hoped the citizens would pursue a far-sighted policy in laying out the city in such a manner that visitors would be attracted by its beauty and cleanliness.

MAROONED BY STORM.

Jackies on Shore Leave at Santa Barbara Held by Southeaster.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] With small boats all in board and everything battened down snug and tight, the armored cruisers West Virginia, Pennsylvania and Colorado are this evening anchored in the channel in the midst of a southeaster, accompanied by a terrific downpour of rain and a pounding sea. Liberty men caught ashore after the boats were called in are still marooned on the mainland, while those on the ships care not to brave the elements to join them in their revels in town. One of the launches, while making the landing this evening lost her propeller, and drifted about until picked up by another launch.

SUPERVISORS APPOINT OFFICER FOR LOS ALAMITOS.

Appointee Was Friend of Dead Deputy Constable—Considered Capable Man for Office—Old Official Tires of Duties and Resigns—Los Angeles Coupl. Weds in Santa Ana.

SANTA ANA, Oct. 26.—C. W. Moore, a Mexican, and a friend of the dead Deputy Constable, Juan Orosco, has undertaken the duties of the officership in the turbulent Mexican population at Los Alamitos. The appointment of Moore as a deputy was filed here today. He receives his appointment from Constable John Shutt, who has filed his resignation with the Board of Supervisors, having no desire to further take the responsibilities of the office. Moore is a husky, fearless young fellow. While he was a witness for the defense in the trial of Rafael Borrego for the murder of Orosco, his testimony was favorable to the prosecution. He told what appeared to be a thoroughly honest story of the shooting, and denied the essential point of the defense, that Orosco rushed at Borrego with a revolver in his hand.

The town of Los Alamitos has been quiet this week. On Sunday night the lawless element among the Mexicans are prone to drink and shoot their revolvers off in the air.

SANTA ANA BRIEFS.

Robert H. Smith, aged 23, and Miss Vivian Jackson Fanning, aged 18, both of Los Angeles, were married here this morning by Rev. J. Herndon Garnett. The couple came down from Los Angeles in a car belonging to the J. H. McCarthy Insurance Trust Company, where Smith is employed, the mother of the bride accompanying them.

Clyde Taylor pleaded guilty last night to defrauding a livery stable. On Thursday he hired a rig for a short drive, but failed to return it on time, and yesterday the rig was found at Orange.

MISSING MAN FINDS SEARCHERS.

San Bernardino Banker and Politician Lived in Cave for Days to Escape Storm.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Joseph Brown, banker and politician, who has been lost to his friends for the past ten days, this afternoon overtook the searching party of pioneers who started out this morning to hunt him in Huston Flats. He was making his way to town, after having sought refuge from the storm in a cave, for days hardly leaving his shelter. He explains that he left camp to hunt lions, and, being overtaken by rains, was storm-bound, and having "laid low" for nearly ten days, failed to encounter any of the rangers hunting him.

PRISONER ESCAPES.

Ben Kinney, a six-foot darkey, 19 years old, who was brought from Needles seven days ago to serve a sentence of six months, escaped from the County Hospital this morning, and is still at large. The day Kinney arrived at the County Jail he broke out with measles, and was removed to the hospital. He had about recovered from his illness, and there being no guard placed over him, easily escaped from the institution.

JURY DISAGREES.

The jury in the Martz burglary case failed to reach a verdict after being out all night, and was dismissed this morning by Judge Bledsoe. Martz was a Santa Fé freight conductor, and stole merchandise from a car entrusted to his care. He claimed that he did not break into the car, and only thought of appropriating the articles to his own use when he had left the car with them. This is the second disagreement. It has been decided to dismiss the burglary charge Monday, and allow the accused to enter a plea of guilty to a petty larceny charge before Justice Thomas.

DISTRESSING.

ESTIMATE AT VENTURA ON BEAN CROP DAMAGE.

All Hope for the Saving of the Unthrashed Part of the Crop, Estimated at 200,000 Sacks, Now Lying in the Fields Is Abandoned. Losses All Over the County.

VENTURA, Oct. 26.—Following ten days of rainy and murky weather, a regular old-time southeast storm set in here last night. During the night nearly an inch of rain fell, and all today the downpour has been heavy and incessant, swelling the total another inch, and making the October rainfall to date exceed that of any October in the past thirty years. What hope was left for the unthrashed beans lying in the fields has entirely vanished with this last precipitation. They will be a total loss. The loss is a huge one, too.

It is figured that considerable over one-third of the crop was not reached by the thrashing machines. Something like 200,000 sacks is considered a fair estimate, and with beans bringing $5 per sack, which is the price most expected, the loss is placed at near the million mark. Before the rains set in, and when everything looked to the surety of saving the entire crop, beans were bringing $4.75 the sack, and it is considered the estimate of $5 per hundred put on them is not too high. The losses all over the county are great, though the sections adjacent to this city and to Saticoy suffered most.

VENTURA BRIEFS.

Tom Crawford of this city and Earl Viles of Santa Paula have been mentioned as probable successors to Will Reilly for the office of Under Sheriff. Mr. Reilly gives up the place to take the position of warden of Folsom prison.

The Rainbow Bazaar given by the Native Daughters of this city last night was a success, socially and financially. A large crowd turned out to enjoy the occasion. The hall and booths were decorated in rainbow colors, and were most beautiful and attractive. There was a programme of exercises enjoyed by the audience, followed by dancing, the Sansone band furnishing the music.

Dan Brady, the farm hand, who was arrested and charged with a criminal assault upon Mrs. Olivas, living on the Ojai road, was yesterday examined before Justice Ortega. After due investigation the man was acquitted of the charge on the ground of insufficiency of evidence.

J. W. Rosenburg of Santa Paula, a pioneer resident, is seriously ill at his home.

C. W. Moisling of Bardsdale recently broke an egg laid by one of his White Plymouth Rock hens, which contained three well-defined yolks. He challenges Southern California to beat it.

Miss Anna Morrison, who has been seriously ill in an Illinois town, where she was visiting, passed through this city last night, en route to Santa Barbara in care of her brother, Tom Morrison. Miss Morrison is still very ill.

INSTANT DEATH.

THREE KILLED BY DYNAMITE.

FATALITY OCCURS IN SANTA BARBARA COUNTY.

Charge Explodes at Oil Well and Results in Triple Loss of Life—Accident Is Witnessed by Man Who Drives Nine Miles for Assistance to Bring in the Bodies.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA MARIA, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] While trying to dynamite the casing in the Syndicate oil well this afternoon, the charge exploded and killed three men—Clem Knoke, Albert Bryan and Dunley Hart.

The accident was witnessed by an employé of the company, named Fairbanks, who drove nine miles to Orcutt to get assistance to bring in the bodies. A Coroner's inquest will be held tonight as soon as the victims can be brought in from the scene of the accident. The explosion occurred between 3 and 4 o'clock. The Syndicate is a subsidiary company of the Union Oil Company. The men were pulling casing, and, in order to cut it, were going to dynamite it at the bottom.

WILL CUT RIVER CHANNEL.

Contract Let for Large Excavation and Work to Be Done in Sixty Days.

LOS ALAMITOS, Oct. 26.—The cutting of a straight channel between the Pacific Electric bridge and the ocean along the course of the new San Gabriel River is to be begun soon at the lower end. An attempt to cut it was made last season and it is now conceded that the work was begun at the wrong end. River Trustees Paul, Sackett and Carse have engaged Howard & Co., of Los Angeles, to move in their big outfit, which is now on the ground, to prosecute the work from the ocean up. About 160,000 cubic yards of sand and gravel wil have to be moved on a grade established by civil engineers and a steam shovel of a capacity of 1000 cubic yards per day is to be used from the tide-water up, besides an auxiliary to the steam shovel, forty teams of four horses each are already at work excavating on the river bed northwest from the sugar factory. The contract calls for the completion of the work within sixty days with a forfeit of $175 per day for every day's de lay after seventy-five days, unless the delay is caused by storm. There is considerable water running in the bed of the channel now with a rising tendency from recent rains.

RAIN HASN'T HURT BEETS.

The big sugar mill is again in full swing after a few days' interruption of beet deliveries on account of the threatening aspect of the weather and slippery roads. Only about one-fourth inch of rain fell altogether and orders went out immediately to plow out all beets remaining in the fields, so little damage will result, although percentage of tare will be increased. Unlike fruit and beans, beets keep well, provided they are plowed out. If there is clear weather from now on the balance of the crop, 12,000 to 15,000 tons will be harvested soon.

A Fortune Spent!

Indiana Woman Gives Thousands of Dollars to Aid Suffering Women.

In the past few years Mrs. Cora B. Miller has spent $125,000.00 in giving medicine to afflicted women.

Some time ago we announced in the columns of this paper that she would give to women who suffered from female diseases another $10,000.00 worth of her medicine. Having fulfilled this promise, and as she is still receiving requests from thousands of women from all parts of the world, who have not yet used her remedy, she has decided to give away $20,000.00 worth more to those who are suffering and unable to find relief. This is the simple mild treatment that has cured so many women in the privacy of their own homes after physicians and other remedies failed.

It is especially prepared for the speedy and permanent cure of leucorrhoea or whitish discharges, ulceration, displacements or falling of the womb, profuse, scanty or painful periods, uterine or ovarian tumors or growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness and piles from any cause or no matter of how long standing.

Every woman sufferer, unable to find relief, who will write Mrs. Miller now without delay will receive by mail, free of charge, a 50-cent box of her simple home remedy, also her book with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer and how they can easily cure themselves at home without the aid of a physician.

Don't suffer another day, but write at once to Mrs. Cora B. Miller, Box 8963, Kokomo, Ind.

MOTORCYCLE HURTS HIM.

Man Is Struck and His Arm Broken In Two Places In Accident At Upland.

UPLAND, Oct. 26.—Frank Tainer, a recent arrival from Salt Lake City, ran down and seriously injured Harry Lageschulte yesterday, in this city. Tainer was riding a high-power motorcycle, and is said to have been going at a stiff rate. Evidently Lageschulte became confused, and stepped directly into the path of the machine, with the result that he had an arm broken in two places, the upper fracture being so severe as to cause the bones to protrude from the flesh. One of the unusual results of this sort of accident was the profuse bleeding of young Lageschulte, evidently the jagged bones having severed or torn an artery in the arm. Tainer himself suffered a dislocated shoulder.

UPLAND NOTES.

The trial of the Smith-Johnson Drug Company, proprietors of the Upland drug store, who were arrested several days ago, charged with the illegal sale of liquor, has been set for November 8.

The Pacific District Conference of the Mennonite Church, which has been in session here the past week, closed Thursday.

About forty of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. W. Frank Clark assembled at their home on North Second avenue, the occasion being the anniversary of the birth of Mr. Clark.

J. Schmidt and family of Mound Ridge, Kan., arrived yesterday and will make their home in Upland.

Dr. O. W. Kankel, who has been ill with a severe throat trouble, has now almost fully recovered.

ONTARIO.

ONTARIO, Oct. 26.—The union High School tangle between Ontario and Upland seems to have reached a crucial stage. County Superintendent McPherron has returned a bunch of High School warrants, issued both, in payment for teachers' salaries, and also for school supplies, to the banks, without his indorsement, having previously notified the banks that, by order of the District Attorney, the same could not be paid until the present school trouble was settled.

Five hundred and fifty dollars have been paid into the county treasury the past two weeks, in fines levied on offenders against the liquor laws in this locality.

L. D. Temple, who recently sold his fine twenty-acre navel orange orchard, located on Thirteenth street and Euclid avenue, for $30,000, has just purchased of J. G. Gaylord of this place his fine ten-acre orange grove, located on Mountain avenue and I streets. The consideration reported is $12,000.

How to Tell a Reputable Doctor from the Fraud and Fakir.

The first thing the FRAUD AND FAKIR DOES—is TO HIDE HIS IDENTITY—he knows his name would not inspire confidence—or might even prove his incompetence, so Mr. Fakir immediately becomes some "FAKE MEDICAL COMPANY" or "Fake Medical Institute," and thus hiding his identity hopes by clever advertising to compete with honorable and reliable specialists.

Beware of Any Man Who Does Business Under an Assumed Name.

He MAY be all right, but he will bear watching, and there must be a reason for his hiding behind a fake title. Drs. Shores do business under their own names because they are not ashamed of their records. Drs. Shores are known all over the West—as good business men, square and honorable in all transactions, and as Trained Specialists in their chosen field, with a greater experience than is given to most Doctors.

Truth Seeks the Light—Falsehood the Cover of Darkness.

And the Quack Doctor, who has something to be ashamed of, always finds a convenient "Fake Company" or "Fake Institute" or "Fake Title" to hide behind. STAY BY THE KNOWN AND RELIABLES ALWAYS—AND THE FAKIR WILL SOON BE DRIVEN OUT OF BUSINESS.

THE MARKETS

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Saturday saw fruits and vegetables on the local market pretty well cleaned up. There was not an oversupply of anything to begin with, and this went to make prices very firm along all lines. Grapes were very scarce, all bad stock having been sent to the dumps and very little new having arrived. There was considerable drawing from cold storage for the first time this year, and everything was snapped up at higher figure. The session of the Produce Exchange was perhaps the most brisk and energetic of the entire week. Sales were scattered and large, the principal call being in potatoes and poultry. A resume of the week would result in establishing the fact that business, considering prevailing weather conditions, was fairly good and all prices, with the exception of butter and hens, were on the advance.

Egg receipts amounted to just 86 cases of fresh ranch candled selects. There was an attempt to boost the prices on this grade, but dealers appeared to be working against each other. There is an uncertainty as to what should be done and misrepresentations have resulted. There were twice as many local ranch eggs sold to outside dealers, who sell in turn to the consumer, as receipts at any time would warrant. This has caused considerable comment as well as created dissension. Eastern eggs are the only solution for the existing stringency's relief. There was a single sale of 5 cases of local ranch case count eggs.

In the butter market the situation is similar to that in eggs. Haggling over quality and grade has been going on for some time. An overstockage of eastern and sufficient local creamery to supply two-thirds of all demands has made a very weak market. The outlook on Saturday, according to several of the heaviest dealers in that line, was for another possible decline. This would be only fractional, and prices would rebound to former level immediately on the increase of consumption which has been a trifle curtailed on account of prevailing quotations. The receipts totaled 25,344 pounds, ending the week in the manner in which it was started, above expectations. The only sale reported was of sixty two-pound squares of creamery. There were no cheese arrivals and the only offering was of Martin's flats full cream with no bid.

The potato market was strong. A car of fancy Highland Burbanks sold at the prevailing figure for immediate delivery. Salinas were called for but there were no offerings, while Oregons were offered but no sale was made, although there were some excellent bids. The week as a whole has found no radical change in the situation of potatoes and they are moving freely. Receipts for Saturday were 1657 sacks or about six car loads. The sweet potato market, which was unsteady right along, turned firm yesterday on account of a decrease in the local production receipts. This particular kind is almost entirely sold off the market and those now coming in are from Merced. There were some large red sweets among the offerings, but they hung rather heavy, the yellow variety being preferred. Sixty-five sacks were reported in.

The onion market was extremely firm while the offerings were heavy. Several dealers have a practical control of the stock and they are holding on for their own prices. The bidding on Australian Browns and Danvers was of excellent tone although no sales were made. There were a few Colorados on sale off the exchange. The receipts amounted to 41 sacks which was a little below the daily average for the week.

Beans held their own all week on the price list and every indication just now points to higher prices. There were some large receipts during the entire week and the Saturday arrivals were not below the average. They amounted to 451 sacks of pinks from the northern part of the State and several good bids were made without being accepted. A large quantity of regraded and separated beans were offered but found no buyers.

The apple market was firm and offerings were lighter than for several days. They consisted principally of Newton pippins, Smith Ciders and Bellefleurs. In addition to these varieties there were some very pretty arrivals of Colorado Jonathons and a very few Arkansas reds which are among the most choice offerings placed on this market. Neither of the two varieties will sell for less than $2.50 a box on the wholesale market. There are few Bartlett pears offered and these at an advance. All berries were higher with the exception of the cranberries. Fancy strawberries sold as high as 10 and 12 cents a box while raspberries were still higher. Blacks were very scarce. Cornichon grapes are arriving from the interior and the central part of the State and are in good demand. Muscats were hard to get at any price, while Tokays were offered in very light quantities. There will be some very marked changes in the grape quotations within the ensuing week on account of weather conditions.

Grape-fruit was unobtainable at any price by noon.

Cow pumpkins were a drug on the market and sold at any figure which would take them off the hands of the dealers. Crooked-neck squash as well as the Hubbards were far in excess of any demand. Wax and string beans are bracing a trifle even on the poor grades. Fancy cauliflower was a little better priced while artichokes are getting cheaper.

The poultry situation is an engima. Some dealers are advancing prices while others are sending them down. The sales on the 'change were good. Twenty dozen hens and dozen of young roosters, all averaging three pounds, changed hands. There were no changes in fish prices although hallibut and lobsters were scarce for the first time in a week.

CRANBERRIES LOWER.

Heavy Receipts and Large Crop Cause of Decline—Fruit as Cheap Here as in Chicago.

"Cranberries are arriving so rapidly that prices are going down farther than they have been in three years," remarked a prominent Los Angeles fruit broker yesterday. The receipts so far are almost as large as they were for the entire season last year. Cape Cod berries are extremely plentiful, the bogs having overproduced, and Ohio and Pennsylvania both have had large crops.

Farmers along the Great Lakes, where there are many swamps, which form an ideal place for cranberry brakes, have just awakened to the fact that there is money in the production, and their yields this year far exceeded those of any year yet.

In Los Angeles twelve cars have arrived and are awaiting sale. So far, it has been unnecessary to place them in storage, as they are selling rapidly to retailers. On the Produce Exchange there was a drop of 50 cents a barrel yesterday. Cranberries are as cheap in Los Angeles as they are in Chicago, where they are quoted at $8.50 a barrel.

PLAY WAITING GAME.

Caller Parsons Says Brokers and Customers Will Hold Onto Stocks of Value.

"The market on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange for the past week has been remarkable from the fact that it has held its own so well," said Caller L. F. Parsons of the exchange, yesterday. "Prices do not show any great decline and, while the trading has naturally fallen off, still there is a disposition to pick up such snaps as are offered. The brokers and their customers are playing a waiting game, knowing full well that while the scare in the East would naturally be somewhat reflected here, still the intrinsic values of the securities offered is such that no great decline will develop in either the bond list, bank stocks, or industrials and public utilities.

"The mining share market will be unsettled until the bank situation in Nevada clears up. The rumor that the Nevada banks have been carrying large amounts of the various Nevada stocks as collateral, and that their present difficulties arise from the fact that they have tried to protect their customers, seems to be well grounded. If this should turn out to be the true status of affairs, much of these holdings, of necessity, will have to be thrown on the market in order to clean up the banks' accounts, and until these shares come into the possesion of new hands, capable and willing to hold them until the mines reach a more permanent state of development, little can be expected in the way of an upward movement.

"Oil stocks show a somewhat lower level owing to the fact that one or two blocks were necessarily forced on the market during the present stringency in order to protect loans."

MINING TRADES DULL.

Change for Better on Merger Stock When Report of Coming Dividend Is Received.

The mining share market on the Los Angeles-Nevada Mining Exchange yesterday was dull and sluggish. It was one of the smallest and most uninteresting days, so far as trading was concerned, since the opening of the new exchange, only 10,600 shares of stock changing hands.

The Merger stock, which broke so badly on Friday afternoon on news of the passing of the next dividend, due November 25, had not recovered greatly before a correction of the report was received. Sales were made at $4.10 on cash transactions, 200 shares changing hands. Another 300 shares were sold at 4.00@4.10, on seller-ten contracts, and a 100-share lot changed hands at 4.20 on a buyer-thirty contract. The stock closed at 4.00 bid, with none in the market, the local brokers seemingly preferring to be "long" in this stock, despite the turn of events.

Later in the day it developed that the regular monthly meeting which had been called for October 25, in Goldfield, had been adjourned without the transaction of any business whatever, because of the three-day legal holiday declared by Gov. Sparks for all of Nevada. The meeting was postponed until November 2, when, it was announced, the board of directors would declare a 25-cent per share dividend, payable some time in January. On receipt of this news a sharp turn was noticeable in the bidding for the stock on the curb, but no trades were reported. Trading in a few minor issues composed the remainder of the day's business.

BETTER TONE TO MARKET.

Conditions on Los Angeles Stock Exchange Yesterday More Promising Than for Many Days.

The local market, as reflected by the action of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange, was somewhat better yesterday than at any other time last week. Bidding for oil stocks was stronger, except in the case of Associated, and the banks and industrials held fairly firm.

A sharp rise was recorded for Union Oil, on the news of increase in the dividend. No sales were made, but the stock was advanced from 180.50@184.00 to 185@192, a net rise, of 4½ points over the closing Friday morning.

Considerable weakness was apparent in Associated Oil, which closed at 25.00@26.87½ on sales of 20 shares at 25.75@25.50. Offerings were even weaker after the close of the call. Central Oil hit a new low level, also selling to the extent of 200 shares at 74, and closing at 70½@85.

Home Telephone preferred stock was offered at weak prices also, and closed at 52.25@52.50 with no sales. Sales made in this stock on Friday afternoon were at 52.25, lower than the stock has sold at for some time. Other industrials remained practically stationary.

On the mining call transactions were carried on in California Hills at 7-8 of a cent, 2000 shares changing hands. Johnnie Consolidated sold at 8½@8¾, to the extent of 5000 shares. Consolidated Mines was handled to a total of 6000 shares at 2 7-8; and 5000 shares of Nevada Searchlight sold at 2, on a buyer-sixty contract.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 26.—It was officially announced on the Bush-street exchange today that the Goldfield Consolidated would declare a dividend of twenty-five cents per share next Thursday, to be paid January 25, 1908. This announcement, while it did not strengthen the market to any marked degree, seemed to check any further decline, and the market closed steady. The Goldfield and Bullfrog issues held strong at yesterday's quotations, while the Tonopahs and Manhattans were weak and inactive. NEW YORK MARKET.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—Quiet conditions reigned throughout the two hours' session at the Stock Exchange today. Owing to the rule of procedure there by which loans made on Friday carry over until Monday of the following week, the immediate borrowing of money was not a necessity and the direct influence of the money position was to that extent in abeyance. The market was not active and the influence towards repression of speculative activity or dealings on margins was asserted with undiminished force. The tone of the market was regarded, nevertheless, as a reliable index of the prevailing sentiment over the financial situation. The expression of increased confidence through this medium was unmistakable. There were occasional reactions and some individual stocks, especially the inactive list, were severely depressed. The action of the market was clearly toward resistance to any elements of depression and the closing tone was still irregularly strong. The bank statement caused a momentary wavering, a report of a deficit below the legal reserve exercising an inevitable sentimental influence. Consideration of the statement detracted from its depressing influence. In view of the extraordinary events of the week and the complicated cross currents in the situation, the decrease of less than $12,000,000 in the reserve held was considered not immoderate. The necessities of the situation and the curious measure of relief adopted were explanatory of the $10,864,700 loan expansion. It was fortunate under the circumstances that the clearinghouse banks had started the week with so considerable a surplus reserve as the $11,182,650, so that the week's heavy demand have carried the reserves only $1,233,300 below the legal requirements, a showing of greater strength than has been made in any former periods of only comparative stress. It is notable also that the United States deposits included in the statement are only $13,612,500 greater than in last week's statement, whereas the actual addition of government deposits during the week is known to have been much greater. There is a ruling in force of the Treasury Department, never availed of by the clearinghouse banks, permitting government deposits to be segregated from those against which a cash reserve is required, owing to the high grade of the securities required as collateral against such deposits. Under this ruling regarding the reserve requirements, the banks would be in possession, according to the statement, of an actual surplus of $10,782,600. The principal involved in the maintenance of a fixed proportion of cash reserves by the banks is that of readiness for a sudden emergency, against which there is no prohibition of the use of reserve even down to the point of exhaustion. The bank statement was regarded, therefore, as showing a reassuring degree of strength in the banking position. For the conservation of this position the decision of the United Clearinghouse to issue clearinghouse certificates seems to offer entire security, and by acceptance between the banks of these certificates for settlement of bedit balances, the preservation of the cash deposits from depletion is assured. The decision of the New York savings banks to avail themselves of the permitted requirement of sixty days' notice of withdrawals form another safeguard against a march of the unreasonable in the hording of money in times of greatest necessity. Finally the inauguration of gold imports opens a channel of replenishment of the basis of banking credits which promises effective relief. The joint effort of those features was the feeling of encouragement with which the week closed in Wall street. Bonds were irregular. Total sales, par value $2,282,000. U. S. 4's registered, however, declined 5-8, the coupons 3-4. The fours registered 3½ and the coupons 4 per cent in the bid price on call during the week.

December [...] 1-8 higher, at 57 5-8@57 3-4 [...] 57 1-4 and then advanced [...] was at 58. Oats were dull, but the market was firm, because of the strength of wheat and corn. Demand for cash oats was slack, and this had a depressing effect on options. December opened 1-4 higher at 50 3-4, sold at 50 5-8, and then advanced to 51 1-8. The close was at 51 1-8. Provisions were strong, owing to small receipts of live hogs, and to the advance in corn. At the close January pork was up 20 cents, lard was 10 cents higher, and ribs were 5@7 1-2 higher.

Cash quotations were as follows: Flour was irregular; winter patents, 4.40@4.75; straights, 3.90@4.65; spring patents, 5.40@5.70; straights, 4.50@5.30; bakers, 3.30@4.30; No. 2 spring wheat, 1.08@1.10; No. 3, 98@1.08; No. 2 red, 96¾@1.01¼; No. 2 corn, 59½; No. 2 yellow, 60@60¼; No. 2 oats, 50¾; No. 3 white, 43½@50½; No. 2 rye, 75@80; good feeding barley, 60@67; fair to choice malting, 75@87; No. 1 northwestern flaxseed, 1.24½; prime timothy seed, 4.50; clover, contract grades, 16.50; short ribs, sides (loose,) 7.37½@8.37½; mess pork, per bbl., 14.12½@14.25; lard, per 100 lbs., 8.60; short clear sides (boxed,) 8.00@8.50; whisky, basis of high wines, 1.25.

New York Cotton Market.

[BY PRIVATE WIRE TO FRED DORR.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—The cotton market failed to hold the improvement that took place late yesterday afternoon. Cables were disappointing as a result of heavy offerings of spot cotton, and the accumulation of stocks in the interior. The visible supply statement had little influence either way. The market opened about eight points lower, and broke further on the census bureau announcement that the complete report showed 4,407,000 bales ginned to October 18th, against 4,931,000 bales last year. Spot cotton is piling up in the interior, and farmers do not find buyers any too plentiful.

King in his report just received says that a continuation of moderate temperatures and generally clear weather the crop will be beyond damages of serious harm from a freeze in November.

In spite of small movement interior stocks are considerable in excess of last year. The visible supply statement is about a stand-off.

The New York cotton exchange makes the decrease in visible of American cotton of 233,000 bales, against 235,000 bales last year.

Spinners' takings 22,000 bales, against 235,000 bales last year. It is quite a coincidence that the supply of American cotton is 2,207,000 bales, or exactly the same as it was at this time last year.

Dr. Zeigler Is Given Judgment for Hundred Thousand Dollars Against McVicker Estate.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Dr. L. U. Zeigler was given judgment for $100,000 today on a verdict rendered for that amount against the estate of Harriet McVicker, widow of the late showman.

Notice was given by counsel for defendants that the upper courts will be asked to review the verdict, and Judge Tuthill fixed the appeal bond at $125,000, and allowed them thirty days in which to file. The points urged by counsel for the defendants (Horace McVicker of New York, a step-son; Mrs. Clara D. Gage of New Jersey, a niece, and the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, trustee of the estate,) were that the court erred in refusing certain instructions.

RUMORS OF FAMILY ROW.

London Barristers Send for Data on Marriage of Earl of Yarmouth to Alice Thaw.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Rumors are again current here of trouble between the Earl and the Countess of Yarmouth, formerly Miss Alice Thaw, sister of Harry K. Thaw.

The rumors were quite general at the time of the first trial of Harry Thaw, and they were revived when a London firm of barristers sent to a Pittsburgh law firm for copies of the marriage of Miss Thaw to the Earl and all information relating to the ceremony.

The Pittsburgh lawyers refuse to discuss the matter, but they do not deny that they have secured the information for the London firm. They say they do not know to what use it is to be put. All data relating to the marriage was sent to London by tonight's mail.

WOMAN SMOTHERS FIRE.

The self possession of Mrs. J. R. Shirvist in smothering the flames caused by the accidental overturning of a lamp in the front of her home, No. 3766 Wall street, last night, saved the house from possible destruction. As Mrs. Shirvist passed through the room the center piece on a small table caught on her dress and the lamp was dragged to the floor. Instantly a blaze started and neighbors sent for the fire department. Mrs. Shirvist smothered the fire with blankets before the fire department arrived. The loss is slight.

You Should Know About This

Our new system of saving is an ideal plan for the accumulation of money, in a safe, conservative manner. It is absolutely devoid of all risk and offers much greater advantages than the average savings bank plan. It has the strong endorsement of every one who has tried it and looked into its merits; you will feel the same way if you will take time to look into it. Call at the bank for a copyrighted folder, or write for one. We gladly answer all questions.

It Works This Way

You deposit a certain sum of money a month, say $10 for a period of seven years—then you can draw out $10 per month for 10 years and 9 months. You lose nothing if you do not continue for the full period of time and your money may be withdrawn with interest in full at any time, should you desire to do so.

Because she knows through her long-time European experience to make order work of every description as it has to be, it is possible for Mrs. Kruseman, milliner, 1302 Pico, corner Rich, to do an exclusive business in that line, which, besides entirely new, includes retrimming and work of your own materials. Mrs. Kruseman takes all responsibility, so that ladies ordering do not run any risk whatever. All her work is strictly and only first class, and as she has not the direct and indirect display expenses, she charges only according to quantity and quality of materials used and work done, and is consequently always reasonable. Close family relations are keeping Mrs. Kruseman posted direct from Paris.

Recollect the sale of 20 lots in the Reed Terrace (Normandie and 29th streets) takes place this morning. Terms are reasonable and sale by auction without reserve. Santa Barbara Function Where His Honor Says Some Things so Kind About the Railroad That Those Who Take Stock in It (the Talk) Think It Is Watered.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA BARBARA, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mayor Harper of Los Angeles and Police Chief Edward Kern of the same city were among the chief guests here this afternoon at a dinner, at which fifty or more Southern Pacific legal lights and politicians were gathered as the guests of Col. Jack H. Harrington, who has charge of the Hope ranch property of the railroad.

A barbecue and trip over the ranch had been arranged, but the rain put the kibosh on the programme. The dinner was substituted. W. F. Herrin, chief of the legal department of the Espee, and recognized as practically the whole works, and A. D. Shepard, president and manager of the Pacific Improvement Company, were leaders among the guests. Others were United States Marshal Leo Youngworth, Mayor Hanford of San Bernardino, Tony Schwamm, Fire Commissioner of Los Angeles, Frank Nutter of the State Institution at San Berdoo, and Charley Hardy of San Diego.

From the North there was Horace G. Platt, one of the best-known lawyer-politicians of the State, and legal adviser of the Pacific Improvement Company; James H. O'Brien, railroad politician and corporation wit, with a stock of yarns that, as some one suggested, if put into a book would make Dooley look like 30 cents, and several other lieutenants and attorneys of the Southern Pacific political forces in the northern metropolis.

Mayor Harper waxed sarcastic in his speech. He said that, as he looked upon the beneficent rain, he felt impelled to return thanks to the Southern Pacific for its bounty; the beautiful hills back of Santa Barbara filled him with gratitude toward the Southern Pacific, while the magnificent ocean came as a gift from the corporation, and finally he desired to return earnest thanks to the railroad for permission to live. After this, it was magnanimous of some one to call out: "Three cheers for the future Governor of California."

An inkling of the real reason of the meeting leaked out in the remarks of the next speaker, who, in an ironical allusion to the claims and airs of the Los Angeles contingent, remarked that "We who live in a village situated within the Golden Gate have heard that you have here today a distinguished lawyer bearing a distinguished name, whose chief aim in life is to promote an amiable understanding between the Pacific Improvement Company and the Southern Pacific."

As every one looked and laughed at Platt, doubtless this shaft was directed at that gentleman. James H. O'Brien reeled off yarn after yarn, without stopping for even a drink between them. The party broke up at 4:30 o'clock, and the various contingents returned to their respective burgs on the evening train.

MAY BUY THREE STEAMERS.

Santa Fe Will Purchase Sierra, Sonoma and Ventura If Hawaii Can Furnish Enough Ties.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The visit of E. O. Faulkner, the Santa Fé's tie expert, to Honolulu, in search of tie-timber, has caused a report that the Santa Fé people are negotiating with the Ocean Steamship Company for the purchase of the steamers Sierra, Sonoma and Ventura.

At the Santa Fé offices here the report was denied, although it was admitted that such action might be taken if it was found that a large supply of railroad ties could be obtained in Hawaii.

The matter has been talked over among Santa Fé officials, but it can be said that no steps will be taken until Faulkner reports on the amount and quality of the timber available.

Faulkner is now investigating the claims of the Honolulu lumber firm which has offered the Santa Fé 2,000,000 ties of a species of eucalyptus which is said to have great wearing power.

ARE YOU MARRIED?

LEGAL KINKS TILT DIVORCE.

Many Couples Married Only Technically.

Failure to Enter Judgment Can Cause Trouble.

Judges Nip Scheme to Hold Back Papers.

Because of the neglect to file judgments in divorce cases in the past scores of couples are living in Los Angeles and hundreds in other cities who are only technically married, although believing themselves to be completely so.

Local attorneys in some cases have tried to "hold up" the final decrees of divorce to force the client to pay their fees, but the judges of the Superior Court have put a stop to this practice, and more care is now taken to have the final decrees entered.

With the rush of divorce cases before the local Superior Court, added interest is being taken in the intricacies of the divorce law and the modes of procedure in court, both as to the granting or refusing of an interlocutory decree and the final judgment.

So many laws have been passed and amended regarding divorce that it is easy for a court officer or attorney to make some technical mistake which would cause trouble if ever called to account in some future action. In fact, it has been the practice in many departments of the local court for a simple minute entry to be made when a divorce is denied. But there is a law which says just what shall be done in such a case. It is Section No. 131 of the Civil Code, and is as follows:

"In actions for divorce the court must file its decision and conclusions of law, as in other cases, and if it determines that no divorce shall be granted, final judgment must be entered accordingly. If it determines that the divorce ought to be granted, an interlocutory judgment must be entered, declaring that the party in whose favor the court decides is entitled to a divorce, and from such interlocutory judgment an appeal may be taken within six months after its entry, in the same manner and with like effect as if the judgment was final."

But this section has not been followed out in many cases, and where decrees have been denied no judgment has been filed, only a minute on the register of actions entered by the clerk of the court.

LEGAL HOLD-UP.

Under the law, where this judgment is not entered, a plaintiff would not be able to start a second suit for divorce until after this first judgment was entered, and, therefore, could be barred out of court until this judgment was filed, should the defendant raise this technical question, and it has been raised more than once and the case postponed until the matter was remedied.

But suppose the judge who denied the decree had in the meanwhile died? It would complicate matters, at least until another judge of the court could take official cognizance and pass a second judgment to be filed.

As a rule, every attorney has a judgment all drawn up for a judge to sign as soon as a decision has been reached by the court. But it is a curious fact that more than one of these judgments have never been filed.

Strange to say, a divorce takes effect, not when the judge verbally pronounces judgment in favor of the party at bar, but when this judgment is made of record.

Because of this fact attorneys have been known to refuse to file the judgment in behalf of their client until their fee was paid. Often a plaintiff hurries on a divorce, with the intention of getting married again as soon as possible. Then along comes the attorney, and says, in effect: "Pay my fee, or remain technically married."

What is a poor body going to do? If they only knew, they have the remedy of going into court and having a new judgment signed by the judge, but they don't know it. They generally pay up, somehow, and get married.

TECHNICALLY MARRIED.

Sometimes through forgetfulness or neglect a judgment has not been filed and after a year the plaintiff married again, believing she was divorced legally. Technically she was a bigamist. Only last week a case came before the Superior Court, where a wife secured a divorce of which her husband was notified. At the end of a year he married again, and is now living in Los Angeles with a new family.

But the first wife needed some money, and she demanded that her former husband pay up on the alimony score. It then came out that the husband had married his second wife before he was technically freed from the first through failure to enter the final decree of judgment.

It is estimated that in such cases there are scores of families in Los Angeles alone who technically have no legal right to be called husband and wife through the operations of this law. In fact, so great was the neglect upon the part of attorneys to have the final decree of divorce filed at the expiration of the interlocutory decree that the judges of the Superior Court have adopted the rule to themselves or through their clerks insist upon the final decree being entered on time.

To the surprise of the judges when this rule recently went into effect many attorneys made a protest. They claimed that the final decree should not be entered until their client had paid their fee. But the judges refused to permit an order of court to be held up to be made a collection agency of.

In County Clerk Keyes's office there is an order by which every man who applies for a marriage license is asked, "Has either party been married before?" If either has and was divorced in this county he or she is forced to prove the filing of their final decree.

But there is one phase of the law regarding appeals from judgment which affects cases where judgment has not been filed even when given. This is an amendment passed on March 20 last by the late unlamented Legislature, and is known as section No. 659 of the Civil Code, and is as follows:

"The party intending to move for a new trial must within ten days after receiving notice of the entry of the judgment, file with the clerk and serve upon the adverse party a motion of his intention, designating the grounds upon which motion will be made," etc.

But when the judgment is not entered, what then?

One of the judges in the Superior Court called attention to the neglect in this matter and ordered it remedied whenever it came before his department.

MILLION AND A HALF DOLLARS GOING INTO STREETS OF CITY.

Year's Work on Los Angeles Thoroughfares Stupendous and Still It Is Piling Up.

LOS ANGELES street improvements during the past ten months have set a pace which has not been equaled by any city in the West, and the prospects are that even this remarkable record will be excelled during the ensuing few months.

Up to the first of October there have been issued assessments on street improvements, including grading, sidewalking, guttering, curbing and asphalt paving, to the amount of $1,039,211.28; while assessments to the amount of $232,042.30 had been issued for new sewers.

It is conservatively estimated that the work now in hand will bring the expenditure for the year up to fully $1,500,000. Applications for new work continue to pile up in the office of the Board of Public Works, and every part of the city is demanding extra speed in the building of permanent highways for their individual neighborhoods.

Packing rock and concrete on East Eleventh

Scenes of the great street paving era in Los Angeles.

The people of this city have become so accustomed to expansion and activities on all sides that scarcely any of them have grasped the importance of this improvement of a great network of highways extending to the farthermost sections of the city. Yet, it is said, not a single city in the West is accomplishing such results in this line as is Los Angeles.

And, most important, every one of these street improvement projects is begun on the initiative of the property owners themselves. They want the work done, and are willing to pay for it, and are generally so anxious to see work started that they keep a delegation in attendance on the City Engineer's office and before the Board of Public Works, to hurry matters along at every possible point.

There is not a single section of Los Angeles that has not felt the activities of street improvements, and notwithstanding the high prices which have prevailed for labor and material, there has been an eagerness for permanent street building that has become a marvel to the watcher of municipal affairs.

Yesterday, Col. W. G. Schreiber, head of the department for opening and widening streets, and Frank Palomares, head of the department of assessments for street improvements, in the bureau of street improvements at the City Hall, made interesting compilations of figures as to the progress of work during the ten months of the present year already passed. The totals were astounding.

OPENING AND WIDENING.

In the department of street opening and widening, Col. Schreiber has carried through the details of improvements of this class on eighteen streets, the total expenditure for which has reached the sum of $297,740.20. He has several large projects well in hand, and others in the formative stage, which represent the outlay of several thousand dollars. The opening of Fourth street through to Alameda street is one of these pieces of work that will soon be completed, and it will cost, in round numbers, $144,000. The widening of Sixteenth street, between Normandie and Arlington, is another extensive job, to cost $51,225.

The assessment district has been arranged for the opening of East Seventh street, between Boyle avenue and the eastern city limits. This district includes the territory between these two points and lying between Hollenbeck and Stephenson avenue.

The assessments per lot on this large district range from 50 cents to $1, but there are numerous lots the ownership of which cannot be determined by Col. Schreiber, and as the defaulting of payment on these assessments puts a cloud upon the title to the property he is anxious to learn the ownership of each parcel of land in this district.

WONDERFUL RECORD.

Look at this record for the past ten months:

Twenty-one and Seventeen-hundredths miles of street grading and graveling.

More than ten miles of asphalt paving.

Forty-eight miles of guttering.

Forty miles of cement sidewalks.

Forty-eight and sixty-four-hundredths miles of sewers.

Assessments for sewers amounted to $232,042.30.

Assessments for paving and other street improvements had reached $1,039,211.28 up to October 1.

The highest record for any one year heretofore was that of 1903, when Ernest Werdin was Street Superintendent, when the total was $886,000. This year it seems certain that the amount for street improvements of all classes will reach more than a million and a half.

So far this year ten important paving jobs have been completed. These include:

Temple street, from Grand to Belmont avenue, $35,701.

Olive street, from Fifth to Pico street, $48,422.

ARBITRARY.

HIGHER RATE HITS LUMBER.

Coast Shippers Prepare to Fight Railroads.

Believe Freight Increase Menaces Industry.

Fifteen Cents a Hundred Pounds Added.

An arbitrary increase in the freight tariffs on lumber for interstate traffic is scheduled to go into effect on all the railroads of the Pacific Coast next Friday. The rate was formulated some weeks ago, and has been checked over by the higher officials and indorsed by them. It has been forwarded to Los Angeles, and it was reported yesterday at the Southern Pacific freight offices that there was no indication other than that the new tariff would go into effect November 1, as per notification.

Lumbermen all along this Coast are alarmed over the prospect, should this rate be allowed to stand. At northern points there has been concerted action among the leading dealers, and they are planning to apply for injunction proceedings to restrain the railways from putting into effect the new rate until there can be a hearing of the lumbermen's cause before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Prominent lumbermen of Los Angeles were appealed to yesterday for aid in this movement, and it is understood they have been asked to take similar steps in Southern California. While they are in full sympathy with the movement to secure a hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is hardly probable that there will be any restraining action undertaken against the railroads here, as it is believed the move of the northern men will answer the purpose of bringing the entire situation before the commission.

Local lumbermen yesterday expressed the belief that the railway companies of their own accord will withhold putting the new rates into effect, because of the strong protest of shippers, and that orders to this purpose will be issued to the freight departments of the shipping points before next Friday.

READY HERE FOR CONTEST.

They declare, however, that they will stand with the northern lumbermen, if it is necessary to come to a contest in the courts; they believe the proposed rate is unjust and dangerous to the lumber industry on the Coast.

If the rate is allowed to stand, it is claimed, it will kill off a promising industry of Southern California—the shipment of enormous amounts of redwood timber to the Southwest and sections of the Middle West.

Lumbermen here have an ambition to make Los Angeles the main distributing point for redwood throughout this vast territory. They claim that, with proper railroad rates, they have natural conditions which are certain to make of this city and San Pedro, its port, centers of the redwood business.

L. W. Blinn, president of the Blinn-Robinson Lumber Company, yesterday discussed the general situation, and spoke of the possibilities of expansion in this city for the lumber business, if it is not choked off by excessive freight rates.

GREAT DISTRIBUTING CENTER.

"I have cherished an ambition to make of Los Angeles a great distributing point for redwood," said he. "We have worked at a disadvantage in entering the fields of the Middle West, and have slowly gained a footing, until there was a bright prospect of the redwood shipments developing into a most important feature of the lumber business.

"Southern California is naturally a great dry-kiln where the redwood can be cured to good advantage and at a nominal cost. This drying through the natural climatic conditions is far superior to the work of an artificial dry-kiln, and dealers have begun to take advantage of this condition by storing large quantities of materials for drying, after which they are to be shipped East from San Pedro and Los Angeles.

"There are several firms here who have planned to develop this line of commerce; but with this new rate to meet they are given no opportunity. It is arbitrary, unjust, and I do not believe it will stand.

"The situation is alike discouraging to wholesalers all along the Coast. It will have a tendency to discourage the use of western lumber, and thus will open the markets of the Southwest and Middle West to the lumber of the Southern States. Our redwood and pines will be displaced by the cypress and southern pines, unless this obstacle of stiff freight rates is removed.

"I believe that after the trade is properly exploited, the redwood shipments going out from this gateway would easily reach 100,000,000 feet a year, and that Los Angeles would become a prominent lumber center, if given a fair showing in the matter of rates."

LARGE LOCAL INTERESTS.

There are at least six large concerns, the Consolidated Lumber Company, the National Lumber Company, the E. K. Wood Company, the San Pedro Lumber Company, the Southern California Lumber Company and the Blinn-Robinson Company, which have entered the interstate shipping field with considerable success. Their shipments from Los Angeles and connecting ports have become important, with the prospect of much greater development within the ensuing year, had there been a maintenance of normal conditions.

The sore point with the lumbermen is the fact that under present conditions the railroads have the power to make a new tariff and apply it without a day's notice to the lumbermen, and without giving them a single opportunity to present their claims for consideration.

FIFTEEN CENTS HUNDRED.

The increase in rates which it is proposed to put into effect here next Friday amounts on an average to 15 cents on 100 pounds. The change was first proposed by the northern railroads, operating in the Puget Sound country, and this was quickly followed by a similar schedule for the roads of this section. Meanwhile, however, it appears that several of the concerns had sent shiploads of lumber to the southern ports with the expectation of thus avoiding the excessive rates of the North—only to find that after their arrival here they have the same conditions to meet, and also have put upon their lumber the extra freight tariff for water carriage.

RECLAMATION.

FINDS WATER FOR INDIANS.

Government Officer Here Is at Head of Task.

Engineer Code Helps Make Ranchers of Redskins.

More Than Million Dollars for This Year's Work.

Few persons in Los Angeles know that from a room in an office building on South Broadway are issued instructions relative to the entire government irrigation work on the Indian reservations of the West. Under the supervision of Chief Engineer W. H. Code, the occupant of the room, vast projects are being carried on that ultimately will give the dusky-skinned wards of the government incomparable advantages for following the peaceful pursuit of agriculture.

Without cost to the Indians, the Department of the Interior has intelligently outlined its plans for the reclamation of millions of acres included in the reservations of the West. For the present fiscal year, there is available an appropriation of $1,200,000 Seven years ago $50,000 was thought ample for similar projects.

Engineer Code works directly under the supervision of James R. Garfield, Secretary of the Interior. He is responsible for the consummation of the plans approved at Washington. While occasionally to be found in his headquarters in this city, Code is absent much of the year, inspecting work that extends from Montana to Washington in the north, and from Arizona to the southwest line of this State. He says he travels thousands of miles nearly every month and is kept constantly alert to plan the construction work and to see that nothing goes amiss. Even the plans of the most experienced engineers sometimes go wrong. Floods may undermine foundations; laborers may be scarce, materials may be lacking in some particular that threatens the absolute security of a dam or reservoir.

WORK OF RESPONSIBILITY.

The chief engineer, who has so much responsibility on his shoulders, is a man of unassuming manners, but full of his life's work, and intensely devoted to the department he represents. He makes his home in Hollywood, but is seldom able to enjoy the pleasures of suburban life, owing to his frequent calls to field service.

When seen by a Times man yesterday, he stated that he had never before been visited by a newspaper man.

"Our work, while very important, is very technical," said he. "The public probably knows little of this department of the Indian service. But it is one branch of the splendid work inaugurated by the Washington authorities represented by Secretary Garfield and Commissioner of Indian Affairs Francis A. Leupp. Although our work in this State is comparatively small, it nevertheless is very important."

Commissioner Leupp, on his last visit to this city, said the government was gradually giving up its role of paternalism. The present plan is to make the Indians independent. Small farms will be given them outside the reservations, whenever the individual Indian shows he has the capacity for managing a farm without government aid. But most of the Indians will continue on the reservations. One of the great drawbacks in times past has been the lack of water. With the scheme of government reclamation work for the sole benefit of the Indians, it is believed by the authorities that Poor Lo will soon be known as "Rich Lo."

INDIAN FARMER REMOTE.

It doubtless will take years before the Indian becomes a success as a practical farmer, although there today are many instances of his ability in that line. But the government is building for the future, and the projects for transforming desert wastes into fields of grain and fruit are being worked out for the Indian as well as for the white man.

According to Chief Engineer Code, the recently-inaugurated policy of the government in throwing open to settlement various reservations of the West, has called for large appropriations of money by Congress in order that the water rights of the Indians may be protected through the construction of canal systems for the proper irrigation of their allotments.

"In Arizona, approximately $500,000 will be expended in furnishing the Pimas on the Gila River Reservation with a proper water supply," said Code yesterday. "This will be obtained by a combination of gravity canals diverting flood waters of the Gila River, supplemented by a number of directly-connected electrically-operated centrifugal pumpign plants drawing upon the abundant underground supply.

"Arrangements have been perfected whereby the Indians on this reservation will ultimately become members of the Water Users' Association of the Salt River Valley, since they will obtain the necessary electrical power for pumping purposes from the Salt River project, now under process of construction by the Reclamation Service.

WATER SCARCE HERE.

"The California reservations, though small, offer many problems to the engineer whose duty it is to secure the needed water supply. On some of these reservations, nothing short of the rod of Moses could furnish a good head of water for irrigation purposes.

"A small gravity canal system has recently been completed on the Pala Reservation, with the exception of distributing laterals, which are about to be constructed. The main canal, which is cement-lined, has a capacity sufficient for the irrigation of 1000 acres, and ultimately will supply water to the irrigable lands on each side of the San Luis Rey River. The Pala Indians furnished the labor necessary to perform this work, under the supervision and leadership of a few competent white men.

"Investigations are under way on other reservations in this State, with a view to assisting the Indians in obtaining water by the expenditure of moneys from the special appropriation of $100,000, obtained for the benefit of the Indians of Southern California through the efforts of Senator Frank P. Flint.

"On the Morongo Reservation, near Banning, investigations are under way to determine the feasibility of constructing a pipe line for power purposes, to operate a centrifugal pumping plant for developing a supplementel supply of underground water for irrigation purposes.

"On the Pechanga reservation, near Temecula, the Indians will be furnished with a domestic water supply, either by means of water piped from springs on the reservation, or by bored wells.

WELLS FOR INDIO COUNTRY.

"Additional artesian wells are contemplated for the several reservations near Indio. There are now twenty-seven of such wells, which were installed by the department some five years ago, and to them the Indians of the Cabezon, Torros, Martinez and Alamo Bonito settlements owe their present degree of prosperity.

W. H. Code,
chief engineer of Indian Irrigation Service, now located in this city.

"In Idaho a project is under way for the irrigation of some 30,000 acres in the Fort Hall reservation, and 12,000 acres in the vicinity of Pocatello, belonging to homesteaders. This work will cost approximately $600,000.

"The Indian reservations in Montana are among the largest in the West, hence the irrigation works are proportionately large. Nearly $1,000,000 has been expended in the last twelve years on the Crow reservation, and lateral canal construction is still being carried on. This system is one of the finest in the West, and the Crow Indians furnished both funds and the common labor necessary for its construction.

"The Blackfoot reservation, Montana, will soon be opened, and Congress has made an initial appropriation of $300,000 for irrigation purposes.

"A canal system, to cost about $75,000, is being constructed on the Tongue River reservation, Montana, for the benefit of the Northern Cheyenne Indians. This is the tribe that participated in the Custer massacre, and was subsequently banished to the remote reservation named. They are now peacefully following scrapers, performing pick and shovel work and assisting carpenter forces.

SOON OPEN TO PUBLIC.

"The beautiful Flathead reservation also will be opened to the public within a short time, and large irrigation projects are under consideration for this choice section of Montana.

"In Nevada, work is being prosecuted on the construction of an irrigation system on the former Walker River reservation, which will cost approximately $75,000.

"Surveys and investigations are now being made on the Klamath reservation, Oregon, with a view to expending $130,000 of tribal moneys in irrigation and drainage canals.

"Congress appropriated $600,000 for the irrigation of the allotments made to the Ute Indians of the former Uintah reservation. Canals are built as rapidly as the remote section permits of.

"The great Yakima reservation, located in the heart of one of the richest sections in the country, will soon be thrown open to settlement. The engineers of the Indian Service have been engaged for several years in constructing canals for the irrigation of these lands, and, due to a recent act of Congress, whereby the Indian, as well as his white brother, will be allowed to obtain the benefits of the Reclamation Act, it is probable that approximately 75,000 acres of irrigable lands will be reclaimed by means of the large storage reservoirs and canals now under process of construction.

BIG ANNUAL APPROPRIATION.

"For the irrigation of allotments belonging to the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians, on the Wind River reservation, Wyoming, Congress is making special annual appropriations of approximately $150,000 toward the building of a system which will cost about $700,000.

"In New Mexico on the Zuñi reservation, the government is constructing a large combination loose-rock and hydraulic-earth-fill dam for the purpose of creating a reservoir for storing the flood waters of the Zuñi River. The maximum height of this dam is seventy feet above the stream channel, and its length on top approximately 500 feet. The common labor entering into its construction has been chiefly Indian to date, the Navajo, Zuñi and Pueblo tribes furnishing the greater proportion of men.

"This character of construction requires that the Indians be taught to work with derrick and hoisting engines, operate steam drills, perform concrete mixing and trench excavation, and become more or less familiar with the hydraulic process of depositing the earth fill comprising the upstream portion of the dam. This work of the Indians is, of course, conducted under the supervision of a competent engineer and foreman, assisted by a sprinkling of skilled white labor. J. B. Harper is the engineer in direct charge of the work, and at different periods during its construction James D. Schuyler of this city and W. H. Saunders of the Reclamation Service have visited the works in the capacity of consulting engineers."

TO WORK SIX DAYS A WEEK.

OLD DOMINION COMPANY WILL HAVE NEW SCHEDULE.

Wages of Arizona Miners May Be Reduced—Heavy Rainfall in Territory—Miner Drops Cigarette Into Box of Powder—Wounded Boy Has Premonition of Accident.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

GLOBE (Ariz.) Oct. 26.—Following the lead of the Bisbee mines, the Old Dominion company has put into effect a six-day working period, instead of the continuous shifts heretofore in operation. It is expected that this move will be followed by all other companies in this district. It is announced that the smelter will be run on the same schedule as before, and that the output will be decreased little, if any. About 2000 men are now employed by the Old Dominion company.

Prof James Douglas, president of the Phelps-Dodge Company, lately visited Globe, inspecting the Old Dominion property, in which his company has a large interest. He stated that the copper surplus in the country, now amounts to over 200,000,000 pounds, and that the only remedy for the congestion is a curtailment of production. This curtailment has been general, and now it is probable that production is materially lighter than consumption. One of his most suggestive statements was: "A readjustment of wages is to be expected in the copper camps, and, in all probability, the initiative will be taken by the companies at Butte, Mont., in conformity with the agreement made by the Amalgamated Copper Company with its employés when the present wage scale was established. However, in my opinion, reduction of wages is the last remedy that should be resorted to by the companies in order to reëstablish a sound basis of operation."

Prof. Douglas stated that the cost of copper production had risen 33 per cent. in the past two years, due to the increased cost of labor, machinery, lumber, fuel and all supplies. A couple of years ago the average cost of producing copper was about 9 cents a pound, and now he believes it is fully 12 cents.

AMBUSHED.

David James, manager and one of the owners of the Globe Electric Light, Gas and Power Company, was ambushed Mondy night on his way to the electric light works, by a horseman, who rode up to him and almost thrust a pistol against his victim's body as the shot was fired. James managed to stagger into the office of the electric light works, and now, is in the hospital in a critical condition. Despite the severity of his wound, which is through the stomach, James has not lost consciousness, and has talked intelligently with the officers concerning the crime. He has positively identified Henry S. Buckner as his assailant. Ranger Anderson trailed the horseman out of Globe and into the hills, often being compelled to dismount and search for the horse's hoof prints with the aid of matches. He found Buckner at Miami Flat, and arrested him, finding on him a revolver with three empty chambers. Buckner absolutely denies guilt, and claims to have been in a mining camp at the time of the shooting, and to be able to furnish an alibi. There had been trouble between the two men over a mining claim.

SWOLLEN RIVERS.

Last week heavy rains made swollen rivers through all of Central Arizona. In the Gila Valley and around Clifton about six inches of rain fell during the week. The irrigation system near Safford was entirely put out of business. Many thousands of dollars of damage was done. There were several small washouts along the Gila Valley and Globe Railroad, but they were soon repaired. The excavation at the dam at Roosevelt was flooded, but the work has reached such a stage that little damage could be done. Rainfall is continuing, however, and the month will be known as the wettest October in the history of the county.

ARIZONA NOTES.

At the Pearl shaft of the Ray Copper Company, near Kelvin, Romualdo Leyvas last Sunday managed to drop a lighted cigarette into a box of powder which he was carrying. In the resultant explosion the man was blown into fragments down the hill, and Edwardo Castillo had both legs broken.

John M. Hall is to sue the Gila Valley, Globe and Northern Railroad Company for heavy damages, because of an accident on June 23 last, when a gasoline track car on which he was riding, left the rails near Solomonville. At the time Hall was employed by the company in a surveying party, but had been in its employ only three days when the accident occurred. In 1898 he served as a member of the Rough Riders, and was seriously wounded at San Juan. The accident has entirely disabled his left leg.

Charles Baker, 12 years old, was seriously wounded last Thursday near Roosevelt, by a young companion, Alfred Wallingford, with whom he was on a quail hunt. An odd feature was that Baker at first had refused to leave home that morning, stating that he was sure something would happen to him if he did.

Edward Hodges, held in Globe for burglary, is eagerly awaiting the District Court term that he may plead guilty, and thus be sent to the Yuma Penitentiary, where he expects to be cured of the morphine habit. Hodges is a young man of good appearance and education, but has descended to theft in order to provide himself with the drug.

O. Starke, a local tailor, has disappeared, and is reported to be short $1500 in his local accounts.

C. C. Bryant, a handsome young telegraph operator, a week ago announced to his friends that he was going to Chihuahua to wed a handsome young Spanish girl. A few days later a quiet young lady registered at a Globe hotel as Mrs. C. C. Bryant of Denver, Colo. She states that she was married to Bryant about nine years ago in Terre Haute, Ind., and that he deserted her in Chihuahua, taking with him their little daughter. She does not want the husband, but she wants the child.

The Elks lodge at Globe is to have its own building and hall, to cost about $25,000. To this sum $11,000 already has been subscribed among the members.

James Ewing has been elected president of the Globe Chamber of Commerce, and Alfred A. Cohn secretary.

CHAIN GANG WILL CLEAN.

The city chain gang will be used to assist in cleaning up the city. Yesterday it was announced that members of the gang will go into the oil section in the Westlake district on Monday and drain sump holes. In many places in the fine residence district oil has been allowed to stand for months—a blotch on the landscape. At times of heavy rain the oil seaps across sidewalks and into gutters.

November's Offering.

The Friday Morning Club has issued an attractive programme for November. It opens with a lecture on "The Canadian Rockies," illustrated with stereopticon views, and given by that expert of the sky line, Herbert W. Gleason.

The Ebell Club had a chance last season to hear ex-Consul General E. C. Bellows on Japan, or at least as much of his extensive knowledge as could be compressed into a short afternoon. On November 8, the Friday Morning Club will hear him in a lecture entitled, "Japan and America," which will be sure to touch vital points in no uncertain manner.

Especially interesting will be the morning of November 15, when Harry Mestayer will read one of Ibsen's later plays, which has never been produced in Los Angeles. Book Day will be occupied by Mrs. Mary Holland Kinkaid, who will speak of "The Manners of Women," by Henry James, and by a discussion of clubhouse plans illustrated with stereopticon views.

The circle will welcome visitors from other circles to hear Mr. Murphy, who is a thorough student and friend of the boys.

Ebell Departments.

Ebell departments now number ten, and the membership for the new season varies from twenty to one hundred each. All the opening meetings have been marked with large and enthusiastic attendance. The popular department of Books and Conversation under the leadership of Mrs. Sumner P. Hunt began a comparative study of modern literature with the old and familiar standards. Mrs. Hunt has been assisted in the arrangement of the year's programme by Mrs. Stephen P. Wilder, and Mrs. Eugene Pettigrew. At the opening meeting Mrs. C. N. Flint reviewed Dr. Thompson's late book, "Brain and Personality." Mrs. W. L. Jones reviewed and compared Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer," and "Candida," by Bernard Shaw.

The department of Art and Travel with Mrs. A. J. Chandler as curator and Miss Alice Mitton as instructor, began the study of French art at the time of Louis XVI, for the first meeting, when interesting papers were read by Mrs. Allison Barlow, Mrs. S. A. Keese, and Mrs. George V. Horr.

The department of Music under the leadership of Mrs. Edwin G. Voight began the season with the "Music of France from 1100." The following programme of papers and musical selections was rendered: "Saint Saens," Miss Mattie Wilson; "Group of Modern French Composers," Miss Florence Riley; "Hector Berlioz," Mrs. W. S. Marshall; "Gounod," Miss Emma Parsons; piano solo, "The Flatterer," by Mrs. H. L. Harris; solo, "Salome" (Massanet,) by Mrs. Katherine Kimball Forest; piano solo by Godard, Mrs. James Irving; and 'La Marseillais," by Miss Florence Riley.

This year the department of French will embrace two distinct study classes and an advanced class for French prose and composition. Mrs. E. C. Bellows, assisted by Mrs. Philip Newmark, will have charge of this department, with Prof. Dunerin as instructor.

The department of Shakespeare began the study of "Two Gentlemen of Verona," a scene from the first act being given by Mrs. George V. Horr, and Mrs. Wayne Smith. The scene between Portia and Nerissa, from the "Merchant of Venice" was given by Mrs. O. H. Morgan. The new section of Ebell, that of Expression, had a varied and original beginning with a programme of debate, story-telling and extempore speeches.

Cosmos Club.

At the last meeting of the Cosmos Club, held at the Ebell Club House, Mrs. Emma M. Greenleaf gave an interesting talk on "Some Clubs, and Some Others, and How They Differ." TOOK SUICIDE ROUTE.

James Griffin, Who Died Suddenly at Police Station, Found to Have Swallowed Poison.

An investigation of the effects of James Griffen, who died at the Receiving Hospital Thursday, brought to light evidence of his intent to commit suicide. This is the note he left:

"Please tell my wife, who lives at No. 1004½ South Main street, that I forgive her what she has done me and hope she will forgive me.

"Please tell my people, No. 1291 South Port street, Chicago.

"Whisky was the cause of it all."

Griffen left the note at a rooming-house where he had been staying.

The man staggered into the Police Station Wednesday night and asked to be locked up. He had been drinking heavily. He was carefully searched at the time, but managed to carry a small bottle of poison into jail with him.

On Thursday morning, upon his request, he was sent to jail for three days in order to sober up. That afternoon he drank the poison and later complained of being sick. He was sent to the Receiving Hospital, where he died a few minutes later. At an inquest Friday night the presence of the poison was discovered.

HONORS FOR FISCHER.

Stationary Engineers Celebrate His Election as Vice-President of National Organization.

The local chapter of the National Association of Stationary Engineers celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of its organization with a banquet and literary programme at Turner Hall Friday night. More than 700 persons participated. The affair was given especially in honor of Fred J. Fischer, who has been elected national vice-president, and of the delegates who have just returned from the national association held at Niagara Falls.

There were toasts and responses, in which members of the association and of the Ladies' Auxiliary participated. The hall was beautifully decorated.

The association has more than 500 members and occupies a high place in the estimation of business and professional men. It advocates a thorough understanding and coöperation between employers and employés, and indulges in no strikes or boycotts.

The Los Angeles delegation to the national convention went with the avowed purpose of securing the election of Fischer to the vice-presidency, and it also assisted in securing next year's convention for Denver. It is believed many of the delegates will visit California after making the trip to Denver.

SOUSA AND THE PEDANTS.

Let the musical pedants and pettifoggers rail at Sousa! His answer is to pack the immense Auditorium four times in two days as it had never been packed before.

In literature, in journalism and in other walks of life the pedants, the pettifoggers and the disappointed theorists are always carping at the successful—and the successful continue to make hits. To be scoffed at by the sore is the penalty of achievement.

Is it not amusing to notice that almost invariably the most forward in assuming the role of a pretentious censor are those with least warrant for the job by reason of performance or standing?

The originator of the lecture on "How to Make Money" had to beg his old railroad friend for a free pass to the town of his first engagement. The fellows who constantly lecture on how to make a newspaper are those who have fallen down miserably in trying to make one.

The musical demagogues who declare that Sousa knows nothing about music are not appreciated by the public. That's what ails them.

Go to, go to, all ye failures and pretenders!

CUBAN CONVULSIVES.

The American who has returned from the island of Cuba and brought back with him a scientific classification of the people of the Pearl of the Antilles into liberals, conservatives and convulsives,* has conferred upon us two great favors, the lesser being his invention of the word "convulsives" to characterize part of the people of that island. It will fit in handy in more ways than one in these new days of transition of thought, of muckrakers in journalism and yellow magazines. It is exactly the word the world has been waiting for to describe the hysterical characteristics of a large portion of the human race.

The American traveler's greater favor is giving us a pretty exact insight into the condition of affairs in that disturbed country. Most of us know too little of the characteristics of the Cuban people. A great many consider them all mezzo-tints, uneducated, and little above the status of the savage. A few regard the population of Cuba as being about like what one would find at home. This observer of affairs in the island judiciously classifies these people, and if we only knew with some degree of accuracy the ratio which the liberals, the conservatives and the "convulsives" bear to the total population, our knowledge would be now quite specific.

Of course the conservatives are the smaller numerical proportion of the people, but they are undoubtedly the most important in relation to the stability of things Cuban; they are the "captains of industry" and the men of achievement, on whose capital, wisdom and energy the present and the future of the country very largely depend.

The liberals probably comprise a much larger number of the Cuban people. They are probably persons of average intelligence. They are probably industrious, quiet people, who are engaged in important affairs. But they are largely led by a few politicians to whom public office is not a public trust except in the sense of the monopolistic trust of our time, which exploits everything for its own individual benefit.

The "convulsives" seem to be men "of the baser sort," who conceive that any motion must bring them to a more or less higher level upon the wheel of fortune. Their business is to disturb the existing condition of things, being at the other pole from the conservatives, who want to let well enough alone.

The returned American tells us that these "convulsives" misconceive and misconstrue the attitude of the American government toward Cuba. Our patience and lenient disposition in regard to political and other offenses, he says, are taken to indicate cowardice and weakness on our part. The Cuban who forms this conception of America and Americans of course is a man of an ignorance so dense that it marks him as little better than a savage. These are the mezzo-tints of the island, partly aborigines, largely of negro blood, with a little sprinkling of Spanish and of nearly every other strain, including Chinese and Japanese.

The fate of Cuba rests in the hands of the Cuban people. It is approaching close to a decade since we intervened and wrung their liberty for their own benefit from Spain. We had no purpose at that time, and we have had none since, of annexing the island of Cuba. It was not pure philanthropy which inspired our action leading to the liberation of the Cuban people. The conditions of everlasting revolt against Spain and internal turmoil constituted a dangerous menace right at our national doors. It was to remove this menace to our own peace and quiet that we entered into that uncongenial war with Spain. Our intervention in the island has been at all times for this identical purpose. As long as Cuba remains quiet and the Cubans go about their political, commercial and industrial business in such a way as not to disturb the peace on this side of the narrow seas, they will be left to manage their affairs as they see fit.

But the Cubans must understand clearly that there is no element of weakness in the United States, and no cowardly characteristics in the American people. They must not mistake the kindness, the leniency and forbearance of our government. If we have to take a hand in the unpleasant task of suppressing nuisances in Cuba and preserving the peace there too often, we shall probably do it once for all, and in a way that, while entirely effective, may not be entirely pleasant.

FAT MEN AND JOBS.

We have it upon the authority of the Philadelphia Record that employment agents declare it is almost impossible to obtain a job for fat men; they are regarded as beings as undesirable in industries as are the gray-haired. The employers are said to hold that the fat man is indolent. "The hustler, the fast, nervous, energetic worker, is sinewy, rather than fat, and does 30 per cent. more work than the soft, fat fellow."

The employment agents of Philadelphia need further experience. The people of the United States have a different conception of the value of fat men and lean. We employ a man every four years to hold down the biggest job in the whole wide world from his place of business in the White House. We have made this choice thirty times over since we have been in the business of governing ourselves, and in these elections we have chosen about a score of different men to do the work. It will be acknowledged by all that the work has been done well in almost all instances.

Now, how many of this score of servants of the public who performed the strenuous duties of this office have been "long and lank and brown and as the ribbed sea sand?" How many of them have been of the type of "that lean Cassius," and on the contrary, how many of them have been like Marc Antony, "sleek-headed men and such as sleep o' nights?" To be sure, the one who is considered by many to be the greatest of them all was of the lean and sinewy type; and certainly the lack of adipose upon the frame of the great Lincoln indicated no lack of brains, moral conscientiousness nor tenderness of heart. Whatever is to be said of that part of him which is of the flesh, certainly the spirit was great.

But count the rest of them, from Washington to Roosevelt, and while perhaps few of them were soft and flabby, most of them were certainly rotund, with plenty of good adipose tissue to cover up their nervous system and guard their heart from being exposed for "daws to peck at." Grover Cleveland attended to the duties of the job in a decidedly capable manner, and surely he was far from being "lean and sinewy." The present energetic incumbent is not of the soft type, either in physical frame or mental make-up, but neither is he of the lank and sinewy tribe. He is rotund and well filled out.

The people are already looking out for a man to hold down this job, and it is a big one, from the fourth day of March, 1909, to the same date in 1913. There are several seekers after this job. Both physical types are represented. We have the distinguished Vice-President, on whose spare frame even buttermilk cocktails fail to build up adipose. We have the very distinguished Secretary of War, who tips the beam at about 330. There is no hesitation in the minds of the people of this great nation, who know more than all the employment agents in Philadelphia. When it comes to engaging "the hired man" to perform these strenuous duties for four years, there will be no advice to Taft to practice "banting" so as to bring himself down to a condition to run foot races with Fairbanks. Taft has proven his ability to do things under the most trying circumstances, and carry all his weight with an easy grace that is perfectly charming. In spite of his avoirdupois, there is nothing soft or flabby about any fiber of William Howard Taft's make-up, bodily, mental or spiritual.

SHORTSIGHTED LEADERS.

If it be true that leaders in both Houses of Congress have declared that laws for the regulation of corporations along the lines suggested by President Roosevelt will not be enacted—that Congress will refuse to do what the President asks and the country demands—it would appear that Congress has made a foolish choice of leaders.

Nothing is plainer than the determination of the people of the United States to put an end to the reckless, disorderly, irresponsible conduct of business affecting the public by chartered companies owing their existence to grants of privilege and powers belonging to the public. President Roosevelt has interpreted the popular demand for correction of the defects in the system and for rational regulation of quasi-public servants, and his suggestion that corporations doing interstate business should be under national control is generally approved by the people. If Congress refuses to consider any plan for taking away from corporation-owned States like New Jersey the power of issuing letters of marque to financial buccaneers, and for establishing a uniform system of creating corporations by act of the national Legislature, it will find itself in conflict with the popular will.

There is nothing extreme or unreasonable in the President's proposal that interstate corporations operate under Federal charters and be subject to Federal regulation, and so far as the railroads are concerned the change probably would be welcomed as a relief. The leaders of Congress will do well to take second thought before committing themselves to a policy of obstruction.

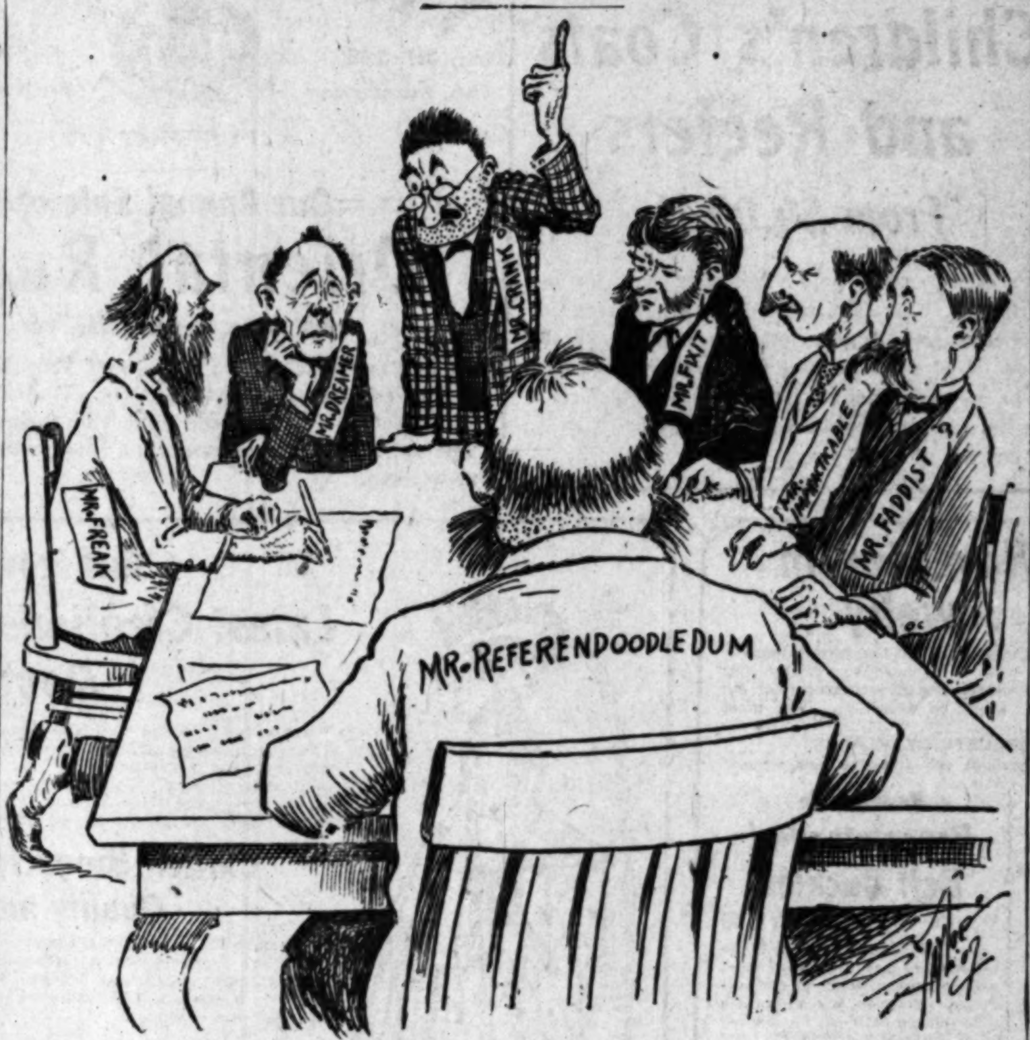
THE CITY OF DESIRE.

A commissioner of The Times, who has recently traveled into the little-known interior of Utah, was impressed with the intense interest manifested there in everything that pertains to Los Angeles. Moreover, he found that there was a deep-seated desire among those he met en route, on his way back, to so arrange their affairs that they might some day make Los Angeles their home. He found men who were working hard to make money that they might acquire a competency through which they would be enabled to spend at least their declining years with us in the Metropolis of Delight.

At all times Los Angeles has found it profitable to expend large sums of money in advertising her advantages with the purpose of inducing people to come here to reside. A great many of our business men have worked very hard for more than twenty years past to upbuild a great city beneath the shadow of these hills that look down upon the Sunset Sea. Their reward has come at last. Los Angeles is now great. The one thought of untold thousands between the two oceans, and as well among dwellers in foreign lands, is to come to Los Angeles to live and work and weave with destiny on the woof of success.

One thinks with wonder of the progress of the past; but what is it compared with the progress which the future will record? What is the splendid city of today compared with the fair, sun-kissed giant of the days that are to be? Men and women will prefer to live where life is worth the living. They will prefer to spend their days and rear their children where God has made hill and valley bright with flowers and blossom, and soft with the breath of the sea the whole year round. People will not remain in a climate that they have to fight against two-thirds of the time, if there is any way for them to escape it and still prosper. And prosper they can, here—now and in time to come. We face the Pacific with its immeasurable opportunities; we stand in the very center of what is to be the circle of the world's activities. No wonder, then, that Los Angeles is the city of desire, and that the heart of the continent turns to her with longing.

FOR A CHARTER-FRAMING BOARD—WHAT SEEMS TO BE THE PREVAILING IDEAL.



WHEN THE RAIN COMES.

"California: Where Sets the Sun."

THE hills are all athirst, and brown they rise
Against the blue magnificence of skies;
Like giant vast each lifts his mighty head;
The grasses lying on their shoulders dead,
As if growth were forgotten and old Time
Had ceased to feed his children with the thyme
Of fruitfulness. No root is there astir,
Sweet Nature feels no pulse abeat for her
Upon those hills beyond us, where we see
Her in deep trance of stirless mystery;
There she will lie like a dead goddess till
The skies are clouded, and its great cisterns fill
With rush of waters, and the blessed Rain
Moistens her lips and sets athrob again
Her silent pulses; then, O then shall we
Her new life wakening into beauty see.
The miracle of growth will meet our eyes,
And earth be fairer than her shining skies.

Clothed in fresh garments of the richest green,
Jeweled with flowers will Nature then be seen,
Her face as fair as young life ever shows,
Lovely with lily and with blushing rose,
Her breath as fragrant as the Summer's own,
Which comes to us o'er beds of blossoms blown.
And O the glory of her rain-washed skies!
Illimitable in deepness to our eyes,
Looking as if through some wide, unseen door
We might find God and walk forevermore
Through the great Vast above us, shining clear,
A realm of light, a flowing atmosphere
Of untold glory. Then the Earth is fair,
The hills like gods rise glorious everywhere,
The plains smile like a child in beauty dressed,
And all our world is wed to loveliness.

ELIZA A. OTIS.

ROBBING THE DEAD.

The World's Events Magazine tells a story of a Chicago clergyman who was advertised to preach a sermon on charity. The eloquent divine announced as his text, "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and look, that which he layeth out shall be paid to him again." To make it emphatic he repeated this excellent text three times over and then delivered his sermon as follows:

"Now, my beloved brethren, you hear the terms of this loan. If you like the security, down with the dust."

And there ended the discourse.

Undoubtedly this text and this comment upon it should have produced unusual results. There was no long-winded business in the appeal. But if it be true that the Chicago preacher delivered this sermon upon his text, he is guilty of robbing the dead.

The story has been told, to the knowledge of many people for the last 100 years at least, of Dean Swift, the dreamer whose brains evolved Gulliver's Travels—the alleged poet and acknowledged political lampoonist. The story is that the witty Dean of St. Patrick's cathedral, Dublin, which adorns the banks of the Liffey and keeps green the memory of the patron saint of Ireland, was to deliver a sermon in that beautiful temple for the benefit of a charity school. The pupils were all present, occupying the front seats in the cathedral, when Swift arose in the pulpit, announced this identical text, and delivered this identical appeal almost in these identical words.

The Chicago preacher should certainly be excommunicated from the funny association of American humorists.

NECESSITY OF CAREFUL BANKING.

We have all heard bitter complaint during recent months about the way the bankers of the country were conducting their business. The allegation has been reiterated by many mouths that they were holding back too large a proportion of their funds instead of encouraging business enterprises by making more liberal loans. These complaints did not come from children, women or the average laboring man little accustomed to dealing with bankers or to handle large sums of money. They have come in many instances from men of mature years, men of large experience in dealing with banks and in handling their own money. At the bottom of this complaint has often laid disappointment, not that solid business enterprises had been discouraged by the banks, but that rash speculation, especially in real estate, had been checked by this policy.

It is possibly a work of supererogation to spend time and space in correcting this false notion. Probably many of those who indulged in this criticism knew better. It was generally the outgrowth of personal disappointment. The man who entered into obligations to pay money with full assurance that he would be able to borrow it when needed and found himself in an impasse was not in a pleasant frame of mind, and had not too agreeable sentiments toward the banker who had refused him the accommodation.

But futile as may be any attempt to correct these notions, there is a large class of the community who do continually need enlightenment upon subjects such as this. The criticism of those who know better or ought to know better creates an impression in the minds of inexperienced people who, being thus impressed, visit upon the banks a condemnation for bringing about slacking conditions of business from which the wage earner must suffer. The banks are not responsible for this in any way.

Take the facts. The recent reports of the national banks made to the Comptroller of the Currency showed that in a year the bankers have increased their loans between $3 and $4 for every dollar of increase they had received in deposits. This criticism has developed since the cry for money became so loud and urgent. The banks are much less open to this style of criticism than they were a year ago. This fact applies to the national banks of all the large financial centers in the United States. It would be quite as true if reports were available covering all the banks of all kinds in the country. It is only reasonable to foresee that this would be the case. The banks are in business, as manufacturing corporations are, as retail stores are, and as the salary man and wage earner are. It is all a matter of making money, but the bank makes no money upon the reserves held to meet the checks of depositors. The only money it earns is on the funds loaned and earning interest. And so at all times the banks loan all the funds that there is demand for up to the point they consider safe, looking at the interests of the depositors and the general interests of the whole population.

Indeed, the just form of criticism to which some banks are susceptible is that they overstep the bounds of safety and loan, not too small a ratio of their deposits, but too large a ratio. The banks that have gone by the board during the past week have all been guilty, not of loaning too little money, but too much. Months ago The Times obtained an exhibit of the condition of the banks in New York City. Taking these financial institutions in the aggregate, it was shown that for commercial institutions alone their reserves were down to the very last fraction of the danger point, 25 per cent. of their total deposits. It was pointed out that the condition was exceedingly critical. It meant that perhaps half a dozen of all the commercial banks of that great financial center were in a safe condition, having 30 per cent. of their deposits in the reserve fund, and upward. It meant that scores of these institutions were away below the danger point. The figures showed, without any room for doubt, that if the mentary notions of

was extremely critical.

In ordinary times

THE LANCER.

FOR two or three days last week the prosperity of the country seemed to be in peril, and there was a panic in New York. Suddenly the panic was allayed, and the press told the people that the saviors of the situation were the plutocrats, Morgan, Rockefeller and Uncle Sam, who poured a Mississippi of gold into Wall street, and prevented the failure of big banking-houses.

Any one who chooses to believe that the tide of disaster was dammed by a paltry hundred millions of the ill-gotten gains of the predatory rich is not to be argued with. He is the sort of person who believes that the Colorado River was turned back into its bed by the dumping of rock into the break after the eminent engineers of the Yuma project had pronounced the feat ridiculously impossible.

The rest of us know that the mighty power which stilled the raging waters of Wall street with a simple "Peace; be still!" was the same that quieted the trembling earth in San Francisco, and relieved, single handed and alone, the distress of that stricken city.

Need I mention the name of that eminent man? Surely not, but, like the convention orator who places in nomination "the man who," I will do so just to round off the speech. Needless to say, I refer to that great statesman, philanthropist and peerless journalist, William Randolph Hearst. [Frantic cheering, lasting nine hours and two seconds by the watch.]

On Saturday morning the Great One issued a proclamation to that part of the population of the United States which habitually reads his papers. It was headed, "A Word to the Thoughtless," and the reason for printing it only in the Hearst journals was made plain in the opening sentence: "To the wise no word is necessary." The incomparable Willie told the thoughtless to think before stampeding to the banks, and that settled the panic.

Morgan, Rockefeller and the United States Treasury dumped money by the carload into New York banks on Thursday and Friday, and on Friday night they said the situation was satisfactory. By some inexplicable oversight the Hearst papers failed to print pictures of six-horse trucks delivering the "Hearst Panic Relief Fund of a Hundred Millions in Gold" to Wall street, and William Randolph had to come to the rescue on Saturday with a Napoleonic stroke of a proclamation.

That Hearst saved the country is plain to the meanest understanding.

A Misused Word.

The cog-wheel railway, about to be built from the brink to the bottom of the Grand Cañon of the Colorado, is said to be "unique." That is, the reporters who write about it use that term, and they seem to have been told by the projectors of the railroad that the rack, rail and cog wheel are new features in railway construction. Either they do not know that the devices are not new, or they are imperfectly acquainted with the English tongue: The meaning of "unique" is "the only one of its kind." The word means that and nothing else.

But the Grand Cañon railroad will not be the first of its type. A similar railroad has been in operation on Mt. Washington, N. H., for half a century, carrying thousands of passengers every year to and from the very summit of the peak without accident. The projected cog-wheel and rack railroad of the Grand Cañon will be remarkable and unusual, but it will not be unique.

There are very few unique things in this world. The only one I call to mind at this moment is the saintly editor of the Evening Distress.

A Reckless Sport.

Col. John Jacob Astor is a member of the Aëro Club, and a bold and hardy adventurer. He announces that when airships and balloons are so perfected that there will be no danger in sailing them, he may become an aëronaut. The colonel is a dead-game sport, and when The Hague Peace Congress shall have abolished war, I shall expect to see him, gallant, intrepid and gorgeous at the head of his regiment. By the way, I forget what regiment that battle-scarred warrior commands.

to Fame.

Maj. H. B. Hershey is known to fame as the aëronaut of the Wellman polar balloon expedition, who did not go up in the balloon; a Rough Rider who did not ride in Cuba, and the winner of a balloon race in which he was beaten by half a dozen competitors. If Maj. Hershey had not enlisted in the famous horseless cavalry, I fear he might have remained unknown to [illegible] to Roosevelt, which is the proper thing for New Mexicans and Arizonans. When I knew Hershey he was weather observer at Santa Fé. He could read a rain gauge as intelligently as any man in the service, and I venture to say that he could distinguish an aneroid barometer from a local shower with both hands tied. Since the war he appears to have devoted himself exclusively to being a major.

BEAUTY IN ALL THINGS.

Is it not strange how beauty springs
From germs where men no beauty trace?
How rugged shapes, chaotic things,
Grow into forms of grace.

We would not think there were concealed
Such beauty in the lily's root
That blossoms forth upon the field
What time the lilies shoot.

And when the clouds collect on high,
Like battle chariots of the storm,
How the darkness of that sky
Sends forth a rainbow form.

We think that when the rainbow fades,
Its beauty liveth in the shower;
Bestrewing pearls among the blades,
Then blending with the flower.

Yes, everywhere, on earth or sea,
Wherever wandering man may go,
Its beauty so mysteriously
Around his pathway grow.

It blossoms upward from the earth,
It plays among the heights of air;
And wide old ocean gives its birth
Among the waters there.

In all above and all below
Is beauty quite sublime;
Impressed with the eternal mystic seal—
The hand that is divine.

Oh, what a world of beauty
A loving heart might plan,
If man but did his duty,
And helped his brother man.

Then angel guests would brighten
The threshold with their wings,
And love divine enlighten
The old forgotten springs.

THE WORLD'S CROPS.

WALTER J. BALLARD.

The island of St. Thomas (Portuguese) furnishes about one-sixth of the world's crop of cocoa. The total area of the island in 355 square miles, of which not more than one-third is under cultivation.

On October 1, the average conditions of certain crop yields of the United States were, per cent.: Corn, .78; buckwheat, 80.1; rice, 88.7; tobacco, 84.8; flaxseed, 78.0; sugar cane, 91.9; and sorghum, 80.4. The average yield per acre of spring wheat was, in bushels, 13.1; of oats, 23.5; of barley, 23.9; of rye, 16.4; of hay, 1.44 tons. In quality the average per cents. were: Spring wheat, 88.8; oats, 77.0; barley, 88.1; rye, 91.6; and hay, 90.5. In alfalfa the production, compared with full crop, was 89.8 per cent.; in hemp, 86.6; in broom corn, 85.1; in kaffir corn for forage, 84.0; and in millet, 83.1; in tomatoes, 86.4; in cabbages, 83.5; in onions, 86.7; in beans, 79.1; in watermelons, 75.2; in clover seed, 64.9. The average condition of sugar beets was 90.5; of Irish potatoes, 77.0; of sweet potatoes, 82.7; of apples only 33.8; of grapes, 81.8; of cranberries, 77.8; and of peanuts, 84.7. The average yield per acre of hops was 1142 pounds.

The shortage of the wheat crop in Russia came as a surprise. If the Russian wheat crop falls below last year's level, only France and possibly Italy can be said to have materially surpassed the harvest of 1906, and, says "Crop Reporter," as both France and Italy are large importers of wheat, their crops can increase only indirectly the wheat surplus available for the international market.

Northern harvesting being practically completed, interest is diverted to Argentina, India, and Australia. Argentina may possibly have a larger crop than last year. The wheat crop of India, on a reduced area, is described as doing well. Australian conditions are much less promising, owing to insufficient rain.

The forecast of the world's crops, made by the Hungarian Minister of Agriculture, indicates a shortage of 289,000,000 bushels of wheat, and 450,000,000 bushels of corn, as compared with 1906; for rye, barley, and oats small increases are noted. Probably the world's total wheat crop will be 3,075,000,000 bushels, or 373,000,000 bushels less than in 1906. The Hungarian Minister's figures of the world's wheat crops this year are:

Crop—	1907.	1906.
Wheat	3,159,000,000	3,445,000,000
Oats	3,728,000,000	3,692,000,000
Corn	3,690,000,000	4,140,000,000
Rye	1,602,000,000	1,572,000,000
Barley	1,522,000,000	1,499,000,000
Totals	13,702,000,000	14,351,000,000
Shortage in 1907	649,000,000

Floods have inflicted immense injury on the vineyards of Southern France. From Spain, also, come serious accounts of flood damage. Doubtless American wines will be in greater demand.

The ratings given British crops in the British Board of Agriculture report for mid-September were as follows: 100 representing an average crop; wheat, 101; barley, 100; oats, 105; potatoes, 93; roots, 102; and hay, 108.

The 1907 wheat crops of France, according to official estimates, is the largest on record, exceeding the 1899, heretofore largest crop, by 8,000,000 bushels, and the 1906 crop, by 45,000,000 bushels, and reaching 369,970,000 bushels. Rye and maslin also show increases.

Italy's wheat crop is said to be 148,000,000 bushels or 20,000,000 bushels less than the crop of 1906.

Spain's wheat crop this year is 37,000,000 bushels less than that of last year, and 16,000,000 below the average for the last five years.

A private report (no official figures yet published) of the Bank and Handels Zeitung, a leading Berlin paper, gives Germany's crops this year as: Wheat, 118,000,000 bushels; rye, 354,000,000 bushels; barley, 154,000,000 bushels; oats, 537,000,000 bushels, and potatoes, 1,378,000,000 bushels. Compared with 1906 official figures, all the crops, barley excepted, show heavy shortages. Largely-increased imports may, therefore, be anticipated.

Turkey faces serious decreases in the production of all grains, estimated at 30 to 40 per cent. for wheat, barley, oats and rye. The government declares its intention to suspend the import duties on grain, and to prohibit the exportation of wheat.

Roumania's corn crop is 40 per cent. below last year's, or about 75,000,000 to 80,000,000 bushels.

THE Gossard CORSET

The latest step in corset evolution calls into practice the principle of lacing in front, which practically places the fit and agreeable features of the corset in the hands of the wearer and not out of sight, which usually leads to being out of mind.

The front-lacing corset may be so regulated that the hips are held snugly and the abdomen supported, while the tender region of the diaphragm is protected. The spine is guarded by skillfully placed bones and gores that make a smooth back and a straight, erect line.

Under the influence of the same lacing, the line under the arm is held close to the body, and the bust forms in the natural position where it should be.

The Gossards sell at $5, $8, $12 and $15.

The L'Irresistible at $16.50 and $19.50.

We have other world-famous makes, too, of course—

The "Sapphire" at $6.50 to $17.50.

The "Royal Worcester" at $1 to $3.50.

More New Suits

Not a day goes by without the New York Express bringing us new suits—DISTINCTIVELY new ones—and plenty of them.

$25 to $165 for Street Suits, and even the lowest priced ones show the work of master designers and tailors.

Many of the plain tailor-made suits have the regulation coat sleeves and small rolling or flat collar, in fact the mannish idea is carried out in every detail. In the more dressy garments, however, they are using considerable braid. Some have the entire coat bound in braid of black or of the same color. Others have velvet collar and cuffs embroidered in soutache; still others have the front and back embroidered in fancy designs.

The dressy suits are usually of the plain or fancy broadcloths, while those intended for rougher wear are of one of the new fancy mixtures and occasionally of rough serge or cheviot. For street wear dark rich colorings seem to be preferred, particularly Burgunday, plum, navy and brown. In the fancier suits they are showing some of the new light shades, such as topaz, sulphur, electric blue, Copenhagen blue. The coats may be of any length between 24 and 50 inches.

THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

E. A. Doran, a contractor, filed an application with the City Clerk yesterday asking for a forty-nine-year lease of the river bed; he desires a monopoly of the sale of sand and gravel from the city's pits.

An indignant protest went to the City Hall from the Seventh Ward against the proposed purchase of a tract of land on San Julian street for a site for a jail and police station.

Councilmen and Commissioners of the Board of Public Works are making a valiant effort to fill hundreds of requests for street lights with the 200 arcs at their disposal.

A mystery, remaining unsolved, was presented in the action for divorce brought by Robert Clark Tilton against Susanna C. Tilton, who had married him for unstated reasons of her own.

Nazzarino Laturco, who was sentenced to fifteen years in State Prison for the murder of Maria Sanmarco, made a statement exonerating his father, who is under indictment.

Fourteen boys charged with petty thefts were released from Police Court yesterday by Justice Rose.

AT THE CITY HALL.

SEEKS LEASE OF RIVER BED.

CONTRACTOR WANTS TO MANAGE CITY'S GRAVEL PITS.

Asks Exclusive Control of the Bed of the River for a Period of Forty-nine Years—Stipulates It Shall Not Be Used by Lessees for Railway Franchise Purposes.

A thrill went through the City Hall at high noon yesterday, when E. A. Doran filed with the City Clerk an application for a forty-nine-year lease of the bed of the Los Angeles River. The hall was agog over the latest application for a river-bed franchise.

Doran's application asks for a monopoly of the disposal of sand and gravel in the river bed. It stipulates that the lease shall declare, among other things, "that no part of leased ground shall ever be used by lessees for railwray-franchise purposes;" also that "the city of Los Angeles shall be furnished sand and gravel free of charge for all municipal purposes."

Doran proposes that the city lease to him for a term of forty-nine years "the exclusive use, possession and control of the river bed of the Los Angeles River as the same is now or may hereafter be embraced within the city limits of the city of Los Angeles, for sand and gravel purposes, upon a royalty rental basis."

The official bed of the river belongs to the city. From this bed contractors secure sand and gravel for use on streets and in constructing buildings. This sand and gravel they have always taken free. Doran proposes that he be permitted to charge a fee for hauling the sand and gravel away, and he is willing to pay the city a royalty for this privilege.

Mr. Doran's attorney said yesterday afternoon that his client proposes to build roadways into the bed of the river, and to erect toll stations. He argues that by placing this supervision over the river bed the city will receive an income, and at the same time a stop will be put to the almost continuous wrangling over gravel and sand pits along the river. At the present time a number of contractors maintain gravel pits in the river bed; their monopoly of a special pit is preserved by a gang of rough necks, who stand about with shovels and picks and defend the pit by force.

Councilmen will probably exercise extreme caution in considering the Doran application. On its face it is as innocent as was the application for the river-bed franchise, and the Councilmen are likely to suspect that it will be as far-reaching in its effects.

MUNICIPAL SIDE-STEPPING.

CHARGE OF LIGHT BRIGADE.

Councilmen and members of the Board of Public Works are engaged in some adroit side-stepping to dodge the charge of the "light brigade." Each body asserts that placing street lights is in the jurisdiction of the other, and irate property owners who find that they must walk in the darkness after the theater for another year at least are denouncing Mayor, Council and the Board of Public Works indiscriminately.

The lighting contract provides for the installation of 200 extra street lights this year; there are more than 1100 applications on file. Naturally a good many applicants for lights are doomed to disappointment.

Log rolling played a prominent part in the selection of locations and the allotment of the number of lights to wards. Pease and Blanchard were out of the city when the lists were proposed and the other Councilmen promptly gathered in most of the lights that ordinarily would have gone to the Fourth and Ninth wards. When the absentees returned they roared so vociferously that Wallace and Wren were compelled to surrender a portion of their allotments to preserve peace in the Non-Partisan stockade.

The number of lights finally allotted for this year is as follows: First Ward, twenty lights; Second Ward, twenty lights; Third Ward, sixteen lights; Fourth Ward, eighteen lights; Fifth Ward, forty-six lights; Sixth Ward, fifty lights; Seventh Ward, eight lights; Eighth Ward, four lights; Ninth Ward, eighteen lights.

President Pease is not yet reconciled to this allotment. More applications for lights came from the Fourth Ward than any other, but when the allotment was made this ward received but eighteen, while the Sixth Ward gets sixty lights. The second greatest number of applications came from the Second Ward, but Clampitt received but ten lights on the first apportionment; he finally succeeded in getting this number increased to sixteen lights.

To the disappointed ones, the hope is held forth that all will be righted next year. The lighting contract provides that 415 lights shall be installed during 1908. City Attorney Hewitt startled members of the Council last week by telling them that, under the present contract, the Council has jurisdiction over the placing of street lights.

The charter amendment creating the Board of Public Works provides that the board shall have jurisdiction over the placing of street lights. This provision has given Councilmen an excellent opportunity to side-step. They assure the winners that, "I did it, but it took a fight to put it through," and the losers are consoled by the assurance that, "just as soon as the Board of Public Works is right, you'll get your lights; the board held it up."

But City Attorney Hewitt has called attention of city officials to the fact that the lighting contract was made before the Board of Public Works was created, and the contract confers jurisdiction over street lights on the Council.

The lighting companies have reversed their former policy of lobbying for a great lighting appropriation. now the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Company, holder of the contract, is placing as few lights as it can without violating its contract. The reason assigned for this tardiness is that the company is required to make the connection for the light and a lamp must be kept burning for a year and a half to pay the actual cost of the connections. At the present time there are 1900 street lights; the old system of allotting the lights by wards has resulted in making the small wards the best-lighted areas. There are miles of streets in the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth wards without a single light. This year Healy appealed to his constituents for new locations, and this appeal brought but four new applications.

JAIL NOT WANTED.

SEVENTH WARDERS INDIGNANT.

Wow! What a row there is going in the Seventh Ward over the proposal of some property owners on Wall and San Julian streets to sell their land to the city for a site for a jail and police station.

Secretly, some say under the cover of darkness, the Mayor, the Finance Committee, and the chiefs of the police and fire departments have gone down to San Julian street to look over the location. They tried to work under cover, but the secret is out, and the Seventh Warders are threatening to recall every one, from the Chief Executive to the colored janitors at the City Hall.

Even Councilman Wallace, the immaculate representative of the decorous Fifth Ward, is referred to as "one of the gang." Chief Kern doesn't dare go home nights; but sleeps in a cot at the police station.

A wild-eyed delegation is training on a diet of raw beefsteak and blood to have it out with the Mayor and Chief of Police. They made their first visit to the City Hall yesterday morning. When they heard that these officials had gone to Santa Barbara they said it was a get-away to escape punishment.

"Pop" Blanchard smiled through his roast with a trained sarcasm developed by five terms of service in the City Hall.

"We received an offer," he said, "and we couldn't do otherwise than go down and look the land over. But we expected to tell you people all about it before we made the purchase—if we concluded to buy."

The location offered to the city is a great hollow square bounded by Seventh, Eighth, Wall and San Julian streets. There is a fifty-foot entrance from each street. The location was represented as an ideal one for a jail and station. The purchase price is said to be $60,000.

The residents in the neighborhood are the ones who have started the protest; they say they do not want the dregs of the Eighth Ward carried south of First street. Chief of Police Kern is reported to be opposed to the location on the ground that it is too far removed from the "Tenderloin." He says it would necessitate carrying prisoners too far into the residence district, and that it would draw an undesirable element south of First street.

The Council is known to have other sites under consideration but nothing definite has been done toward selecting a new location for the City Bastile. Present indications are that the conditions at the City Jail will be just as bad next summer as they were three months ago.

FOR ELECTRIC FLAGMEN.

IMPROVEMENT CLUBS PROTEST.

Committees from the improvement associations of the First and Ninth wards will go before the Council tomorrow to protest against the recommendation of the special committee on grade crossings. The Council Committee has reported recommending guards, signal systems, etc., for eighteen crossings in the First and Ninth bailiwicks, but these recommendations affect steam roads only.

From the improvement associations comes an insistent demand that the street railway companies, notably the Pacific Electric Company, be directed by ordinance to place a flagman at each of the four crossings on Aliso street. The first demand was for nine electric flagmen, but the protestants say that if they get four flagmen they will not fight the ordinance further. They protest against the practice of making flagmen of conductors.

There is a second demand for guard rails or other safety devices on Pasadena-avenue hill.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

WEDDED, BUT NOT A WIFE.

MYSTERY OF MARRIAGE CROPS OUT IN DIVORCE COURT.

Young Woman Meets Man on Train, They're Engaged and United Within Ten Days and She Leaves Him at Once—He Gets Separation Without Explanation of Her Action.

Like one of Bertha M. Clay's novels, boiled down to its elements and rendered more vital, but with the central mystery unexplained, was the action for divorce in the strange case of Robert Clark Tilton against Susanna C. Tilton, which resulted in the Superior Court yesterday in a decree of divorce for the former.

Neither the nominal husband of the young woman, nor her physician, Dr. Rebecca Lee Dorsey, nor any one else that testified, could even hazard a guess as to why the girl had married Tilton.

Robert Tilton was returning from the Philippines, where he had been employed in the United States transport service, in April, 1908. He came down the Coast line. As the train stopped at Santa Barbara, a pretty girl entered the car, glanced along the rows of passengers, and seated herself beside Tilton. She seemed willing to get acquainted, and Tilton was anxious. They were talking pleasantly before the train reached Carpinteria, and by the time it crossed the bridge over the Ventura River she was cuddling up to him and looking up trustfully into his eyes.

To Tilton's delight, he found his fair companion was going to stay several days in Los Angeles, where he was intending to make his home with a brother.

He went to his relative in this city; she to the Natick House, and within ten days they were engaged.

"And when will you marry me?" he asked breathlessly.

"When you are ready," she replied demurely.

He was charmed.

"But," she continued, "I don't want to be married in this county. We'll go to Santa Ana."

And so they did, and were married there on May 1, 1902. She took the certificate, smiled at it with satisfaction, folded it carefully, and placed it in a satchel she carried, and turned to her husband.

"I am very grateful to you for what you have done," she said, with a trace of sadness in her sweet voice. "It suited my convenience to be married—to have this;" and she tapped the bag in which the certificate reposed. "But I can't ever live with you," she added, apologetically. "I am sorry to do this, but I married for a purpose, and that purpose is served."

When the plaintiff in the action which came to trial yesterday had reached this point in his narrative of the events connected with his strange marriage, Judge Monroe asked him:

"What did you say to her?"

"I was so mad I didn't say anything," Tilton answered. "I just walked to the train with her and put her aboard of it. I never saw her again. I was too humiliated to talk to her, to ask her anything."

Dr. Rebecca Lee Dorsey testified that Mrs. Susanna Tilton, who was a trained nurse, had come to her as a patient a few days later, and she had learned of the strange marriage, but nothing of the young woman's reasons. Dr. Dorsey had known the girl for a year previously. It was through Dr. Dorsey that service in the divorce case was made on the plaintiff, but Mrs. Tilton did not respond.

Other witnesses testified simply to the fact that Tilton had been living by himself.

So ended the queer romance, so far as the court proceedings are concerned.

LONG TERM FOR MURDER.

LATURCO TELLS STRANGE TALE.

Nazzarino Laturco, when asked by Judge Smith yesterday if he had any legal reason to offer why judgment should not be pronounced upon him for the murder of little Maria Sanmarco, July 7, made a remarkable statement, but not at all in justification of his act.

"I want to say," the prisoner began, "that Josephine told me to say my father told me he would kill me if I did not clean up the whole Sanmarco family. She said that way I could get out of it, and my father would pay the price. She fixed that up."

Judge Smith made no comment on this statement, but abruptly passed sentence of fifteen years in State prison on Laturco.

The bullet fired by Nazzarino Laturco in the Sanmarco home, which killed the little girl, was intended for Joe Lesparti, a rival of Laturco's for the hand of Josephine Sanmarco.

Francesco Laturco, the father of Nazzarino, has been indicted, and his trial on a charge of murder is pending. There appears to be a disposition to believe that the younger Laturco's charge against his father is false, though not that Josephine Sanmarco suggested it. The case against the elder Laturco may be dismissed, though no decision in the matter has been reached as yet by the prosecutors.

EJECTED FROM "OWL."

PASSENGERS SEEK DAMAGES.

Chauncy B. Pettis and Charles W. Anderson, in separate complaints filed yesterday in the Superior Court, seek to secure $5000 damages each from the Southern Pacific Company for the refusal of a conductor on the "Owl" to accept excursion tickets for fare.

The complaints relate that six persons purchased a ten-day party ticket to Newman and return, September 28, the agent assuring them that the tickets would be good on the "Owl." It is alleged that the northern trip was made on the "Owl," but that on the return trip, at Bakersfield, at 2 o'clock of a rainy morning, the conductor demanded fare, and put them off the train.

SOME WIN, SOME LOSE.

DIVORCE TRIALS NUMEROUS.

Divorces cropped up everywhere yesterday in the Superior Court. Two decrees were denied by Judge Bordwell. In one, the action of McCune against McCune, the husband was suing his wife on the ground of habitual intemperance. The testimony established the cause of action, but also developed the fact that it had arisen in Pittsburgh. Now, while intemperance is a legal ground for divorce in California, it is not so in Pennsylvania. Therefore the decree was denied.

In the case of Beatrice I. Griffith against Howard Griffith, a written opinion was handed down, denying the decree. The ground was extreme cruelty, and, at the time of the trial, a doubt was raised in Judge Bordwell's mind by several circumstances, including the fact that the plaintiff had been divorced before, and an inference from the testimony that the defendant in the case before him desired a decree as much as the plaintiff.

Judge Bordwell had suggested that the defendant come into court, and this he did voluntarily, testifying in corroboration of his wife's charges.

"He confessed that he was the abuser and even the assaulter of his wife," runs the opinion. "He was vague as to where he had been served with the summons. I am satisfied that this action belongs in the category of 'made-up' cases, and I do not believe the defendant is the wife beater he proclaimed himself to be."

Laura M. Ferrell, aged 44 years, who testified that she had married George R. Ferrell, aged 28 years, in 1905, because she thought he would be a help to her three children, and found he was not, secured a decree on the grounds of non-support and desertion. The plaintiff testified that her children had had to continue to support her after the marriage, and help support their stepfather. The desertion occurred in 1906. Judge Crowe of Santa Barbara, sitting for Judge Wilbur, granted the decree.

Cyrus W. Small, manager for a firm occupied with labor contracts on the Santa Fé Railroad, secured a decree of divorce from Alpha G. Small on the ground of desertion. Testimony showed that Mrs. Small, some months after the marriage in Orange, the home town of bride and groom, insisted on going to a school of dramatic instruction in Los Angeles. After being instructed she went to San Francisco and tried to get on the stage. Failing in this, she took another course of instruction, in a San Francisco school, and then succeeded in her ambition. Once, in 1905, urged by her husband, she returned to him, and stayed three days. Telling him she preferred the stage to him, she went back.

Victor de Lambertiny was granted a decree of divorce from his German wife, whom he accused of trying to poison him. The case has been in court twice before, but was continued on account of disagreement over small property rights.

THE INFERIOR COURTS.

Fourteen Boys Arrested for Various Offenses Are Turned Loose by Justice Rose.

Fourteen boys charged with theft were arraigned before Justice Rose in Police Court yesetrday. In every case they were released and allowed to return home on their promise to be good.

"There is no sense in sending these boys to the Detention Home," said Justice Rose. "Most of them have engaged only in the pranks of boyhood and a warning to them and private sessions with their male parents in the woodshed ought to set them straight."

Eddie McPherson, Charles Sands and Freddie Howe were three of the most interesting offenders. With the aid of a spark plug made from a nail they managed to get away with a small truck automobile from a shed near the river bed. The boys spent one night with the automobile. They played fire engine, police patrol and circus with it. The only thing that saved the boys from injury was the fact that the machine was made for heavy travel, and could not go fast. Charlie Sands had worked in an automobile shop, and knew something about the car. Just before daylight on the night of the theft the boys in trying to return the auto to its shed, backed it down the steep bank of the river bed, where they left it and fled.

Six others of the number arrested yesterday entered an automobile shed and stole a number of automobile lamps. Lighting the lamps, they held an Indian war dance in an alley.

Two others had tied tin cans to dogs' tails.

Opium Dealers in Court.

Charged with selling opium to white men and women, Tung Yuen, Wing Ling and Lu Chang were arraigned before Justice Rose in Police Court yesterday. A postponement was granted, so that the State could obtain further evidence. There are a dozen dens in the Chinese quarter where opium is sold daily to white people. In many of these filthy dens white women of the tenderloin are allowed to use the bunks and smoke opium. Others send messenger boys for it.

"Pay Ball" Not Barred.

Several young men arrested on charges of playing "pay ball," a game of pool in which bets are made, were released yesterday because of the fact that no ordinance exists covering that form of gambling.

MUSIC FOR PLAYGROUND.

Violet-street Youngsters Rejoice in Piano Gift—Course of Lectures for the Winter Months.

Large and small neighbors of the Violet-street playground are rejoicing in the possession of a piano, which has just been added to the treasures of te playground library. The piano was presented by the Fitzgerald Music Company, and holds a proud position in the pretty little building, designed with just such an end in view.

Miss Edna Best was recently placed in charge of all social activities at the playground. She has arranged for a course of lectures to be given at the library on the Friday evenings of the winter season for the benefit of all over 14 years of age. The first will be given November 1, when Prof. J. Z. Gilbert of Los Angeles High School will discuss "Our Small Neighbors," illustrated with stereopticon views. On November 8, T. C. Knowles of the University of Southern California will talk on "Responsibility for Social Reform;" November 15, Mrs. J. L. Corella-Phipps will take her hearers on a "Trip to Mexico." Pupils of Cumnock Hall will have charge of the entertainment for November 22. November 29, Chester H. Bowers will talk of the "Art of Leather Making;" December 6, O. S. Lowsley, physical director of the two High Schools, will talk on "Physical Training and Personal Hygiene." "Fire, Water, Earth and Air" will be the subject of a talk to be given by Prof. Boren of the Harvard Military Academy, on December 13. As a crowning number, just before Christmas, a musical entertainment will be given by the orchestra of the College Settlement, under the leadership of Edgar B. Gordon.

Tomorrow evening there will be a house-warming at the library building, when Miss Maud Whitlock, the librarian, will talk on books, and Miss Best will address the young people.

HOLLYWOOD GARDEN FETE.

The garden fete which will be given by members of St. Catherine's Guild of St. Stephen's Church, Hollywood, October 31, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Philo Beveridge of Hollywood, will have many unique attractions. Under the direction of the president, Mrs. C. J. George, each lady has worked with a will. Only the finishing touches are now required, and really the event promises success.

WHITENS THE SKIN.

The formula given below will be found wonderfully effective for whitening the skin, even that of the darkest complexion. This mixture, while being absolutely harmless, has a peculiar chemical action on the surface of the skin, bleaching the cuticle and imparting that creamy softness which is so desirable.

The formula was given out by a noted dermatologist and is as follows:

Two ounces of Rose Water; one ounce Spirits Cologne; four ounces crystallized Sartoin. Put the Sartoin in a pint of warm water, then add the Rose Water and Cologne Spirits, and after dissolved and cooled, strain through a fine cloth. These ingredients are obtainable from any well stocked druggist.

This will make a supply sufficient for a month's treatment, although the beneficial results are usually apparent after the first few applications. This should be used daily and massaged well into the skin of the face, bust and arms. It produces a glowing sensation and the use of powders or rouge are entirely unnecessary.

I had a full upper and lower set of teeth made by Dr. Schiffman, and I can use them as well as I could my natural teeth. LEWIS HOUSTON, 814 Casauvia.

Dr. Schiffman extracted seven badly ulcerated teeth for me that had troubled me for years, without one bit of pain. I cheerfully recommend his method to any one. PETER HENDERSON, Fireman, S. P. R. R.

On account of some unfortunate experience I had in the extraction of my teeth I became a great coward in this respect. Today Dr. Schiffman extracted one of my very refractory teeth without causing me one particle of pain. D. K. TRASK, Judge Superior Court, Los Angeles County.

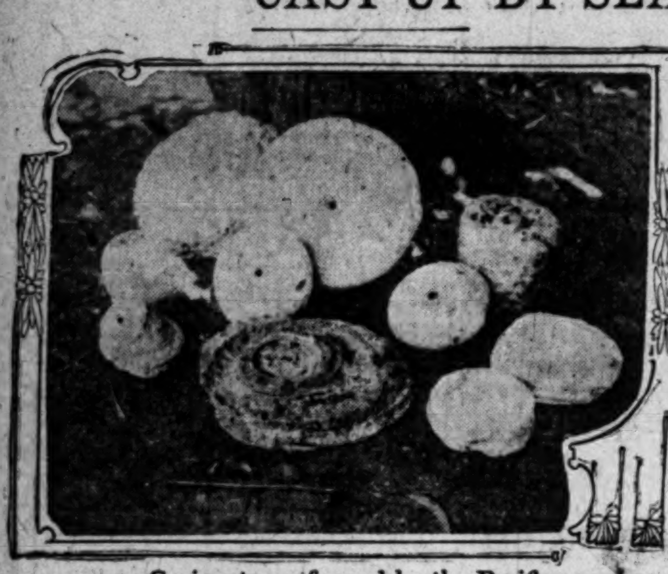
CURIOUS.

FINDS ODD STONES CAST UP BY SEA.



Curios stones formed by the Pacific.

CHOOSING geology as a diversion while wandering about in the open air in search of health, Leo G. Hasse of Pasadena took up the study of the coast line of Southern California, with the result that one day he discovered curiously-formed stones, not heretofore described.

He found them at only one point on the Coast, and scattered along a distance of only about one mile. They are somewhat like a doughnut in shape, and those he collected range from eight to eighteen inches in diameter, although some he saw ran as high as twenty-four inches.

Not all are perforated, however, as will be seen by looking at the two on the right of the picture. These have a solid crystal core, while the perforated ones are lined with crystal around the holes.

They were lying loosely on the beach at low tide, being tossed about by the waves when they are rough.

They are formed in layers, but when struck by a hammer or thrown against other stones, circular-shaped pieces will fly from the outside rims. This peculiar feature leads Hasse to believe they are formed in about the fallowing manner.

On this Coast there is a great deal of kelp growing in depths as far as 200 feet. It is a long, rope-like plant, firmly attached to the rock bottom of the ocean, and has a float and leaves at the surface. Some of these kelp growths have little bulbs, or air chambers, all the way up, to keep them taut, or perpendicular. Suppose thousands of these plants growing in 200 feet of water, and sand and clay and other materials drifting in between them, filling them up twenty-five or more feet. The loose material then solidifying, there would be left a lot of holes where the rope-like plants once stood. Water filling into these holes would solidify the material in circular layers, or rings, around the holes, although the material may be in horizontal layers, as it usually is on ocean bottoms. Then with the movements of the earth's crust raising the same, the waves would wash out the softer portions of the stone, leaving the circular pillars with a hole, or crystal core, standing until knocked over by the waves and broken up and worked into shapes as shown in the accompanying cut.

By request, Mr. Hasse has furnished the National Museum at Washington with a collection similar to his own.

VENTURA MAN'S LUCK.

Elements Restore His Rain-Soaked Beans, Then Thrash Them and Put Them Into His Barn.

Everybody is familiar with some variety of fish story. Not a single friend but when he returns, narrates some exciting incident in which the largest fish ever caught of some special variety, slipped through his fingers. Then in California, there are bear stories, and for rattlers and other snake stories the inhabitants of this State hold the palm. Not at all satisfied with these laurels, a Ventura farmer, who was in Los Angeles for a week sprung a new one on beans, which is worth repetition.

"Ye see it was just like this. Jed Smith up in Ventura county had a big crop of beans, one of the biggest ever produced in that section. Jed's always been one of these sort of procrastinatin' fellows, and after he'd cut his entire crop he left 'em lie out in the open without thinkin' anything 'bout thrashin'.

"The rain came unexpectedly, and there was all of Jed's beans stacked up gettin' damp and spoilin', while Jed tore around and cussed the weather, at he same time prayin' for better things. His prayer was sure answered. Just three days ago there came a little thunderstorm. Jed feelin' bad, sat in one of the windows watchin' his beans all go to waste, when what should happen but a bolt of lightnin' come tearin' down and struck right in the middle of the heap of beans and burned off every one of the husks or pods and never touched the beans. Before Jed could believe his senses, along came a little cloudburst and the creek, along where the crop lay, within an hour had topped its banks and all of Jed's beans started floatin' down stream with Jed followin' right along after with a pail tryin' to scoop 'em out of the water.

Before they had a chance to soak through they came to a bridge which leads on an incline down to Jed's barn, and the water just naturally carried them white pellets onto the bridge and on account of a dash board along the side, rolled them down the incline straight for the barn door.

They didn't seem to have quite 'nough impulse, and just a few feet from the openin' they stopped. All of 'em piled up in a big bunch, and Jed was startin' to moan over their awful fate, because they started to wrinkle and crack in their skins, when what d'ye think happened. I'll be dinged if 'nother bolt of lightnin' didn't strike right in 'mong them beans and dry every one of 'em, besides pushin' them through the barn door and into their bins.

"The only beans Jed's goin' to lose are them he scooped out 'long the crik. He's on his way here now to sell the hull lot of them as strictly sun cured. Don't know but what the wind'll blow him a check for the entire crop 'fore he arrives."

With this parting supposition the farmer left, with all of his hearers in a semi-dazed state from which they haven't as yet awakened.

SEEK OIL LANDS, IS REPORT.

Large Corporations Said to Be Trying to Get Properties About the Kern River.

Rumors are afloat to the effect that the large oil corporations are scurrying for lands in the vicinity of the Kern River and neighboring fields. As for their chances of obtaining any, it is stated that there is none on the market in proven districts. H. M. Storey, J. F. Eckert and Dr. Stark of San Francisco, all closely related to Standard Oil interests, or so supposed to be, have been touring the Tejon country, ostensibly on a pleasure tour. But it is said that they have been examining the oil outcroppings and other surface indications in a very businesslike manner.

That oil is located in the hills west of Tejon Cañon has been known for a long time, is the statement of W. H. Hill, who is familiar with most California oil fields, but no indications have been found farther east.

The country is little developed, if at all, and the Standard may be examining the ground with an idea of ascertaining any future effects that the field may have on the oil industry without any idea of purchasing, in pursuance of their regular policy. But as the Standard does not locate in unproven fields, nor pioneer in any way, it is highly improbable that it entertains any serious intention of opening the fields.

The action of the producers of the Bakersfield region in raising oil prices and standing by them, in a body, relying upon the great demand to bring the buying corporations to their price, makes the outlook particularly rosy for producing, and it may cause the larger companies to invade the producer's field on a larger scale than heretofore, but oil-producing lands are hard to get and none are willing to put aside their policy and pioneer.

BEST METHOD OF HOME BUILDIN

In contemplating building a home, every one desires and aims
1st—To select the best method of building.
2d—To secure the best material and most skilled labor.
3d—To have some one competent to look after the full details of construction.
These requisites to good home building are embodied in our Commission Plan.
This plan is the most satisfactory and ecomonical for you, when you have the cash. Under this plan we superintend, take full charge of, and attend to all the details of construction. You pay for all materials and labor, and when the house is completed, you pay us 5 per cent. of the cost of the house, as compensation for our services of superintending. You have the privilege of making any alterations in plans or specifications, of furnishing any or all material and labor, or you can cancel the existing agreement at any time, and take full charge of finishing the house, or you can put any one else in charge, in which case you would pay us 5 per cent. of the cost of the material and labor used up to the time of cancellation for our services of superintending up to that time.

Under this plan you get the benefit of our long experience in home building, of our experience in selecting and handling skilled workmen, and the use of our many improved equipments used by us in our building operations. We can save you from 5 to 10 per cent. over any other method of building, as we give to you the benefits of any contractors' rates, rebates or discounts which we might receive.

We Build the Very Best of Houses
B:G
We Guarantee Our Work

Realizing that many people would like to have a home, and be paying for it from their money, but who have not been able to save enough money from their earnings to make small first payment, we are now operating also our Home Certificate Plan.

UNDER THIS PLAN YOU CAN START ON A HOME WITH AS LOW TEN CENTS.

You can open one of these home certificates with ten cents. You can pay in on them as you desire, daily, weekly or monthly. They draw 6 per cent. interest. No for No loss. No one has ever lost a cent through any form of investment with us. Save nickels, dimes and quarters and deposit them with us, and before you hardly realize will have created a fund that has grown beyond your expectations. When your savings interest compounded, amount to the first small payment, we will sell you one of our modern homes, or we will build to suit you, and you can finish payments on the home would pay ordinary rent. We have furnished hundreds of families with homes under plans. Had you followed a plan like ours you would now have a nice home fully paid instead of paying out each month your small savings for rent alone.

The Los Angeles Investment Co. is the largest co-operative building company in America, with capital and surplus of $1,257,000, which is greater than that of any savings bank in Southern California. The company was founded 41 years ago, was 1899, has been in Los Angeles nearly 12 years. Has built and sold 1385 houses here. Has operated always under the same conservative management. Call and see us and we will explain more fully our different plans of building and selling homes.

A WOMAN SCIENTIST.

MADAME CURIE AND RADIUM.

HER GREAT AID IN HER HUSBAND'S INVESTIGATIONS.

Together They Were Bound Up in the Cause of Science—Many Sacrifices Were Made by the Couple, as They Were Poor in This World's Goods.

As every one knows, it was Prof. and Mme. Curie who gave radium to the world. That which every one does not know is the romance filled with vivid human interest that accompanied the winning of it from one of the secret storehouses of nature where, for countless aeons, it had been exerting its radiant energy. When the French Academy wished to bestow the prize of f.12,000 upon the discoverer of radium, Prof. Curie, who was thought to be the discoverer, gave the whole credit for the achievement to Mme. Curie; but the prize was awarded jointly and equally to both. This seems fitting and beautiful, as it was the flower, not of one, but of two harmoniously-blended lives.

Prof. and Mme. Curie worked together to further the beloved cause of science. Because they worked with single-hearted devotion and rare unselfishness, they knew the happiness of attainment long before the world bestowed its recognition upon them. The winning of the first few grains of radium was a stupendous task, and could have been accomplished only by that heroic spirit of devotion which vitalizes all great work. When M. Becquerel, the eminent French chemist, happened upon the luminous substance uranium in pitchblende, it was to the Curie laboratory that he went to have more of the mineral extracted from the pitchblende, so that he might pursue further his investigations into the nature of his discovery. This circumstance points to the high character of the Curie laboratory, for the quantity of uranium in pitchblende is very small indeed, and it is to be extracted only by the most conscientious, painstaking, scientific labor.

M. Besquerel was satisfied to investigate the nature of uranium, but not so Mme. Curie. Led to the consideration of luminous substances by their work with M. Becquerel, she turned her attention to the pitchblende residue left from the extraction of uranium. Her studies became so interesting that Prof. Curie joined her in her investigations. With her own hands Mme. Curie pounded in a mortar every particle of the tons and tons of pitchblende used in the winning of the first few grains of radium that appeared at the exhibition of 1900. She did not waste a gram. The beauty of her hands was ruined, but she had found and given to science not only a new substance, but a new force, a force which she herself named "radio-activity," coining the word.

This working out of their dream to practical reality was very costly to Prof. and Mme. Curie, who were rich only in enthusiasm and imagination. They expended in the first experiments over $2000 in pitchblende. Prof. Curie went about in a threadbare coat with shoes pieced by a cobbler; Mme. Curie had only shabby week-day gowns; she gave up gloves and wore only the cheapest shoes; and crowning sacrifice, even on Sunday their only child, little Irene, was clad in a coarse suit of boy's clothes. Every bit of money that they earned above the bare necessities of daily life was used for buying pitchblende, which was expensive, as the Austrian government held the monopoly. When they received the prize awarded by the French Academy, it is significant to note that Mme. Curie put science in possession of a relatively large portion of radium; and friends have said that they doubted not that the Curies spent every cent of this money in the purchase of pitchblende, nothing for personal needs. When Prof. Curie took the chair of science at the Sorbonne, a place was created for Mme. Curie at the head of the Combes laboratory, as her husband had declared that he could not work without her.

When Prof. Curie died the French government announced that Mme. Curie would continue her work, and would fill the chair of science left vacant by Prof. Curie. Today she holds the highest scientific position ever occupied by a woman in France.

BUSINESS MAN INTERVIEWED.

A. T. Brant, acting for The Times, secured the following interview on business conditions and prospects from S. K. Barstow, president of the State Bank and Trust Company, Cleveland, O.:

"Money will be high until after the first of the year. Money is always high and scarce in the fall as there is a great deal of money used in moving the crops and in paying the dividends of the large corporations.

"Existing prosperity is good and on a firm foundation and I do not see any reason for it to terminate. If there is a period of stagnation, I don't see how it can be anything else than short.

"Trades unions are to a great extent the cause of industrial disturbances, resulting in strikes and boycotts.

"Manufactories and other industrial establishments can continue to pay high wages if the tariff is left alone and the demand for the products continues. I believe that there ought to be some change in the tariff laws, but the question is a big one and one that will take a long time to correct. The countries with free trade have not the prosperity among the working people, that there is among the American working man.

"Freedom in industries is vital to prosperity as it is in all other things.

"Things got in such a state that the President saw the States were unable to cope with the grafting practices, so he turned the Federal government on them. There is only one result that can come from the investigation and prosecutions of the grafting practices that are being carried on throughout the country and that is the good of the whole country.

"There is no danger from large industrial operations, provided they are lawfully conducted. They are a great benefit, for when there is a slump in the markets for goods they are able to shut down their plants and still keep their prices up, which, in turn, helps to keep up the prices in other lines. The men working for the large corporations receive better pay and treatment than those working for the smaller firms."

Dominion of New Ireland.

New Zealand, which has just been created a dominion, was first discovered by Tasman, the Dutch navigator, in 1642, but it was hardly known prior to the visits of Capt. Cook, who, in 1739 and subsequent years, sailed round the islands and surveyed the coasts. The first European settlement there dates from 1814, and the first systematic colonization from 1838. It was in 1840 that England proclaimed her dominion over the islands. In 1852 a constitutional form of government was established. The first railroad in New Zealand, between Christchurch and Lyttleton, was opened on December 1, 1863. Farming is still the most important industry in the new dominion.—[Westminster Gazette.

HUMBLE WORKERS.

LOUIS GOLD, one of the best-known builders and real estate men in Brooklyn, N. Y., has had a most interesting career. He was born in the Province of Wilna, Russia, and fled Russian prosecution and emigrated with a number of others to Argentina. There he was held in peonage, from which he escaped and came to the United States. Today he is rated as one of the Brooklyn millionaires, although he is only 32 years of age.

One of the best-liked men in Washington is Thomas F. Walsh, formerly a citizen of Colorado. Twelve or fifteen years ago, Tom Walsh was a poor miner working on a par with hundreds of others for a daily wage of less than $3. He was full of ambition, a tireless worker and did not let dissipation wreck the robust physical manhood that he brought from his native Ireland. Finally his industry was rewarded and he became owner of one of the best-paying gold mines in Colorado. The bulk of this property he disposed of to a syndicate for an immense sum, but fat dividends from that source are still paid to him. Mr. Walsh's superb residence on Massachusetts avenue is one of the show places of the city, and it has been the frequent scene of a most lavish hospitality. In addition, he is the owner of the largest and finest office building in Washington, which he named Colorado, in honor of the State he loves devotedly.

H. W. Stanley, who has been promoted from trainmaster of the Seaboard Air Line at Atlanta, Ga., to superintendent of the fourth division, with headquarters at Jacksonville, Fla., was educated at the Lynchburg (Va.) High School and entered railway service in 1886 as telegraph operator of the Norfolk & Western. He has served successively as agent, train dispatcher, chief clerk to superintendent, chief clerk to general superintendent and general manager, trainmaster of the Birmingham division of the Seaboard Air Line and trainmaster of the third division of that road, from which position he is now promoted.

Lord Fairfax.
American-born member of House of Lords.

BEYOND THE SEAS.

WHILE President Roosevelt has been bear hunting, King Edward and the Prince of Wales have been deer shooting with Dr. Nansen, the Arctic explorer and present Minister of Norway to the Court of St. James, and five others. They were the guests of Sigismund Neumann, a millionaire merchant, who has a place, Glenmuick House, near Balmoral Castle, and who, with Mrs. Neumann, are on good terms with His Majesty. The King has been classed as a fairly good shot in his day, though he never has been put into the first rank with such men as Earl de Grey, Lord Walsingham, the Earl of Carnarvon, Rimington Wilson, and Harry Stonor. The Prince of Wales, however, seems likely to uphold the family honor in that respect. Shooting is his one passion, and from the day when the grouse season opens in August until the whole list of British game birds and beasts—partridges, pheasants, snipe, woodcock, and the rare capercailzie, in one category, and deer, hares, and rabbits in the other—is exhausted, the best part of his time is taken up with visits to those of his future subjects who can offer him the best sport.

Mme. Jenny Porchet, 53 years of age, a widow, with nine children, is warden of the prison of Aigle, in the Rhone Valley, and is said to be the only woman jailer in the world. At the age of 23 she married the chief warden of Aigle. Soon after her husband became a confirmed invalid and the work of the prison devolved upon her. When he died in 1890 the authorities requested her to carry on her husband's work. She at once instituted some reforms, among them the abolition of the word "prisoner." She calls the inmates of Aigle her "guests." Every morning she personally opens the cells, sets each "guest" his task, overlooks their exercises, serves them their meals, and every evening locks them up again. Although a strict disciplinarian, she has a kindly heart and looks carefully after the health of her "guests." By her force of character she soon converted the Aigle prison into a model of its kind in the country. All the year round the Aigle prison contains from twelve to twenty male prisoners, sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from three months to three years, and, although the woman jailer has no man—or woman, either—to aid her, she never had any trouble with the prisoners—except on one occasion, many years ago, when a burly ruffian attacked her. Mme. Porchet dealt him such a lesson in good behavior that he was confined in the hospital for several weeks.

The fact that King Edward of England is growing deaf has but recently been made public. Attention has been drawn to it by the recent delivery at Buckingham Palace of a set of instruments of American manufacture for overcoming the difficulty in a measure. These have been specially constructed in the richest and most elaborate manner, and are used in connection with small electric batteries, which may be concealed in the clothing. The instruments are said to be designed for the use of the Queen, also, she having been afflicted with deafness most of her life.

Because of the many misrepresentations of the position of Germany during the American war with Spain in the papers of the United States, the Kaiser caused all sorts of data to be gathered concerning the newspapers and correspondents of this country. As a result he probably has more complete information than any other person of the owners, editors, managers and correspondents of America, so that he knows just who the individuals were who inspired and wrote these articles, and whether they had been inspired by some interested motive, or were merely the offspring of a union between presumptuous ignorance and a fertile imagination.

The famous translator of old Icelandic poetry, Dr. John Stefason, of Copenhagen, has received a personally written letter of thanks and compliments of the most flattering kind from President Roosevelt, and also a copy of the American edition of the historical Icelandic poem "Kermak's Saga." The book was sent through the American minister, Dr. Maurice Francis Egan, who is also interested in this branch of literature.

Grave apprehension is said to be felt about the lungs of the King of Spain, although youth is on his side and every possible care will be taken of him, so far as his own restless temperament will permit; but what lends special gravity to the lung trouble is, of course, the fact that it is inherited from a short-lived father. The small, narrow chest, sallow complexion, and quick manner of the young King all tend to give physicians corroboratory impressions of the truth of what is now announced. It is stated that anxiety about his physical condition was the cause of the King's surreptitious visits to Paris. He hopefully consulted eminent lung specialists in that city, but they failed to give him a clean bill of health. The grief of Europe as it watched by the deathbed of the Emperor Frederick would be intensified if the dashing young Spanish monarch should be stricken down by consumption.

There is something almost pathetic in the endeavors that are constantly being made by King Leopold of Belgium to induce his fellow rulers to visit him at Brussels, which has been rigorously boycotted by foreign sovereigns and by royalty in general for a number of years past, in consequence of the many scandals of his private life. It may be remembered that when the King and Queen of Italy visited Paris in state, Leopold called upon them in order to ask them to visit him at Brussels before returning home. He has addressed similar invitations to the King and Queen of Denmark, to the King of Spain, to the King and Queen of Norway, to the King and Queen of Portugal, all of whom have declined to show themselves with him at Brussels. And now the official German newspapers publish authoritative denials emanating from the court of Berlin of the stories printed at Brussels to the effect that Emperor William and his consort would pay a state visit to Brussels on their way home from their state visit to England next month.

BEAUTIES.

MRS. C. OLIVER ISELIN of New York, one of the most beautiful women in society, has in a day become one of the wealthiest women in America, receiving $10,000,000 under the terms of the will of her father, Col. William Goddard. Eventually she will receive the remainder of the Goddard estate, which amounts in all to from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000. Besides holding the position in society to which her wealth and beauty entitle her, she is also a noted athlete, excelling in golf, tennis, horsemanship, yachting and boxing. Her husband is famous as a handler of racing yachts, owning the defender Vigilant, and managing the Defender, Reliance and Columbia in the several contests for the America's cup. In the latter races Mrs. Iselin sailed on the Columbia, and was the only woman permitted aboard the ship in the international contests.

It is said that the present Prince of Wales, when he was Prince George and a lieutenant in the British navy, paid ardent attentions to her at Bermuda, where she was wintering. Her marriage to C. Oliver Iselin was one of the most brilliant weddings in the society of New York and Rhode Island.

Fraulein Margarete Barta, who is considered the beauty of the town of Joszbereny, Hungary, has challenged a student named Szallogy to a duel. Herr Szallogy had said something depreciatory of her looks, and the fair Margarete, who is accustomed to universal admiration, and appears to be as bold as she is beautiful, appointed another student as her second, and a regular duel with pistols, three shots each, was arranged for. The police, however, got wind of the affair, and the would-be combatants were bound over to keep the peace.

STAGE PEOPLE.

THE death is announced of M. Ernest Blum, one of the most prolific dramatists of modern times. He was in the front rank of French vaudevilists, his first piece having been produced when he was 18. From that time he followed the career of a journalist and dramatist. He was attached to the Rappel and wrote for several papers. For years he had amused the readers of the Gaulois with his "Journal d'un Vaudevilliste." M. Blum had collaborated with most of the authors of his time. With M. Henri Rochefort he wrote a charming comedy, "Les Memories de Reseda." But his most assiduous collaborator was Raoul Toche. Between them they produced no fewer than forty pieces, many of which were very successful. In this connection one may mention "Voyage en Suisse," "Adam et Eve," and "Mme. Satan." He was 71 years old, and had been ill for some time, but still managed to perform a considerable amount of journalistic work. He was a chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

Oscar Ashe, the English actor, is a man of convictions. He is going to make some Shakespearean revivals, and he is going to do so his own way. "I do not intend to be bound by traditions," says he. "I am going to do Shakespeare according to the text and not to be hampered by the stage business, which some stage manager or actor has interpolated to suit his own sweet fancy and which in time has come to be accepted as the right thing. Tradition be hanged! I am going back to the original." "As, for instance?" I asked. "Well, did you ever know of Rosalind changing her costume in the forest? I never did. They have always played it in one costume, that of the page, but the text distinctly describes her first costume, as that of a page, and in the next act Rosalind is referred to as a shepherd boy. What she is supposed to have done was to put on a skin cloak and a shepherd's cap and carried a crook.

"When I produce 'As You Like It' my wife will dress in the part in that way, and I will bet that next morning the newspapers will rave at me and denounce me for trying to improve on Shakespeare and for violating the traditions of the dramatic art. I fancy I will have the laugh on them."

Mark Hambourg, the Russian pianist, will be the first of the notable visitors of the season to open his American tour. He will give twenty concerts in this country between October 15 and December 15, when he will hurry back to Europe to fill his engagements there. Hambourg is said to be one of the busiest of pianists. With his extraordinary repertoire of 700 compositions, he has toured Australia, South Africa, and Europe from Turkey to Ireland since his last visit here. They say that he now objects to being called a Russian since he became a British subject and married the daughter of Sir Kenneth Muir MacKenzie, K. C. B. K. C. He will be accompanied by his bride on his coming tour.

Preparations are going on at the musical school founded by Abbe Perosi, the composer and director of the Sistine Chapel, for the rendering of a new composition of his, on which he has been working for some time, and which is intended to render honor to the Pope during his jubilee year. The new composition is an oratorio entitled "Soul," and competent musicians who have had a chance to examine it declare that it is perhaps the best of the abbe's creations. Over 400 children attend the school of music founded by the composer, and all will take part in the rendering of the new oratorio in the presence of the Pope, assisted by the members of the Sistine Chapel choir.

Mme. Emma Eames has been invited to sing Aida before the Emperors Francis Joseph of Austria and William of Germany, at Berlin.

LOVERS OF SPORT.

MISS ETHEL TUCKER of Denver, daughter of the late J. T. Tucker, killed a large buck while hunting in the White River country. In company with her three brothers, Earl, Ben and Austin Tucker, Miss Tucker went into the White River country ten days ago. The buck was shot Saturday near Sleepy Cap peak, one of the best-known points in the White River country.

Col. Victor Balck, the most prominent representative in Sweden for athletic sports, said lately, in a lecture, that both scientific investigations and practical experience have proved that alcoholic beverages lower the working capacity of the muscles as well as the brain. King Carolus XII would never have been able to endure the enormous hardships of his wars if he had not been a total abstainer from alcoholic beverages.

John Strange Winter has not much sympathy for those who say that modern athleticism among women tends to destroy feminine charms and graces of body. She admits that the hands and feet are inclined to broaden a little under new conditions, but she does not know that they will make inferior wives and mothers upon that account. She adds the comfortable assurance that both hands and feet must grow considerably more yet before they approach the ample dimensions of those of the Venus de Milo, who is usually supposed to be well equipped in the matter of womanly graces.

EXPLORERS.

CAPT. RONALD AMUNDSEN, a Norwegian, is another intrepid explorer who plans to make an attempt to find the elusive North Pole. Capt. Amundsen returned today on the steamship Oscar II from a trip to Norway, and was a guest of honor at a reception held by Norwegian societies at the Waldorf-Astoria. Three years ago he located the magnetic pole and on the same trip proved there was a northwest passage by navigating his diminutive ship, the Gioia, through it. The captain said he will make an attempt to reach the geographic North Pole in 1910. For the purpose he is having four big polar bears trained by an expert. He expects to use the bears to haul sleds.

The miscellaneous objects which have been collected by Harry de Windt, the traveler, who has started on a reindeer trip in the Laplands, form a grewsome private museum. A Buddhist praying wheel, the skull of a Dyak warrior, Dyak shields adorned with hair from the scalps of enemies, daggers and spears in abundance, a Russian convict's dress, a set of chains which once hung from the legs and arms of a Siberian prisoner and a genuine English cat-o'-nine-tails are among the most curious objects. In spite of the hundred and one perils through which he has passed, Mr. De Windt considers that his narrowest escape from death occurred when, many years ago, he fell into the Thames at Boulter's Lock. He could not swim and was nearly drowned. Within a week Mr. De Windt was an expert swimmer.

Mrs. L. C. Van Hook, working under the auspices of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church, is the first woman from the outside world to penetrate the fastnesses of the mountains of Persia. She has most pleasant experiences and found the women ready to learn all she had to teach them.

V. Stefansson, the ethnologist of the Mikkelsen-Leffingwell expedition, has returned to New York, after spending last winter among the Eskimo on the northern edge of the American mainland. With or without them he traveled about 2000 miles back and forth along the coast from the far-east of the Mackenzie delta to the winter station of the exploring party at Flaxman Island. He has a high opinion of the hospitality of these simple aborigines. As is known, the exploring vessel was unable to meet Stefansson at the Mackenzie delta, and he was without supplies when he ended his overland trip on the Arctic Coast. But the Eskimo took him into their huts and he lived all winter on their fish and meat, much of it raw, but, in his opinion, very palatable and healthful. At any rate, he gained twenty pounds on this diet.

ACTIVITIES FOR WOMEN.

MRS. JOHN B. HENDERSON, wife of the former Senator from Missouri, has built a number of houses in Washington, one of them to be occupied this winter by the French Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand. The house occupied by the Commissioner of Commerce and Labor and Mrs. Straus is also the property of Mrs. Henderson. The French Embassy was formerly in the Bellamy Storer home.

One of the most successful college presidents is Miss Caroline Hazard of Wellesley, as she not only keeps up the high standard of the college, but manages to get more money for her institution than the majority of presidents. Andrew Carnegie gave the college $75,000, with the understanding that the amount must be equaled before it would be available. At the recent commencement, Miss Hazard announced that the required amount had been contributed. In his speech at Radcliffe commencement, James Bryce, the British Ambassador, commented on the fact that Americans are much more liberal in their gifts to women's colleges than are Englishmen. Mr. Bryce is a member of the board of Girton College, and a sincere friend of the higher education of women.

Miss Clara Barton recently delivered an address before the Legislature of Connecticut. The invitation to deliver the address came from the whole body, and it was voted unanimously that she should occupy the chair of the Lieutenant-Governor. On her arrival she was met by the Senate in a body, who escorted her to the chair, the other members of the Assembly remaining standing until she was seated.

Princess Fedora, the youngest sister of the Empress of Germany, is the author of a recently published novel, "Hahn Berta." She has a romantic history. For years, it is said, she has defied the displeasure of her imperial brother-in-law by declining all offers of marriage, and has persisted in living in seclusion. She was engaged to be married to Duke Frederick of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, who, while in command of a torpedo boat, perished in the Baltic with his entire crew.

Maria Perez de Mendoza has been appointed by Mr. Carnegie a commissioner to visit the republics of Latin America in the interest of international peace. She is the wife of the former Minister to the United States from Colombia. Two years ago, during her last visit to Colombia, she founded the first woman's club in Caracas, and contributed a generous sum toward building a public hospital.

HUMANITARIANS.

DR. FELIX ADLER, head and founder of the Ethical Culture Society, personally leads in Carnegie Hall, New York, each Sunday, a congregration of 4000 people who are adherents of his teachings. Felix Adler, who is of Hebrew ancestry, was born in Alzey, Germany, in 1851, and was brought to this country when 5 years of age. His father was at one time rabbi of Temple Emmanuel in New York, and the boy was educated to be a rabbi.

Justice David J. Brewster of the United States Supreme Court, in a recent address at Cleveland, urged the people to make it their business to aid in uplifting the negroes, who, he said, were much more desirable citizens than the objectionable foreign population which came to this country, and made war on industrial and social order. While the colored brothers may be too fond of the chicken coop and the watermelon patch, they are firm believers in social order. You will find no Johann Most, Emma Goldman, Czolgosz or Guiteau among them.

Mrs. Adlai Stevenson, wife of the former Vice-President, in an address to the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, took the "humane" side of the race-suicide argument. "There is no thoughtful woman in America," said Mrs. Stevenson, "who has not been more than startled by the appeal for larger families. While this appeal has been most urgent, I do not recall that there has been one word in reference to the health or life of the mother, nor has the ability of the mother, physically, mentally, morally, spiritually or financially, to rear children been touched upon. The question should not be how many children, but their condition and what kind of citizens they will make. This plea for the little ones, that some thought should be given to prolonging the life of the mother and thus protect the babes, should occupy first place in the work of mother clubs. The size of the family is of less importance."

Commander Marsh,
who will guard the Atlantic Coast.

ARMY AND NAVY MEN.

THE APPOINTMENT of Rev. Neil Paul Brennan, formerly of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Malden, Mass., as chaplain of a western army post, there will be two Catholic chaplains of the same name in the government service, one in the army and the other in the navy. The Father Brennan of the navy is the Rev. Edward J. Brennan of the U.S.S. Wabash, the receiving ship at Boston. He comes from Hartford, Ct., and peculiarly enough his first assignment in the navy was aboard the U.S.S. Hartford, named after his home city.

Col. Charles B. Byrne, assistant surgeon-general, who has been on duty as chief surgeon of the Philippines division, has recently completed an inspection of all posts in the Philippine Islands. The reports of these inspections, which are being received from time to time at the office of the Surgeon-General of the army, show that there is a decided improvement in the conditions at all military posts in the islands, and that everything possible has been done for the benefit of the health of the army. Some of the hospitals have been enlarged, and at every place there has been an increase in the facilities for taking care of the patients. One of the reports describes the military hospital at the hot springs at Camp Eldridge, where the natural waters have been found to be efficacious in the treatment of rheumatism and skin diseases. The tour of duty of Col. Byrne in the Philippines is about to expire, and he will be succeeded as chief surgeon of the Philippines division by Col. John Van R. Hoff, who has been on duty as chief surgeon of the Department of Luzon.

Surgeon R. C. Holcomb and Past Assistant Surgeon O. J. Mink, U.S.N., have been making a special study of several Brazilians, who have been under treatment for beri-beri at the Naval Hospital, and will prepare for publication a paper on this tropical disease. Dr. Holcomb is still on duty at Norfolk, and Dr. Mink is attached to the naval medical school in Washington.

Commander Charles C. Marsh will have the responsibility of working out the best methods of harbor defense on the Atlantic by means of torpedo boats and submarines, while the battleship fleet is in the Pacific. He is at present a member of the Board of Inspection and Survey, and is regarded as one of the most energetic and efficient officers of the navy. As one of the naval officers who was sent to Japan during the Japanese-Russian War, he won much credit for himself. Commander Marsh's flagship will probably be the Prairie. This new fleet of the navy is to be a permanent institution. To Commander Marsh will be intrusted the responsibility of working out the best methods of torpedo boats and submarines. Hitherto the submarines have been allowed to work out their own destiny and the torpedo boats have spent most of their time in reserve. Now that they are to be organized into a separate division, all the boats of this class will be put through the paces, and the department will look into Commander Marsh to develop these craft in harbor defense work.

POLITICIANS, STATESMEN.

COL. CHARLES SCHULER, State Immigration Commissioner for Louisiana, has returned from an official tour through various countries of Europe. While in Germany he called on Charlemagne Tower, the American Ambassador, and through him obtained a personal interview with Foreign Minister Von Koerner, with the result that he received permission to send to Germany literature showing the advantages that emigrants may secure by settling in Louisiana. Louisiana is the only American State to have been accorded this privilege. Arrangements were made to bring about 900 immigrants to New Orleans from Germany this month. They will arrive about October 21. Col. Schuler declared that his trip had been a successful one, and that he received encouragement everywhere but in France.

This is not the only country which can lay claim to a strenuous President. Mexico has also stories to relate not unlike some which cluster about Mr. Roosevelt. President Diaz, when 70 years old, was one day chatting with some American tourists in the military college at Chapultepec, says his biographer, when he noticed a climbing-rope hanging near him. "I wonder if I could climb that now!" he exclaimed, and to the amazement of his guests, threw off his coat and went up the rope, hand over hand, to the top—a difficult exercise for a cadet. When he came down, he turned to the Americans, smiling, and said: "Now you can say you have seen a man of 70 years do that."

David W. Mulvane, Republican National Committeeman from Kansas, has his fad. It is the card game of solitaire. He buys practically all the literature published on the subject, and in his leisure moments he is constantly attempting to beat some new game.

William A. Harris, formerly United States Senator from Kansas, recently candidate for Governor of the same State, is considered probably the best judge of Shorthorn cattle in the country. Few country fairs are considered complete without an advance notice that Senator Harris would judge the cattle.

F. D. Coburn, secretary of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, is a firm believer in the superstition that the finding of a horseshoe brings good luck. It is rarely that a horseshoe, however dusty the road may be, escapes Mr. Coburn's eagle eye. Upon his desk and in various places about the Agricultural Board's office he has a remarkable assortment of horseshoes. They vary in size from one from the smallest Shetland pony to that of one from a Percheron draft horse.

Intent on building up a commerce between the United States and Persia, Gen. Morteza Khan, Minister Plenipotentiary from Persia, is making a tour of the North American continent. He will end his long trip from Washington at Mexico City, where he will officially notify President Diaz of the accession of Mohamed Ali Shah, son of the late Shah, to the Persian throne. He is making stops at the principal cities of the country in order to become better acquainted with trade conditions and to learn how to promote the interchange of commerce between the two countries.

Hon. Robert L. Owen, one of the new Senators from Oklahoma, has had active continuous business with the government at Washington in the interests of the Indian Territory for more than twenty years, and has spent the last sixteen winters in succession in Washington, where his great success has given him a national reputation.

Gov. Hoch of Kansas prides himself that he has one of the most endurable throats of any public speaker in the country. Not long since he was in Muskogee, I. T., when a cold caused a slight hoarseness. The Governor consulted a throat specialist, who, after the examination, remarked: "I have seen only one other throat in my entire practice, Governor, that equaled yours for strength and endurance. That belonged to William J. Bryan."

IN THE LIMELIGHT.

DR. NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER, president of Columbia University, who has been abroad, studying the educational systems of England and Germany, dined twice with the Kaiser during his visit to Germany, and was very favorably impressed with his democratic ways.

Dr. Ewald Falls, a well-known Egyptologist and excavator, has embraced Islam. While at the head of an excavating expedition in the Nile delta he became so convinced of the virtues of Mohammedanism that he confessed the faith and was received at the mosque of Mariout. He will henceforth be known under the name of Mussa Mohammed.

Prof. Edward C. Moore of the Harvard Divinity School has returned to Cambridge from his extensive trip through Asia. Prof. Moore went last January to India as one of a board of three sent to investigate the condition of missionary enterprises conducted by the American board of foreign missions. Prof. Moore reports favorably on the work of E. C. Carter, who is the representative of the Harvard mission in India, and also general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association in that country. Mr. Carter's salary is paid by the Harvard mission.

The Rev. Frederick Mueller, pastor of the Fourth Reformed Church of Albany, has entered the Albany Law School in the freshman class. He will not become a lawyer, but believes that a law course will give him a better command of the English language.

E. H. Harriman when he wishes to be polite has a habit of asking an opinion as if it were of great moment to him. On one of his trips to the coast there was in his party a rich man, who impressed Harriman with his august demeanor. He was a tall, stately personage and talked glibly on the possibilities in California for investments from a railroad point of view. "Now, Mr. Midas," said Harriman in his most engaging manner, "if you were going to build a railroad in California, where would you build?" After a few minutes of slow communion with himself, the dignified person replied: "Ah, Mr. Harriman, if I were building railroads in California I would build them where they were most needed."

Silas Porter, associate judge of the Supreme Court of Kansas, while not of an athletic physical build, is a great lover of outdoor sports. He is especially fond of horseshoe pitching. He happened in Kansas City during the horseshoe pitching tournament at Convention Hall. It was in the morning when the contestants were at practice. The jurist "pitched a few" when a dispute arose among four pitchers as to superiority. A match was arranged, but the four could not agree upon an umpire. They looked around and then one of them said: "What's the matter with the tall fellow with lamps?" pointing to the judge. It was so arranged. Judge Porter will not admit that he held stakes, because that might be construed as encouraging gambling in a neighboring State.

Dr. George Grant MacCurdy, curator of the archeological collection of Peabody Museum, Yale University, has during the past vacation mapped out the State of Connecticut for a systematic archeological survey, bearing particularly on the traces of the Connecticut Indians.

Frank B. Ryan, member of the Board of Kansas Railway Commissioners, was formerly a telegraph operator. In his journeyings throughout the State he often makes good "medicine" relieving some tired country operator for an hour or two "just to keep his hand in" as he expresses it.

PEOPLE OF THE COAST.

REV. E. WALKER, a missionary and educator from China, is visiting his former home in Oregon. "The yellow race has been awakened by the enterprise of the Americans," says the venerable missionary. "The millions of the Far East are looking in this direction. A conflict of the two peoples is inevitable. How it will come, when it will come, no man can say, but something is certain to happen. Preparedness for war is the best safeguard for peace. Our President understands that; so do our diplomats. Our young men should be taught defense. Our forts should be well fortified, especially along the Pacific Coast. Some just and well-administered exclusion laws are necessary to the preservation of this country. The whites and orientals cannot mix in labor or in government. One will predominate to the subjugation of the other."

Madame Modjeska and her husband, Count Bozenta, have decided to make their future home in Tustin, where they have purchased land for the erection of a handsome residence. Those who have seen lovely Arden, the former home of Madame Modjeska, know that no pains will be spared to make the new home beautiful, not only in itself but in its setting, and all hope to see the day soon when there will be once more an exquisite abiding place for the artist who won the admiration of two worlds by her matchless dramatic power. At the present time Count Bozenta has a lease on the Byron Oliver home in Tustin.

Dr. Samuel Fortier, irrigation engineer stationed at Berkeley, has been promoted by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, to be chief of irrigation investigations. He will thus be in charge of all the investigations required in connection with the construction of irrigation works by the government and private parties which are expected to open up 5,000,000 acres of land in the West to settlement in 1908.

A Book of Humor.

A BACHELOR'S BABY. By Thomas L. Masson. Moffat, Yard & Co., New York. (Price $1.00.)

"A Bachelor's Baby" suggests, in general contents and appearance, Tom Masson's (why the formal "Thomas?") successful book of two years ago, "A Corner in Women." The book is illustrated by Flagg, Richards, Hanna, Crosby, Budd and other favorites, and has a cover of baby faces by Blashfield. It contains Masson's very latest humor, which means his very shrewdest and best work. In it we find, among many other good things, the series of stories concerning "Little Arthur, the Boy Magnate," as well as the various versions of "Mary's Little Lamb," supposed to be told by Thomas W. Lawson, James Whitcomb Riley, Henry James, Rudyard Kipling, Mr. Dooley, George Ade and James Gordon Bennett.

Here is George Ade's version: "A certain Peacherine named Mamie became wise to the fact that The Willie Boys were beginning to Wear on Her, and that doing Time in the St. Regis and Waldorf, and on the Washington Limited, was all to the bad. So she out on her Goggles and took a long look down the Alley for some New Form of Time Killer that Would Give her Simple little life a run for its money. It happened that a Woolly Lamb, like the Kind that Mother used to Shear, was doing the Koochy Koochy on the Park Slope, and Mamie went out and put enough Salt on his Tail to make him long for Friendly Doings With Her. So after that He followed her around like a College Graduate At a Football Bee. Moral: You can Search Me."

Talks by an Educator.

BACCALAUREATE ADDRESSES. By Arthur T. Hadley, President of Yale University. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. (Price $1.)

This volume, as its title indicates, is made up of addresses delivered by President Hadley to successive graduating classes of Yale. They deal with such subjects as "The Greatness of Patience," "The Christian Standard of Honor," "The Large View of Life," "The Choice of a Faith," etc. There are also added some "Talks on the Opening Sundays of the College Year" and three "Messages of the College to the Church."

All these addresses are in that devout, yet large and liberal, spirit which President Hadley has always shown in his work as an educator as well as in his contributions to current literature. They are full of sound common sense, yet they cling sturdily to a high idealism in life and conduct. They point out the dangers that threaten the spiritual life of the young man just entering into the crowded arena of the work-a-day world, and they also point the way of safety.

These noble addresses, all so simple and direct and sincere, will prove to be of equal help to college graduates of fifty years ago and to those of yesterday—and also to men who never went to college at all.

Stories of the Pennsylvania Dutch.

THE BETROTHAL OF ELYPHOLATE. By Helen R. Martin. The Century Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

Mrs. Martin, who gave to the American public a few years ago, in "Tillie, a Mennonite Maid," a charming character study and a record of life among an odd and interesting people, now brings forward, in this new book of short stories, a few other quaint women, maids and matrons, of close kinship with Tillie. There are eight stories in the book, all instinct with humor and pathos. Many of them show the strong religious sentiment of the Mennonites. The preposterous dialect of the Pennsylvania Dutch is rendered with careful fidelity—and this dialect adds much to the charm of the stories.

The volume is illustrated by Charlotte Harding and Alice Barber Stephens, both Pennsylvania artists.

Roosevelt the Naturalist.

CAMPING AND TRAMPING WITH ROOSEVELT. By John Burroughs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. (Price $1 net.)

This is the story of one naturalist about another, and we have here an interesting view of the outdoor side of the President. The book is in two parts, the first of which tells the story of Mr. Burroughs's trip with the President to the Yellowstone Park in the spring of 1903, while the second, which gives an account of a visit to Oyster Bay, treats of Roosevelt more specifically as a nature lover and observer. The whole gives us a vivid picture of an alert, breezy, energetic, whole-souled, enthusiastic man with a genuine love of nature and an exceptional faculty for acute and accurate observation. Mr. Burroughs tells us that the most interesting thing he saw among all the wonders of the National Park was the President himself, and he gives a very graphic and entertaining account of him—his manner of meeting people along the line of travel, his chats with old acquaintances of his ranching days, his rides and walks in the wilderness, his camp-fire conversation and story-telling.

Himself a "non-strenuous" person, Mr. Burroughs had many misgivings about going into the park with the "strenuous" man. "I had visions," he said, "of snow six and seven feet deep, where traveling could be done only upon snowshoes, and I had never had the things on in my life. If the infernal fires beneath, that keep the pot boiling so furiously in the park, should melt the snows, I could see the party tearing along at a wolf-hunt pace over a rough country; and as I had not been on a horse's back since the President was born, how would it be likely to fare with me then?"

But the aged gentleman got along famously, his worst mishap being when the four-mule team ran away with the ambulance which met the party at the railroad, ran over two large logs in the trail, and jarred him a bit. He also wore skis, the Norwegian snowshoe, raced down a long, steep hill on them, got a header into a big drift and enjoyed it. He rode horseback, too, although he had not been on a horse for nearly fifty years, wildly chasing a band of elk in order to obtain a good view of them.

Mr. Burroughs tells us that he found the President's interest in bird life very keen, and his eye and ear remarkably quick. He usually saw the bird or heard its note as quickly as I did—and I had nothing else to think about, and had been teaching my eye and ear a trick of it for over fifty years. Of course, his training as a big-game hunter stood him in good stead, but back of that were his naturalist's instincts, and his genuine love of all forms of wild life."

They saw one day, from the edge of a plateau, three thousand elk. At other times bands of sheep and deer. Often the President would take his lunch and go away alone for a whole day to sit near and study the animals, returning to camp in the evening to enthusiastically relate his experiences. The charge recently made against him that he is only a sportsman and has only a sportsman's interest in nature, is refuted. "I cannot now recall," says the author," that I have ever met a man with a keener and more comprehensive interest in the wild life about us—an interest that is at once scientific and thoroughly human."

About the President's recent controversy with the nature fakirs, Mr. Burroughs has a very decided opinion. He examined at the former's home the teeth of a very large mounted wolf, little more than an inch in length, and they all laughed at the idea of such an animal reaching the heart of a caribou through the breast with one, or any number of snaps.

The reviewer here wishes to add his testimany; he passed many years on the northwest plains in buffalo days, saw thousands of wolves, many of their attacks on game and many of their victims. They never attacked a large animal except at the heels, to ham string it, and in the case of a buffalo or elk calf, or fawn, at the throat. The assertion that they snap at rib-shielded heart or lungs is ridiculous!

In the second part of the book Mr. Burroughs gives us a charming view of the President's home life in its relation to the birds and quadrupeds of that section, and all in all has given us a book well worth reading. The volume is attractively illustrated from photographs, many of them showing the President while in the Yellowstone; others give glimpses of the beauty of his home at Oyster Bay. An appropriate cover, large, clear type, and good paper, complete the attraction of this little book.

About Russian Fiends.

THE RED REIGN. THE TRUE STORY OF AN ADVENTUROUS YEAR IN RUSSIA. By Kellogg Durland. The Century Company. (Price $2 net.)

Between January and December of last year, Mr. Durland traveled through every section of European Russia, Poland and the Caucasus, and a part of Western Siberia, a journey of over 20,000 miles. Through influential friends affiliated with the court, he was enabled to join a group of Cossack officers about to journey through the Caucasus. Protected by the officer's uniform which he wore, Mr. Durland rode with the Cossacks, entered their barracks freely under circumstances where any ordinary traveler would not have been permitted to pass the lines. He was even accorded the privilege to use his camera at will.

In St. Petersburg and Moscow, during the session of the first Douma, he made friends with the members, who then seemed likely to become a dominant force in Russia. After the dissolution, he affiliated almost entirely with the avowedly revolutionary parties. He cultivated members of the military organization, and with them visited the barracks at Kronstadt and elsewhere, where he witnessed conspirative revolutionary meetings of soldiers and sailors. He even became intimate with the more active fighting organizations, known to the world as "the terrorists." With their introductions, Mr. Durland traveled through Great Russia, across the tremendous famine belt, passed the Urals and entered Siberia, returning from Siberia through Northern Russia.

Mr. Durland is a Harvard man, and while in college became interested in social questions. When he graduated he went to Europe and passed two years in special studies of the subject at the University of Edinburgh and in Paris. During the summer of 1891 he spent four months as a working coal miner in Scotland, that he might study first hand the conditions of the British workingmen. In 1892, during the sessions of the anthracite coal strike commission in Pennsylvania, he served with the counsel for the miners, making special investigations into home conditions of the men, and it was largely through his investigations that child-labor revelations were unearthed, which so stimulated the era of legislative reform in child-labor laws throughout the country.

It will be seen that Mr. Durland's training had well fitted him for a study of conditions in unhappy Russia. What he saw there is set forth in this book in lucid English. The volume is fittingly bound in red covers, for it is red from beginning to end; a tale of bloodshed, beastly outrages by soldiers upon women and even little girls 4 or 5 years of age; of such terrible atrocities that the reader shudders and rubs his eyes, wondering if he hasn't been dreaming impossible things, instead of perusing a truthful narrative. The author himself was in constant danger, was arrested five times and cast into prison once on the general charge of "propaganda:" First, they had photographed a priest—and were, therefore, "anti-Christ." Second, they had paid one and one-half rubles for two meals—"no one would throw away money like that who did not have an ulterior motive for winning the good will of the people." Third, the author had a small, pointed beard, "and looked like a Jew." Fourth, "This man had false hair." Fifth, "He smoked a gold pipe!"

Kellogg Durland,

author of "The Red Reign."

The author tells us that Russia is today in a state of revolution, which would be viewed as a world catastrophe, were it not that the disease, of which the revolution is but a symptom, is infinitely more of a menace. That disease is autocracy, a system of government incompatible with twentieth century civilization, and doomed to extinction within the next few years, as inevitably as have been the passing of ancient empires. As an instance of revolutionary activity at present, official figures give the number of people killed in conflict in 1906 to be 36,000. In anti-Semitic outbreaks,—promoted by government agents—there were 22,000 sufferers. In the last two months of the year 50,000 political prisoners were exiled to Siberia. But there are 142,000,000 Russians, the greater number of them anxious for political freedom, and they are sure, sooner or later, to obtain it. The Czar and his unspeakably inhuman coterie of murderers, ravishers and thieves, are well aware that they will not succeed, and are but staving off the day of awful retribution as long as possible.

A Sociological Novel.

THE RADICAL. By I. K. Friedman, author of "By Bread Alone." D. Appleton & Co. (Price $1.50.)

This story deals with the struggles and development of Bruce McAllister, an energetic young statesman of high ideals, who finds political life in Washington far from ideal. He is honest, and works for needed reforms, such as the child labor bill, with all his big heart and spirit, refusing to compromise his ideals even when steadfastness means the bitter displeasing of Inez Hammersmith, whom he loves long before he has the courage to say so. Yet in the end the money forces triumph, and McAllister withdraws from the Senate, though not without faint hope, expressed in the book's final paragraphs, that he may sometime return in larger, more efficient capacity. He is not conquered, and he does not leave without inflicting some good hard blows on his opponents.

The love element of the story is neither its strongest nor its most effective part. The author is more at home in viewing the dominant note of humanism than in dealing with the tender passions. But the tender Inez and the more cunning Georgia are effectively painted, yet, after all, they are little more than pawns of the game. The fate of poor Georgia, who really deserves a better one, is described with a tense restraint that fairly thrills with its feeling of but half expressed tragedy. Humor, broad but convincing, enlivens the otherwise melancholy courtship of McAllister's sister, Elaine, and Dickinson, the blundering, eccentric artist, who, because of his inability to propose promptly and in due season, stands self-described as "an ass, a hopeless ass, without even sense enough to bray at the right time."

More than one phase of Chicago and Washington life is made real in this novel. The book is strong almost to bitterness, thoughtful, effective, worth reading.

An Old Time Tale.

THE SONS OF THE SEIGNEUR. By Helen Wallace. The Outing Publishing Company, New York. (Price $1.50.)

The scene of Helen Wallace's novel, "The Sons of the Seigneur," is the Channel Islands in the time of Charles I of England. Interwoven with the bloody events of the time a pretty love story is told; the fresh, fair, young heroine appears in the opening pages and our sympathy is with her to the end.

Miss Wallace shows an intimate familiarity with her subject, and describes much that probably did take place in those days in a way that makes her descriptions interesting. There is no attempt at character drawing; the tale is neither sociological nor philosophic; nor has it any humor; but it is a good story of love and adventure. There is enough uncertainty as to the way it will end, to keep the reader interested to the last page. Whether it does end happily or not, is not the province of the reviewer to reveal. All in all it is a good clean tale of interest, of some profit as well as entertainment, as the plot is semi-historical.

THE VOYAGE OF THE WISHBONE BOAT. By Alice C. D. Riley. H. M. Caldwell Company, New York.

OF PEOPLE AND THINGS LITERARY.

Arthur Hornblow, author of two successful novels, "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The End of the Game," returned to New York last week, after a pleasure trip of several weeks through Europe. Both of Mr. Hornblow's books have been big sellers. "The Lion and the Mouse" is now close upon its one hundredth thousand and "The End of the Game," which is about to appear serially in the Pittsburgh Press, is not far behind. This is an astonishing record for a new author. Mr. Hornblow is now at work on a third novel which the G. W. Dillingham Company has contracted to publish early next spring. The new book, like his two previous works, will deal with American life today.

their two attractive series of handy size volumes, the Red Letter Library and the Remarque Series of Literary Masterpieces, H. M. Caldwell Company of New York and Boston have added this year several important titles. In the former we note "Poems of Christina Rossetti," with an introduction by Alice Meynell, "Poems of Robert Burns," with an introduction by Neil Munroe, "Poems of Matthew Arnold," with an introduction by Alice Meynell, and "Walden," by H. D. Thoreau, with an introduction by Richard Whiteing. The new volumes in the Remarque edition are "The Man Without a Country," by Edward Everett Hale, "Snow-bound," by John Greenleaf Whittier, "Salome," by Oscar Wilde, and "The Ballad of Reading Gaol," by the same author. This last volume also contains an account of Wilde's life while in prison, written by one of the warders of Reading Gaol. Both series would enhance the value of any library, public or private, and in their general make-up of good type, fine paper, and beautiful bindings all book lovers will be anxious to possess them.

It will probably be said that "The Christ That Is To Be," a new book by the author of "Pro Christo et Ecclesia," as was said of its predecessor, that it is "a work of great power." In the preface the author modestly describes it as "only a series of successive efforts to think what the gospel of Jesus really is." The title indicates the author's belief that each age must interpret Christ for itself, and that this interpretation will differ in the future from what it is now or has been in the past. Particularly interesting at the present time are two chapters entitled "The Will of God," and "The History of Health by Faith," in which the author enlarges on the theories that body and mind are not two, but one; that health is essential to the complete saint, and that it is the belief of Jesus "that man's health is a citidel of God in this earthly life."

According to the publishers, no class of readers is more critical than the children, and much ingenuity is expended every year in making books to appeal to their captious tastes. A clever idea that should appeal to many children is embodied in a series of books called "Peeps at Many Lands." The six books in this series, dealing with "Italy," "France," "Holland," "Scotland," "India" and "Japan," are marvels of mechanical excellence, considering their low price. They are admirably printed on good paper, well bound, with a decorated cover, and each volume contains twelve colored illustrations by artists of recognized standing. If the children do not take to such books as these, the case of the publisher would seem well-nigh hopeless.

Percy MacKaye's poetic drama, "Sappho and Phaon," is to be produced in New York by Harrison Grey Fiske, with Bertha Kalich in the principal role, on October 21. Mr. MacKaye's play was published by The Macmillan Company last spring, and has been generally accepted by the literary critics as the most important work of its kind produced by an American in recent years. It is obviously not merely a "closet drama," but a play intended for actual presentation on the stage; and a great many admirers of Mr. MacKaye's undoubted gift will await with interest the result of Mr. Fiske's enterprise.

The Century Company's October issues will include Ralph Henry Barbour's jolly new book for boys and girls, "Tom, Dick and Harriet;" Emilie Poulsson's "Father and Baby Plays," as its title indicates, a book intended equally for little ones and their parents; Richard Watson Gilder's new book of poems, "The Fire Divine;" the three new Thumb-nails, Henry W. Longfellow's "Tales of a Wayside Inn," Charles Dickens's "Seven Poor Travelers," and Robert Louis Stevenson's "Travels With a Donkey;" David Homer Bates's "Lincoln in the Telegraph Office," personal memories of the martyred President's last years; Kellogg Durland's "The Red Reign," the record of a year's travel and unusual adventure in Russia, and Timothy Cole's "Old Spanish Masters," the latter in two editions, one an edition de luxe.

A posthumous book of Ian Maclaren's (Dr. John Watson) is being issued this week by the Revell Company—"God's Message to the Human Soul." If he had not won such great popularity by his stories, Dr. Watson would have been known as one of the widest-read of religious writers. He used to say of himself that there was a mistake made in his calling; he was not a priest, but a business man in the pulpit. This book bears just that business-like, practical relation to the Bible in the light of the new knowledge. He takes the ground that the book is God's message to the soul, and thus at once rejects the platform of the unbelieving critic; but he acknowledges the light that modern scholarship has given to the understanding of the Bible. On this point he discusses the construction, the standpoint, the humanity, authority, style and use of the book. "The price the world pays for a great book is the labor of understanding it." He quotes and gleans from any field anything that will give the highest ethical interpretation to the Bible.

NOVEMBER MAGAZINES.

In the November number of the Century, Percival Lowell, LL.D., begins the first of a series of notable articles on "Mars As the Abode of Life." Prof. Lowell believes that there are artificial canals upon Mars, and that these canals are one evidence of constructive life existing today upon that planet. He speaks with authority; and on the special subject of Mars his views carry more weight than those of any American astronomer. Other articles in this number are: "Grieg the Man," reminiscences of the great Norwegian composer by his friend, William Peters; "Lincoln's Offer of a Command to Garibaldi," settling a long-mooted question and proving from the private papers of the late George P. Marsh, Minister to Italy, and from Garibaldi's letters and from official sources, that the command of an army of the United States was offered by Lincoln to the great Italian leader; "Automobile Problems," a suggestive discussion as to the rights and wrongs of the automobile; the first chapters of "The Reminiscences of Lady Randolph Churchill," dealing with people and conditions of general interest and importance, and rich in the color and charm of Lady Churchill's personality; "Mme. Bressler-Gianoli," an appreciative article by one of New York's leading musical critics, Richard Aldrich; "The Natural History of the Ten Commandments," by Ernest Thompson Seton, setting forth the author's belief that the Ten Commandments are not arbitrary laws given to man, but fundamental laws of all creation. There are two unusual poems in the number, "The Quest of Edith," by Stephen Phillips, and "Ode On a Lycian Tomb," by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell.

The opening chapters of Mrs. Humphry Ward's new novel, "The Testing of Diana Mallory," gives the chief note of distinction to Harper's Magazine for November. The heroine is a piquantly interesting young Englishwoman whose family affairs are involved in mystery. To the same number Mme. de Bunsen contributes an installment of her reminiscences of diplomatic life, in which she gives many personal details of the marriage of Queen Margherita of Italy. Mme. de Bunsen is a daughter-in-law of the well-known Baron de Bunsen. The artist and writer, Charles Wellington Furlong, takes his readers to "A Plantation in the African Hills," and in text and pictures shows them some of the striking peculiarities of that country. In "Socialism and Communism in Greece," Thomas D. Seymour, LL.D., professor of Greek at Yale University, paints a most interesting picture of Athenian life, and shows how many of our "new" ideas are merely a renewal of the old. The still unsolved problems of the Sargasso Sea, that wonderful quiet sea of seaweeds lying between Florida and the Canary Islands, are presented and partially explained in Cyrus C. Adams's article in this number. Jennie Brooks writes a bright nature article about the doings of birds, based upon her own patient and careful observations in Louisiana and Ohio.

Smith's Magazine contains a complete novelette, "The Adder's Sting," by Elmore Elliott Peake. It is what is commonly known as a "temperance story," in that it deals with the drink question and has for its central figure a Methodist preacher, a young man of ability and character, who secretly becomes a victim of the liquor habit. His struggles with himself and the discovery by his wife that her husband is a dipsomaniac help to make a narrative of absorbing interest. The story winds up with a big dramatic climax, in which the minister breaks down from the effects of an over-indulgence in liquor, in the midst of a sermon.

Everybody's opens with a striking article by William Ward, on "Making Steel and Killing Men," which deals fairly with the problem of the safety of workers in the dangerous trade of steel-making. "The Newest Land of Promise," by G. W. Ogden, describes graphically the opening up and cultivation of the West, and the opportunities for wealth offered to the home-seeker. Dr. William Hanna Thomson, in "Plain Labels on Germ Enemies," gives interesting and valuable information on the difference between contagious and infectious diseases. "The Ladies' Game," by Gertrude Lynch, discusses the question as to whether or not the American woman is extravagant in dress, and is of interest not only to all women, but to every man who ever paid a dressmaker's bill. Charles Edward Russell, in the continuation of "Where Did You Get It, Gentlemen?" tells of the bogus loans of thousands of dollars made ostensibly to office boys, and of the further illegal transactions of the State Trust Company.

Following Sigismond de Ivanowski's series of portraits of favorite actresses in character and of heroines of fiction, the artist is at work on a new series —to be reproduced in The Century, in full color, during 1908—of famous operatic stars in character. The first of these portraits, that of Mme. Bressler-Gianoli as "Carmen," will be the frontispiece of the November Century.

"ONE OF THE PEOPLE"

This book is a photograph from life of three-quarters of a century of American adventure, humor and heroism, of the commonplace that suddenly takes on the colors of romance when you come to know it. Its almost unconscious directness of Saxon reminds one at times of Franklin's autobiography. American boys will recognize themselves in its boyhood, American men quote themselves like it in their manhood, and the student of American social existence during the period which it covers will consult it when more pretentious histories are forgotten.

New NOVELS from The Eastern Press

The busy season is with us. We are receiving daily the latest impressions from all the great eastern publishers. Three novels of more than passing interest are those we tell of today.

THE SHUTTLE

By Francis Hodgson Burnett

This story grows out of the marriage of an American girl, born of a generation of millionaires, to a mercenary Englishman of title. For years the girl is utterly lost to her family, until her younger sister determines to discover her. The events following the sister's arrival in England are decidedly dramatic, and their emotional interest is heightened by the sense of truths underlying them. The solution of the problem and the sister's own remarkable romance are absorbingly interesting. Price $1.35.

The Lion's Share

By Octave Thanet

A new book by the author of "The Man of the Hour."

A book of absorbing interest, optimism, vigor and humor. Its spirit of gaiety, of mystery, of freedom from convention makes it irresistible. Price $1.35.

The Apple of Discord

WHAT'S SAID IN SAN FRANCISCO.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 25.—The hot political campaign now in progress here has educated the voters of this city to the fact that they cannot believe everything they see in the newspapers. Several weeks ago three men were nominated for the office of Mayor and the people were given to understand that these three men were really candidates. Now they are informed daily in the public prints that instead of McCarthy running for Mayor, Pat Calhoun is the real candidate while Editor Hearst is the bona fide aspirant instead of Dan Ryan. Messrs. Phelan, Spreckels and DeYoung are reported to be the real substitutes for Mayor Taylor. Though Police Chief Biggy is not on the ballot he has none the less excited the wrath of one of the mayorality candidates who dubs him a "monkey face" and threatens to send him back to wash the dirty linen of Rudolph Spreckels.

The old man of the sea, told in song and story, earned a reputation for being a burden long before Abe Ruef came on the scene; but the little boss bids fair to catch up the handicap of time. He is fast becoming useless for every purpose except to hang indictments on when the grand jury is looking around for material. The graft prosecution will not use him as a witness and he is certainly not useful as a horrible example. Judge Seawell has decided that he did not enter into a conspiracy with Dist.-Atty. Langdon to put an extra tax-eater at the public trough, and so Ruef emboldened by this crumb of comfort has filed a pleading that the prosecution hereafter amend its complaints against him by eliminating the word "grafting" as he does not know what it means.

We are inclined to agree with those who wish to break the Yoell will that the testator was "loco" when an umpire's decisions would make him leave a baseball game after the third inning. A sane man would stay the game out and shout "rotten" every time the umpire presumed to match his opinion against that of the bleachers.

It is not at all smooth sailing with the San Francisco Yacht Club because Lawyer Pistolesi, a former member, is seeking revenge on the directors for expelling him because he accused them of being landlubbers and other things. The other night the club gave an entertainment called "The Mariners of Marin County," to prove that they were sailors, but the license fee of $3 was not paid. Now Pistolesi is an official of Marin county and he plans the arrest of the offending directors. Not content with this indignity, the irate lawyer will have the prisoners put in the Sausalito jail without benefit of clergy. This edifice stands in a salt marsh and when the high tide comes in its inmates must either swim or drown. Pistolesi says that he will be satisfied with either result, for if they drown it will prove his contention that they are not sailors, and if they do not drown they will have to pay the $3.

New York banks may fail for millions and President Roosevelt may prosecute "successful dishonesty" for sixteen months more, but that will not stop former Police Commissioner Reagan from attempting frenzied finance. He has sued McClure's Magazine for $100,000 for calling him a grafter and the San Francisco News Company for a like amount for disseminating the libelous information. Reagan insists that he has risen from the humble role of a street paver to the dizzy heights of an insurance broker by honorable toil. His integrity is of such an unquestionable character that among the followers of the late administration he was known as "Honest Tom."

Garters and rat poison are useful articles in their way but hereafter they must travel on their own merits alone if the wishes of the local Red Cross are carried out. It appears that the flaming emblem of the society has been cheapened by indiscriminate use particularly on the articles above mentioned and the Federal district attorney has been asked to legally limit its use.

William Shakespeare, as a yellow journalist, reported to an expectant world some years ago that a Moorish general named Othello had no occupation because there was no war. There is a similar case here in San Francisco today. W. D. Mahon, international president of the amalgamated association of street railway employés of America, is here to settle a strike. General Manager Black of the United Railways says: "I do not know that there is a strike, though I have seen in the papers that the United Railways has had some trouble with its former employés." It would appear from this that Mahon, like Othello, has no occupation. The other night at a meeting of the Carmen's Union called to hear him tell what he proposed to do, it was announced that he was over in Oakland.

Edel Hecht, a delegate from this city to the recent convention of lithographic workmen held in Chicago, is home again, enthusiastic over the work accomplished. After his election as vice-president he caused to be passed the following resolution: "The interests of the workmen in the lithographic industry demand that they be organized on broad industrial lines instead of on the faulty, narrow, purely craft organizations to which latter form of organization our defeat in the late lockout was due. That form of organization should be abandoned because it leads, by the very defect of its structure, to defeat in any contest with the employers' organization, which is welded together along modern capitalistic lines."

PLUTO.

Pure Turnip Whisky.

"Try this, mon," said the Scotch host, pouring an inch or two of whisky from a jug.

The guest tried it, reddened, coughed, choked.

"Gee," he said, as the other pounded his back.

"Aweel, mon, tell's what ye think o't."

"It warms me," said the guest. "It warms and thrills me. But is it not a little rough, a little hot? It went down, I confess, like a torchlight procession or a string of chestnut burrs."

The Scotchman laughed contemptuously.

"Ye've got no thirst," he said. Ye'll ne'er make a whusky drinker. Losh, mon, that is the purest an' most potent spirit ever passed yer lip—an' ye choked on it. It is pure turnip spirit made on my brither's farm at Craigenputtock."

"Made out of turnips, hey?"

"To be sure. All over bonny Scotia they mak' whusky out o' turnips. They're thrifty there. Nought goes to waste. Here's to ye, mon."—[Exchange.

BAR DEAD.

SEEK TO STOP CITY BURIALS.

PETITION WILL BE PRESENTED TO COUNCIL TOMORROW.

More Than Five Thousand Signers in the Fourth and Fifth Wards Ask That Interment of Bodies Be Prohibited Within Municipality. Scheme for Parking Cemeteries.

Prohibition of the burial of bodies within the city is the scope of a request which will be presented to the City Council tomorrow.

More than 5000 petitioners residing in the Fourth and Fifth wards will ask it. At a little later period they will be backed by other petitioners representing the Ninth Ward, especially, and a general petition to be signed by householders throughout the city generally.

The movement is in line with the action of various eastern cities, in which have been passed ordinances prohibiting the burial of bodies. The movement recommends itself to many on the grounds of sanitation and the rapidly expanding population which is reaching out on all sides of both the large cemeteries located within the city.

The petitioners ask that the proposed ordinance shall prohibit the further establishment or extension of any cemetery, and that it shall prohibit any person, association or corporation from burying the dead body of any person. The petition further recites:

"The passage of said ordinance is urged upon your honorable body for the reason that Los Angeles has grown in population to such an extent that the further burying of the dead within the city, and the extension of the cemeteries therein, will be a menace to the health of the residents of the city, and will become more of a danger to health as the population continues to increase. We deem it very necessary for the present and future welfare of our city that the ordinance above proposed be passed."

Some time ago there was a movement to make of Rosedale Cemetery a public park. There was much interest shown in the proposition, but the subject was allowed to drop. The cemetery Association has a strip of land between that section used for interments and the resident section of Pico Heights, which would make an admirable city park. It is accessible by the Santa Monica cars on Sixteenth street, and the Los Angeles Railway cars on Pico street, and the Washington-street line on the south.

There is also quite a tract of unused land located within the bounds of Evergreen Cemetery, lying along Brooklyn avenue, and this could be utilized for park purposes. It is accessible through three electric car lines.

Within the past three or four years there have been developed several beautiful cemeteries in the country near Los Angeles, and it is argued by the supporters of the present movement that these cemeteries offer every attraction which the city cemeteries contain as places for the last rest of one's beloved, and that in nearly every case these cemeteries are easy of access by electric lines.

When both Evergreen and Rosedale were established they were practically out in the country. There seemed little prospect that either would be surrounded by dwellings for many years. But over in the Ninth Ward the residences have stretched out for almost a mile beyond the cemetery, while the section around Rosedale is as closely built as any other part of the southwest.

The move to prohibit further burials of bodies within the city will have the support of nearly all the improvement associations.

THREATEN BOYCOTT.

Unionites Name Committee to Attempt to Bulldoze Merchants Into Bowing to Yoke.

In an attempt to block the plans of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association for industrial peace this winter, the Central Labor Council of Los Angeles, at its last meeting, passed a resolution empowering a committee to visit all the local merchants with a view to demanding their support. It is believed the laborites will try to boycott business houses unless the proprietors give themselves over to the union.

Desperate at the splendid success attending the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association in its alignment of the business men of the city, the labor unions are getting ready to make another feeble attempt to block progress and to frighten merchants into declaring themselves for the unions.

Leaders of the unions openly state they will compel business men to sign an iron-clad agreement to stand by the unionites of the city on the threat of losing all the trade of the members of the unions.

The Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association is not dismayed by this threatened move. The association was never stronger than it is today and its members are prepared to meet the threats of the laborites in a firm manner.

BATH OF HOT ASPHALT.

Charles Carpenter of South Figueroa street, helper for a local paving company, was painfully burned yesterday morning while laying asphalt on Bunker Hill avenue. He looked as if he had been tarred and feathered when he appeared at the Receiving Hospital. It required the services of two surgeons and a nurse to peel the asphalt from his body. Carpenter was dipping hot tar from a kettle when the ladle slipped and to avoid spilling the stuff on himself the man jumped to one side and landed in the hot asphalt. One arm was covered almost to the shoulder with the hot, black stuff and it hardened and caked before the injured man could reach the hospital.

NO MORE KILLING THERE.

On account of the protests, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals will not destroy any more horses on Olive street between Sixth and Seventh. Secretary Zimmer has made arrangements to secure a vacant lot in the eastern part of the city, where the animals can be killed and hauled to the crematory. The society had permission to kill the animals in the rear of a blacksmith shop by the owners. Four horses were killed there, but were not removed for several hours.

DISCONTINUES RELAY STATION.

The relay system on the Huntington Beach and Newport line of the Pacific Electric will be discontinued this week. It has been found to be of no special benefit except during the months of heavy summer traffic. The system will be placed in operation again next season on several lines to the beaches. The system is operated by having motormen stationed at the branch roads. The cars are coupled together at the Pacific Electric building and run in a train to the junctions, where they are disconnected. The motorman takes charge of the car to the terminus and back to the junction, where it is made into a train again.

MONEY FOR STREETS.

West Seventh street, from Figueroa to Francisco street, $6027.

Washington street, from Grand avenue to Figueroa street, $12,146.

San Pedro street, from Fifth to Jefferson street, $98,979.

Hoover street, from Washington to Twenty-fourth street, $18,801.

Pico street, from Hoover to the western city limits, $78,302.

Union avenue, from Washington to Twenty-third street, $15,628.

West Ninth street, from Figueroa to Spring street, $22,550.

Central avenue, from Twelfth street to the southern city limits, $129,[illegible].

Cinnabar street, from Second to Third street, $5548.

WORK NOW PROGRESSING.

The above refers to work which has actually been accomplished, but there is also a vast amount of work now in the hands of the contractors. It is the estimate of the City Engineer's office that there are now under construction within the city limits at least forty-one miles of sewers.

There is no let-up in the demand for asphalt paving, and the paving now in progress or for which immediate beginning is to be made includes East Main street from the Los Angeles River to Eastlake Park; Ninth street, from Figueroa street to Union avenue; Eleventh street, from Main to Figueroa; Grand avenue, from Fifth to Figueroa; Hope street, from Fifth to Pico; Flower street, from First to Washington; Eighth street, from Main to Figueroa; Hoover street, from Twenty-fourth to Adams; East First street, from the Los Angeles River to Chicago street; Union avenue, from Twenty-fourth to Twenty-eighth; California street, from Figueroa to Hill, and numerous alleys in the downtown business district.

And there is still more paving in sight. The projected improvement of several long stretches of highway with asphaltum paving is now assured. Included in this list are Jefferson street, West Adams street, Vermont avenue, East Seventh street, from Alameda street to the Los Angeles River; San Fernando street, from Marchessault to College street, and several other much-used highways.

The only highway of special importance which has undertaken to secure paving and then receded from its position is Pasadena avenue, and it is believed this project will be revived within the next few weeks.

A movement is now on foot to secure the paving of Brooklyn avenue from the eastern city limits for entire length, and Macy street from Main street to the point where it joins Brooklyn avenue. It is also proposed to change the name of the latter street so as to make it a continuation of Brooklyn avenue, thus giving one continuous street from the business district across Brooklyn Heights to the eastern city limits.

Los Angeles now has more than 400 miles of graded and graveled streets; more than forty-five miles of asphalt-paved streets, and from five to six miles of streets paved with granite and macadam. The city has about 275 miles of sewers within its borders, and with the use of the new outfall sewer, which will be an accomplished fact within a few days, there will be a demand for many more lateral sewers.

Never before has there been such activity in all departments of street improvement in Los Angeles. People are looking upon these investments as money wisely expended, and they are planning new work which will keep the contractors and laborers busy for many months. Yesterday, at the office of the Board of Public Works, there was a bunch of street-improvement petitions which stood almost a foot in height, and this is a sample of the grist that comes every week to this mill.

"What's that?" asked Ballantine, looking at it from a distance.

"Oh, that's the tomb of Cyrus," cried the frightened Mohammed, pleading with him to consider their danger and never mind about the tomb of Cyrus.

But the delightful Yankee paid no attention to his hullabaloo.

"No, you don't mean it!" he exclaimed, with sudden enthusiasm. "Is that the old wretch who caused me so much trouble in college? I want to go over and be sure he's really dead—all the trouble I had translating things about him."

So they changed direction, and went to the tomb. It was a plain, sturdy sarcophagus, with the simple inscription: "Here lies Cyrus. Grudge me not this bit of ground." An ordinary Persian tomb would have proclaimed the dead to be son of the stars and near relative to most of the constellations.

"Well, Cyrus," mused the Yankee, "for a fellow who owned the whole world, your claims were not very excessive."

He had almost forgotten about their terrible danger, until, with a terrific yell, a band of wild Arabs came swooping down upon them, brandishing their guns and pulling up their horses suddenly—down on their haunches, much as our vaqueros used to do in the days before the Gringo came.

LIFE HANGS BY THREAD.

"Who are you?" demanded the sheik, rudely, in the Persian tongue.

The Persians are a people of the most ceremonious politeness, and this abrupt manner of insolence bore a significance that Ballantine understood. He knew it meant trouble—also, that his life and the lives of every one in his party depended upon his diplomacy.

He did not even look up at the sheik's imperious demand. He took one last affectionate look at the tomb of Cyrus and walked on, shoving past the tribesmen as if they had been hitching posts.

The sheik's jaw fairly dropped with blank astonishment. American "nerve" was something he had not sampled up to that time. Recovering his senses, he galloped after the Yankee, flinging his gun about, and again demanded: "Here, stop. Who are you?"

He was furiously angry.

Ballantine walked on without a waver, but he said to his servant, not condescending to address the sheik in person:

"Tell that insolent son of a dog for me that he hasn't the first instincts of a gentleman. He should have said 'Salaam Al-e-Koom (Peace be to you in the name of God.) But instead of that he rushes out and demands 'Who are you?' like some ruffian."

A flush of rage passed over the sheik's face, and he yelled: 'You march over to our tents. We will strip you of everything you have in the world, and you can thank God if we let you escape with your lives."

Mohammed, the servant, was livid with fear.

Ballantine strolled serenely along.

"Tell that son of a dog that we can't accommodate him; we have something else to do," he said, coolly.

This "cheek" so astonished the sheik that he stopped his horse, and said, in quite anoter tone—one of wonder and astonisment: "Say, in God's name, who are you, anyhow?"

SPREAD IT ON THICK.

"Tell him," said Ballantine," still speaking through his servant, "that I am a great Hakim (doctor,) and," he added in a low voice, "you had better spread it pretty thick, too."

Mohammed, with the inspiration of terror, "laid it on" as thick as the most ardent could desire. Ballantine listened with pride to Mohammed's splendiferous account of purely imaginary exploits in the realms of science and medicine. He gave the sheik pretty well to understand that Ballantine was the man who had invented the solar system and that curing the sick was almost too easy.

Imagine their horror and consternation when the sheik exclaimed in a tone of sudden joy:

"God be thanked. God has sent you to us. My poor brother is dying over in our tents, you shall come over and restore him to health."

"Now," groaned the unhappy Mohammed, "now you have done it. Oh, Allah forgive me for having left my peaceful home with this crazy American."

Ballantine, however, showed no fear—whatever he may have felt. He gave that sheik one glare of contemptuous scorn.

"Tell him," he said to Mohammed, "that a Hakim of my distinction does not go around into a lot of rotten, dirty, flea-infested tents. However, I am a merciful man—even to those so much below me. Tell him I will condescend to cure his brother some time tomorrow if he will bring him over to our caravansary."

The Bedouins made a deep salaam and respectfully withdrew. This proposition was certainly a staggerer. It was about five miles to the caravan. He thought they would never be able to get the sick man over there.

"Yes, you are very slick," said Mohammed, ruefully, "but what will you do in case they bring him over?"

"Well, we haven't got to that yet," said Ballantine, easily.

NOW COMES THE RUB.

Next day at noon, however, he was dismayed to see a strange little procession coming over the desert. A man of splendid proportions was being held on the back of a donkey.

Two men were holding his legs and two more his arms; his brother, the sheik, was leading the donkey. The sufferer seemed half dead.

As he saw them coming over the desert, Ballantine said hurriedly to his servant: "Mohammed, you hop around here and get out everything I own that looks shiny and nickel-plated. I've got to have some stage settings."

Mohammed, in the intervals of squaring himself with Allah again, rushed frantically around and got out a great array of cameras, field glasses, meat cans—anything that would look shiny and scientific.

It should be explained that in the Far East, a doctor is an object of deep respect and considerable veneration. Ballantine wanted to carry out the part.

When they brought the sick man in, it was plain to see that he was fairly dying of a very simple complaint. While the sheik gazed with awe at the junk, Ballantine measured out a dose of epsom salts that would have blown up a battleship, and sent him back to his camp with the donkey, telling him solemnly to take it just as the sun went down.

"Mohammed," he said to his servant, "that man is going to be well tomorrow morning or we are going to be killed."

Which did not seem to cheer Mohammed very much

Later in the day, while they were waiting to find out whether they were to be murdered or not, Mohammed hurried excitedly in, saying that a squadron of Persian regular cavalry about 400 strong were in camp behind some hills only about a mile away.

PROTECTION IN SIGHT.

"Sahib," said Mohammed tearfully, "if you will only come down off your high horse and be more serious, these cavalrymen will probably protect us."

They mounted and rode over to the camp, and found the colonel in command a very affable gentleman. He received Ballantine with great state. When they were within the tent, the colonel's servant got out the splendid

FAR FROM MADDING CROWD.

QUAINT LIFE OF TOPANGO CANYON.

BY CLOUDSLEY JOHNS.

IN TOPANGO CANYON, where a wealth of varied human personality has been gathered by the many attractions which the mountains of the region hold, acting on the minds of men from many walks of life, through their need or their desire, social intercourse is not formal. There are no "business acquaintances" there, and any fear of offending is determined wholly by the value of friendship for friendship's sake.

The natural bent of each mind manifests itself more truly and broadly than in centers of population where the manner of life makes conduct more formal, and the result is variety. "Tony" is more refreshingly impudent in the cañon than he can ever have been in a community where human relations have become methodical, and assuredly gains more affection.

When, on "the Thursday night in each month when the moon is brightest," the dwellers in the cañon gather in the Garapatas school house to show what each can do to amuse the others, "Tony" is the hero of the occasion, hailed with joy, and a little feared for the keenness of his sense of the absurd, and a caustic quality in his ready wit. For "Tony" has a melancholy strain in his make up, not developed in the Topango, which works itself off in sarcastic humor.

The Garapatas school house is in the North Fork of Topango Cañon, where the stream of water runs. "Garapatas" means "tick," and the name is not wholly a misnomer in the region. The disagreeable insects, however, seem to confine their distressing attentions to dogs and cattle, of which there are many in the cañon.

It really is necessary that the time of the monthly gathering and celebration should wait upon the phases of the moon, for the roads, in both branches and the main stem, are not designed exactly for the driving of four chariots abreast, or anything of that sort.

Though there is variety enough in the little entertainment, there is a suggestion of monotony in the recurrence of the name of Santa Maria in the programme. The Santa Maria family, of seventeen children, goes far toward rendering the average of members in all the families acceptable to the President. Most of the Santa Marias, excepting the very small ones, can "do something." Antonio can draw the semblance of a tune from two or three instruments at once, and his proficiency is increasing.

The schoolhouse is just beyond McAllister's camp, in the North Fork. Mr. McAllister does not attend the monthly gatherings, but delights in the echoes of the entertainment which come to the camp with the returning groups. Mr. McAllister, through thirty years of court reporting in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Alaska, put too great a strain on his nervous system, and it weakened. Day by day, however, since he went to dwell in the wonderful cañon, he has regained power to walk, to dig out rocks and milk cows. In all of this he displays the joy of a boy in growing up the first time.

Mrs. Stella McAllister seems not to care for joys of her own, directly, preferring to delight in the joys of others. Everybody likes to go to McAllister's.

A group of court reporters, whom McAllister helped teach when they were boys, are going to essay the narrow road in an automobile next week to visit him.

There is a San Francisco attorney among the many interesting persons in the cañon. He is inclined to brood in the midst of grandeur, and to nourish regrets about something or other; but he gets over a lot of this, for a while, while working on the rocky road to his elevated ranch on the "Dry Fork" of the cañon.

It is not so very dry just now, and will become a torrent ere the winter is done; and even in midsummer there are springs pouring out their sparkling waters. Some of these springs are strong of iron. The taste is pleasant while the water runs clear, but if it becomes banked in, stagnating a little, its flavor makes one believe that some hens have laid eggs there long ago and forgotten them.

There are persons in the cañon who are making a livelihood, as well as gaining life itself, through the majority, including army officers of England and America, judges and such persons, live there or go there for health or for sheer joy in the grandeur of the scenery.

On the Greenleaf ranch, where the rotund growth of vegetables suggests the general health of the region, there are many stands of bees, and the honey they gather is of the most desired pale amber hue.

Jack Wood, too, has an apiary over in the other fork of the cañon. Mrs. Wood is a daughter of Mr. McAllister. She used to be instructor in painting in the Los Angeles School of Art. But the cañon is the despair of picture-painters, with its own pictures, of dainty beauty and colossal grandeur, ever changing in the changing mountain light.

Almost everybody raises fowls of all sorts. These creatures find food abundant on the hills, and fatten in freedom like the quail which abound there. But the chickens, ducks, and in lesser degree the turkeys, remain domesticated in the midst of splendid wildness.

Not so the goats which range the broad, hilly pastures, between the widely-separated fence lines which prevent their becoming wild goats altogether. These goats are fat but vigorous. The conventional "goat joke" does not apply to them, for they neither eat tin cans nor butt dignified persons. When Mrs. McAllister wants to give her guests a change from chicken to goat meat, her brother, Morton Allen, goes out with a rifle to get the meat. He owns the goats, but they don't seem to know it.

The cañon will change, especially in its human relations, as the camps take on more and more the character of "hotels," and more people gather there; but the grandeur and the beauty cannot be smothered or greatly obscured.

HIS "FUNERAL MONEY."

Montana Man, Who Has Mortuary Habit, Taken North on False Pretense Charge.

H. B. Campbell, Deputy Sheriff of Missoula, Mont., arrived in Los Angeles yesterday and took charge of A. T. Knapp, arrested here on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses.

Knapp is charged with a remarkable crime. He came to Los Angeles several weeks ago, and while here sent a telegram to his mother, asking her for funds with which to pay his doctor's bills and funeral expenses. The telegram was signed, "Dr. Moore."

Mrs Knapp, who lives at Missoula, Mont., was not alarmed upon receiving notification of her son's death. She had sent his funeral expenses to various parts of the United States on several occasions.

Instead of weeping, she sent the $200, and after Knapp had received the money and his scheme had been exposed as a fake, local detectives arrested the "much-dead" man.

Deputy Sheriff Campbell started North with his prisoner last night.

FINGERS FLY FOR CHARITY.

NEEDLEWORK GUILD ENGAGES IN ANNUAL ACTIVITY.

Each of Fifteen Hundred Members Expected to Make Two Garments for the Needy—Have Distributed Quarter Million in Twelve Years. Great Good Done.

The days of Dorcas have come again. Fifteen hundred busy women in Los Angeles, prominent in social and philanthropic circles, have taken up needle and thread and are sewing for the Needlework Guild of America. Each member of the local branch will have two new garments ready for the yearly ingathering at Kramer's Hall Monday, November 4.

These garments will be given to the worthy poor. They are distributed each year among the various institutions coming in close touch with the pitiable needs that the winter season brings even in this mild climate. Last year forty-four local charities received from seventy-five to 350 articles of wearing apparel, or household linen, absolutely new and fresh, from the Needlework Guild, and in the twelve years of its existence the local branch has furnished 270,345 garments to the poor of Los Angeles.

"Thank God for new clothes," fervently exclaimed Capt. Butler of the Salvation Army Rescue Home, last Thursday afternoon at the Ingraham Hotel.

She was speaking to a crowd of fashionably-garbed women. She referred to the plain, serviceable clothing furnished to her rescue home by the Needlework Guild. So many worn-out, thread-bare garments are given to the needy, that Capt. Butler felt called upon to explain how much it meant to have absolutely new clothing to distribute.

"I always save the new things for especially deserving cases," said Miss Carver of the Associated Charities at the same meeting, "and I could tell you of families saved from pauperism by the timely help of new clothing for the children once a year. One brave little woman who keeps the wolf from the door for her seven little ones has been able to hold her own year after year because of the existence of the Needlework Guild."

Mrs. S. S. Salisbury, president for the local work, presided over the meeting. She explained the simple requirements for membership in the guild—two new garments to be furnished yearly, or a money equivalent.

"Just a bit of practical Christianity is what our organization seeks to accomplish by its yearly work," said Mrs. Salisbury, "and Christianity," she quoted, "is not a voice in the wilderness, but a life in the world; not an idea in the air, but feet on the ground, going God's way."

An appealing feature of the meeting was the presence of ten little folks from the Kings' Daughters Day Nursery, in care of the matron, Mrs. Turnbull. The bright-faced youngsters sang, and Mrs. Turnbull told the women how much help she had received from the guild. Each of the "kiddies" was given a bag of candy, tied with pink ribbon.

Dana Bartlett of the Bethlehem Institutional Church, Mrs. Scarborough of the Los Angeles Orphans' Home, and Dr. Vasen from the Kaspare Cohn Hospital had the same story to tell of help each year from the Needlework Guild.

The guild in Los Angeles embraces thirty-seven sections with 1500 members. Remarkable among them is the Merchants' Section. The merchants of Los Angeles do not handle needle and thread but they save up every odd piece that can be spared from stock, and turn it over to Mrs. Salisbury once a year. They have contributed largely of money and goods. Another helper in the work is Mr. Kramer, who for ten years has given the use of his hall for the three days each fall.

Tuesday afternoon, November 5, from 3 to 5 o'clock, the garments will be on view and the general public is invited to at reception at Kramer's Hall. All members are asked to send their contributions to their section presidents, not later than Saturday, November 2, with name of sender on each bundle. Those desiring to help in the work may send garments or money to Mrs. S. S. Salisbury at the Ingraham Hotel.

Following are the institutions that received help from the guild last year: Associated Charities, Assistance League, Barlow Sanitarium, Bethlehem Institutional Church, Boys' and Girls' Aid Society, Brownson House, Boys' Boarding Home, Children's Hospital, Church of the Neighborhood, Christian Orphanage, County Hospital, College Settlement, Deaconess Home, De Pauw Industrial School, Door of Hope, Deaconess Grebe, Detention Home, French Benevolent Society, Florence Home, Golden Corner Sunshine Society, Hebrew Benevolent Society, Humane Society, Kaspare Cohn Hospital, King's Daughters' Day Nursery, Los Angeles Orphan Asylum, Los Angeles Orphans' Home, Loan Closet City Nurse, Maud Booth Home, McKinley Home, Missionary Sisters, Newsboys' Home, Presbyterian Spanish School, Public Nurse, Ransom Home, Salvation Army, Salvation Army Rescue Home, Stanton Relief Corps, Sunshine Society, St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral Sick and Needy Committee, St. Vincent de Paul Society, Travelers' Aid Society, Union Veteran Legion, Victoria Home, Home of the Guardian Angel.

FACED DEATH OFTEN.

narghile, wiped it with a napkin and passed it to the colonel, who merely touched it with his lips. It was then borne ceremoniously to the honored guest.

"Instead of taking it, Ballantine waved it away.

"Thanks," he said; "don't smoke."

The colonel looked daggers and instanly arose. Mohammed groaned.

"You might just as well have kicked him," he whispered.

Ballantine, realizing the situation was critical, quickly got up and went to the Russian samovar in the corner and with his own hands, poured a cup of tea for the colonel—doing a servant's work out of honor to a friend. To an oriental mind, that was a delicate and very high compliment. The colonel was delighted, and they sat down again.

"Is it possible," he asked, "that you really do not smoke? I never heard of such a thing in my life."

During the rest of the journey, the cavalry guarded Ballantine's little caravan as carefully as if he had been royalty. Later he received word from the Bedouin tribe, saying that the sick man had completely recovered, and inviting the wonderful Hakim to become chief of the tribe. He courteously declined.

Ballantine's life has been filled with such adventures. He strolled in Nepal, the forbidden country of the savage, fire-eating Gurkhas, passing the troops on the border by a queer Yankee bluff. He had a sort of passport which he knew to be worthless, but he showed it to them, anyhow, for luck. The havildar commanding the guard thrust it back with scorn. They argued about it for a while. At last the American got tired of it, and shoved the man to one side, taking down the bars that served as a barrier to the forbidden border of Nepal.

They went tearing after him with loaded guns.

"Now, look here," he said severely to the veteran havildar, "if you don't behave, I'll have my friend, the maharajah, send back a messenger tomorrow morning, and your head will be carried in to Katmandu on a platter."

The havildar didn't really believe that the American knew the maharajah, but it worried him. He changed his tone, and politely begged him to come back, and not try to cross the border.

"No," said Ballantine, "if you had asked me nicely in the beginning, I might have done it, but considering that you were so rude, I can't grant your request."

With that he gave the signal for his bearers to march on.

While in Nepal, he witnessed the terrible butchery of one of the native revolutions in which the Prime Minister was murdered. He also had an unusual experience there in seeing the widow of the villainous Nana Sahib.

Mr. Ballantine has been a friend of Henry M. Stanley, Du Chaillu, Kipling and other distinguished men.

"Mr. Kipling," he says, "has written wonderful stories about India, but I should say that he is rather inclined to spread on red paint. With his matchless knowledge of words and his strong, marvelous style, it is rather a pity that he should have not portrayed more accurate facts."

Mr. Ballantine makes the surprising statement that Mowgli, the man-wolf of the Jungle Book, was an actual character. At the government orphan asylum in the north of India, five such children have been brought in; children stolen by the wolves and suckled by them. The Indian women have a fashion of suspending their little ones in a sort of hammock from the trees. Sometimes the wolves rush in and snatch them.

Mr. Ballantine saw the wolf child from whom it is quite likely Mowgli was built. He had been found, after living years among the wild animals. His figure had assumed a stooping position. He walked partly on all fours.

The wolf child lived but a few years in civilization. He did not take to life in a house as kindly as the idealized Mowgli. He wore a long funny-looking coat and developed

DR. McLAUGHLIN WANTS ROCKEFELLER'S MILLION

The Man Who Proved that He Was Five Years Ahead of Prof. Loeb in Discovering that "Electricity Is Life" Now Says that He Can Cure John D. Rockefeller, and Agrees to Give $5000.00 to Charity if He Fails.

"When the stomach is not generate sufficient of this supply the demands of the the natural result is a of nerve, organic and mus- —a general debility. Then agent must be used to assist the stomach. That agent is Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt.

"This is the remedy for Mr. Rockefeller. To prove my faith in it, I would be willing to put up $5000 to be given to any public charity which he may select if I fail to cure his stomach in four months, he to wear my appliance for six hours each day or night during that time. And he may be the sole judge as to the results obtained?"

"How about Mr. Rockefeller's offer of a million dollars, doctor?"

"That is a secondary matter. I want it, of course, but not for my own use, as I don't need it, and a million dollars wouldn't increase my happiness one quiver. I would much rather have the satisfaction of seeing my invention successful in curing a case where so many noted physicians have failed. When a man has devoted the greater part of his life to the development of an idea which he thinks will benefit humanity, he is passionately fond of his idea and money holds little fascination for him."

"What would you do with the money, doctor?"

"If I should earn the prize I would gladly consent to having it go to some public charity, which I would reserve the right to name."

"And the $5000 which you offer?"

"On the day that Mr. Rockefeller agrees to use my treatment and observe my simple instructions, I will put up my certified check for the amount, to be paid to any public charity which he may designate if he says that I have failed in my work."

"Then you leave the matter entirely in his hands?"

"Entirely. I am willing to trust to his decision.

"A great many wealthy men are suffering tortures and dosing themselves with drugs without relief who never try a remedy like mine because they impose entire confidence in their family physicians, who believe that 'electricity is a remedy of the future, not of today,' and so advise their patients.

"I tell you that electricity is a remedy of today. It has been a grand remedy for the past ten years. I have studied this subject more carefully than any physician ever studied his text-books, and I can show results. I am curing men every day who were never able to get benefit from drugs."

"Is it true, doctor, that your patients are mostly people of the middle or poorer class?"

"Yes. When a rich man is sick he calls in his doctor, who writes a prescription and looks wise, and the rich man has confidence that he will be well tomorrow. He feels better perhaps, because the doctor can fool nature for a while. But after a while the doctor looks wise and it doesn't do the rich man any good, and the first thing he knows nature demands her price and he has to pay it, as the doctor can help him no more.

"When a poor man gets sick he does the same way, but he soon gets tired of the doctor bills and takes his case in his own hands and comes to me. I cure him with electricity, and that is why my patients are usually poor men. Rich men's doctors will not let them come to me.

"You cannot possibly estimate the true import of this discovery of Prof. Loeb," said Dr. McLaughlin. "It means more happiness to the civilized race than has followed any discovery for years. It will bring about the general recognition of the great possibilities which exist in the application of electricity for the preservation of the vigor of youth.

"I have for years contended that old age was nothing but the freezing of the blood when there was no longer sufficient vital heat in the body to keep the blood warm and the organs active. I have said that years did not cause decay, and proved it by citing cases where some men have been made vigorous under my rejuvenating treatment at eighty, while you have examples all about you of men who are old and decrepit at sixty.

"Now Prof. Loeb says that the animal heat is electricity. That I know to be true. We get that heat from the chemical action of the acids and juices of the stomach upon our food. That is combustion. This combustion produces carbonic heat, and carbonic heat is electricity. That is the basis of life in every vital organ. As long as the stomach is able to generate enough of this heat to replenish the wear and tear upon our vital energies we are strong and active. It is when the stomach finds the strain too heavy that we grow old and begin to decay.

"An old fellow, a patient of two years previous, asked me to have his belt overhauled, as he wished to put it on again. I reminded him that he had reported himself as cured two years before, and I did not see the need of the belt now. 'Precaution,' said he. 'I was cured two years ago, strong and sound, but I am 71 years of age and am not as well able to stand knocking about as I was in my youth, and I wear the belt occasionally not because of present need, but just so that I will have strength to spare in case of demand. If you are riding a bicycle on level ground and see a hill before you, what do you do? Put on more steam, eh? I am getting older every day, and I need more steam. That is why I wear my belt.'

"This is upon the same principle that an engine pulls a train of cars up hill. On level road it goes easily, but when it goes up hill the strain is heavy, and your engine, making power from burning coal, just as your stomach makes it from burning food, is taxed beyond its limit, is unable to go farther, and, exhausting all its steam in the effort, breaks down.

"The human body is just like that engine. It breaks down when the physical energy is overtaxed. That energy is electricity. I have here a means of replenishing the electricity of the body, and that is the basis of my treatment.

"Decay in old men is similar to general debility in younger men. Years have nothing to do with it. In each case it is a failure of the stomach to generate sufficient energy to supply the demands made by the vital organs.

"How quickly we fail when the stomach fails to digest the food! That shuts off the supply of energy.

"I have on record hundreds of instances where men of 75 to 90 have returned to the hard labor of their youth with a vim after having worn my appliance three months.

"One decrepit old man of 77 had in youth been a blacksmith. After using my appliance he took up his tools and says he can work as hard as he did at 25. He says he is an old man made young.

"Another man of 72 said he had been crippled with rheumatism for forty-five years. He pronounced himself cured and as vigorous as he ever was in youth.

"Another who was a wreck at 40, and said that he had been so for twenty years, was cured, and three years later undertook the severe hardships of a trip to the Klondike. He returned a few months ago, and said that he had stood the terrible privations better than hundreds of young men.

"I could cite thousands of similar incidents. When you see that I have fifty thousand voluntary testimonials and that there is not a hamlet in this country without one or more cures by my appliance, you will understand that my experience has been broad.

"My treatment is a success in any case where strength is lacking, whether in the nerves, stomach, heart, kidneys, liver or any other part. My appliance gives a soothing, constant electric glow, which is taken by the body just as a sponge takes up water. It cures rheumatism in any guise, as well as every other form of pain.

"I am enthusiastic, you say. Why should I not be? I have the gratitude of thousands of people who have been cured by my electric belts after the failure of the best physicians. I am enthusiastic because I know that I offer suffering humanity the surest cure for the least expenditure of money that is known today.

"I have gained my success by learning how to treat my patients and then curing them. I know how, others do not. I charge nothing for my knowledge, knowing that it helps my business to do all I can for every patient. My patients are my friends. They are building my success."

Then I questioned Dr. McLaughlin in regard to his Electric Belt, and asked him wherein it was so much better than other similar contrivances.

"That is very simple," replied the doctor. "Having spent twenty-four years in study and experiment, I have found means of perfecting my appliance, of removing defects as fast as they appeared in actual use, and of supplying features, such as a regulating device, non-burning electrodes, reversible battery, and of increasing the power of my appliance until it is five times as strong as that of any other electric body appliance on the market. My appliance is conceded to be the only one of the kind which is constructed upon purely scientific lines. Compared with it, all other so-called electric belts are the inventions of the blacksmith's hammer.

"It is not upon that point, however, that my success has been founded. My immense business is due to my knowledge of the effect of electricity upon the ailments treated and the best way to obtain that effect. I take every case that comes to me as an individual and direct the application of my belt to suit the demands of this particular case. When you consider the fact that the electricity which I supply is life to the organs into which I send it, you can see how I get my results. My success comes from my cures. If I did not cure my business would have worn out long ago; as has the business of every maker of electric belts. A great many schemers and frauds have gone into the electric belt business because they fancied it an easy way to make money, and have resorted to very questionable methods at times, but the old adage, 'You can't fool all the people all the time,' was active in their cases and they did not last long."

"Now, doctor," I said, "your theory sounds very good, but can you give me any bona fide evidence of cures to back up your statements? You know that there are a great many advertised remedies, and this case of Mr. Rockefeller, who has been in the hands of the best physicians for years, is very good proof that few of the remedies are successful."

"That is my strongest argument," said the doctor. "Here are letters from prominent people, given me without solicitation. You can see these patients and secure from them a verification of what is contained in their letters."

Thereupon Dr. McLaughlin showed me a file containing letters from many of the best known people in the city and some from outside places. At random I picked out several and reproduce some of them here. The doctor told me that many of his best testimonials could not be published, as the patients, though recommending his treatment privately, objected to publicity.

Geo. Wyllie, Grocer, Echo Park Road, Los Angeles, says: "After using your Electric Belt for about two months for nervousness and weak back, I am completely cured. Your belt has done everything that you said it would and I now get up in the morning without feeling any pains in my back at all and I can do any kind of work. My nerves are as strong as I believe they could be. I am certainly well satisfied with your belt and I can conscientiously recommend it to any one afflicted as I was."

F. C. Nordfleet, Douglas, Arizona, says: "I am nearly 57 years old. Since using your Electric Belt my digestion is fine, my sleep is excellent. I have not lost a day from my office since I began the use of your belt. My weight is now 130 pounds and I feel better than I have for years. I honestly believe that if any one will take your Electric Belt and use it faithfully as I did, it will accomplish everything that you claim for it and even more. I am well satisfied."

Here is a letter to show that drugs are no good:

H. T. Parker, Newberry, Parker Grocery Company, Riverside, Cal., says: "I have been wearing your Electric Belt for a little over a month now. From the benefit I have already received through the use of this appliance I feel fully warranted in recommending it. When I bought your belt I was in such bad shape that I could scarcely walk a block. I was troubled with indigestion, constipation, sleeplessness, weakness of the kidneys, and my principal ailments are overcome, and I find that I can walk a dozen blocks or more with hardly any fatigue. Your belt seems to have benefited my whole constitution. It has restored my general vitality and that is the kind of treatment that I needed. Electricity is, indeed, a grand remedy when applied as it is with your belt. The drugs that I have taken into my system would start a fair-sized apothecary shop. I have quit drugs for good."

The next was a letter from the well-known boxer, Tommy Ryan, who says:

"When I got your Electric Belt my stomach was very bad—so bad that it was impossible for me to get into good condition. The belt has done wonders for me; has restored my stomach perfectly and built up my general strength."

There were dozens of letters from prominent men, whose names, if Dr. McLaughlin was permitted to publish them, would be sufficient guarantee of the genuineness of his case. Among them were several prominent physicians, who spoke highly of the treatment from personal tests.

Dr. McLaughlin here handed me a letter from a very prominent man.

J. S. Fulkerson, president Oxnard Carriage & Implement Company, Oxnard, Cal., says: "I thank you for your inquiry. It shows that you are interested in the case of your patients. This is to inform you that I have used your belt and found it all that you claim for it. It entirely cured a case of weakness and strained back of over three years' standing. I value your belt greatly, however, for the power it possesses to restore the general tone and elasticity of the general system."

"You can take a man who is thin, puny and unnourished in appearance and pour the electric life into his body every night for a few months with the proper exercise to draw it into the muscles and tissues, and you can add twenty-five pounds to his weight, double his strength and vitality and transform him into a giant in strength, as I have often done. Look at the men who have worn our Belt and you will see men of force, men of power and confidence, men who respect themselves and are respected and admired by their fellow men.

"Poor digestion, inactive liver, constipation, sluggish heart, slow thinking, dormant energy and laziness are all due to lack of electricity. Understand that electricity is the motive power of the human machine, the power that keeps the organs active, and you will see what we mean. In such cases you can see how our Electric Belt will pump action into the body. It renews the electric life and transforms the sluggish into a bundle of vigorous energy."

E. J. Wareham, Bakersfield, Cal., says: "Your Electric Belt has done so much for me that I will be only too glad to recommend it whenever opportunity is offered. Through overwork and worry I became a nervous wreck and after losing considerable time and money in trying to get a cure from doctors I finally bought your belt. I began to feel better after the first few applications of this treatment, and finally obtained a complete cure. I do not believe there is another remedy in existence that could have cured my case except your Electric Belt. Outside of my nervous trouble I was afflicted with rupture and this difficulty was greatly benefited by the treatment."

"This agitation of the subject is going to prove of incalculable benefit to the future health of our race. Just satisfy the people that they can procure a renewal of bodily vigor and health by simply renewing the electricity in the body and you have given them what they have always prayed for—a relief from noxious drugs. Convince a suffering man or woman that drugs will not cure them and that all they need is a new supply of electricity and you have made them happy.

"So many people suffer from pains and aches, called Rheumatism or Lumbago or Neuralgia, due to impoverished nerves crying for aid. The life of these nerves is electricity, and nothing else will cure them. We can send a gentle current from our Electric Belt so that it will convey the life direct to the ailing part, and relief is often felt in an hour. We frequently cure such cases within ten days.

Z. K. Smith, 130 Vine st., Redlands, Cal.: "Money could not buy your Electric Belt from me unless I could get another one like it. I was in very bad shape when I procured this appliance, but it has cured me completely, after years of suffering from asthma and weakness in stomach and bowels. I doctored with different doctors and took all kinds of medicines which did me no good whatever. Your belt cured me of these ailments in two months. I will take time to recommend your belt whenever opportunity is offered for me to do so. I consider it one of the greatest inventions of the age."

"Suppose we take a man who has in one way or another overtaxed his system until it is in a state of abject debility, the brain sluggish, all ambition gone and an ever-present feeling of despondency, a disposition to give up the fight.

"In that case the electric force has been reduced and there we have the cause of the debility. Now, replace that force and you have a rejuvenated man as good as ever.

"If these scientific men would do more investigating along the paths that we have already well worn they would find more evidence to back their theory that 'Electricity is Life' in one day than they will get out of the carcass of a frog in ten years. We prove it by results upon human beings whom we have cured, and we have over 50,000 of them already shouting the praises of our belts. Let the scientists take our patients as samples and they will be convinced of the wonderful power of electricity.

"If it were not for the prejudice due to the great number of fakes in the land we would not be able to handle the business that would come to us. The 'Free Belt' fraud and the 'Free Drug' scheme, which are not free at all, have made every one skeptical, but we know that we have a good thing and we'll hammer away until every one knows it."

"Tell me, doctor, why it is that you seem to get better results than a physician derives from using a battery on his patient?"

"Because the nervous system which receives the electric current is so sensitive that the current from a battery shocks it, but leaves no additional power in the nerves or vitals. That is why a doctor's battery does no good. Now, our system is different. We pour the current into the body for six or eight hours every day or night, usually while the patient sleeps. The delicate nerves are not shocked or jarred by this current, as it goes into them just like a drizzling rain saturates a newly plowed field. They absorb it, drink it in, and as it is their life they grow strong with it.

"We think, perhaps, that is the reason that doctors think so little of electricity as a remedy. Of course, they think they know all there is to know about applying it, and as their method is a failure they conclude that electricity is no good.

"Some doctors even believe that our appliances do not generate a current. We will pay $1000 for one of them that fails to give a powerful current as soon as it touches the body. In days gone by electric belts used to burn the skin. We guarantee our patients against that. Our appliances have soft cushion electrodes, which give a glowing heat, but no sting or burn. They have also a regulator to control the current.

"The day is drawing near when physicians who now avoid electricity because of their belief that it is yet in the experimental stage will awaken to the fact that while they have been waiting we have been working, and that Electricity as we supply it possesses marvelous curative powers in cases where drugs will only stimulate.

"And our success is not limited to stomach troubles. Any organ of the body, any part that lacks the necessary vitality to perform its natural functions can be restored by our method. It gives strength; it makes the blood rich and red and warm; it vitalizes the nerves; it puts life and vim into the brain and muscles; it just makes a good man out of a bad one in every way.

"With our Electric Belt we cure rheumatism in its worst forms; we cure pains and aches, weak nerves, general debility and any other trouble which can be cured by restoring strength."

THE MILLION DOLLARS JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER OFFERS FOR A HEALTHY STOMACH

JAP GETS BIG COPPER CLAIM.

Acquires Rich Property in British Columbia.

Bad Luck at Fishing Ends in Discovery of Mine.

Angelenos With Coal to Sell May Reap Benefit.

Los Angeles capitalists who early this year acquired coal measures in the Queen Charlotte Islands, British Columbia, may be able to make a contract to supply fuel to the Rockefeller of Japan, for Toranosuke Furukawa, the Mikado's wealthiest subject, is buying copper mines in the same island. The little trouble in Vancouver recently, when white hoodlums attacked the Japanese quarter, has not prevented an invasion of oriental capital.

According to news just received here, Furukawa has purchased a large interest in the Awaya-Ikeda Mining Company of Moresby Island, the principal isle in the Queen Charlotte group. He has paid Shinazo Awaya, the first financier of the company, what the Japanese vernacular papers call a "reward" of 3,000,000 yen ($1,500,000,) and now will carry on the mines jointly with him.

The house of Furukawa controls the largest copper mines in Japan, and is prepared to spend a large sum in extending its business to this side of the Pacific. There are twenty-nine large-sized claims in the group on Queen Charlotte Islands. Two leads run through them, and on one the Japanese have exposed fourteen feet of solid gray copper ore. The copper crisis brought about by Heinze does not bother them a bit, in fact, arrangements are being made to increase the working force at the mines from thirty to 300 Japanese.

ROMANTIC DISCOVERY.

All respectable mines nowadays claim to have been romantically discovered, and the Awaya-Ikeda property is no exception. Shinazo Awaya, who lives at Kiomachibori, in Osaka, which is the Chicago of Japan, had no intention of engaging in copper mining when he first invested in British Columbia five years ago. He heard of the big money to be made in shipping dog salmon from British Columbia to Japan, and he sent Arichika Ikeda to this coast to engage in fishing on his behalf.

Business was not very successful with Ikeda on the Fraser River, so he took a crew of Japanese north to the Skeena River. One day when they were out on the ocean a severe storm came up and they were forced to run before it till they found shelter in a snug little harbor on Moresby Island. The only inhabitant was an old prospector, who rejoiced in the nickname of "Nigger Dick."

The Japanese found considerable abalone in the waters of the bay, and one day one of their divers brought up some copper float. They showed the stuff to "Nigger Dick," and he advised them to prospect around for the lead, which he told them must be near the salt water. They did so, and in a few days discovered it. Fishing was abandoned at once; Ikeda cabled to Awaya in Japan, telling him of the find, and the latter sent money for development purposes. A trial shipment of ore to the Crofton smelter proved that the Japanese had a bonanza.

COPPER KING INTERESTED.

To make assurance doubly sure, twelve tons of the ore were sent to Tokio for a milling test, and it was then that Furukawa, the copper king of Japan, got interested. Awaya, who has recently been elected a member of the Japanese Diet, visited the mines this summer, and was approached by British Columbia capitalists, who desired to secure the claims. He turned them down. To quote his own words from the Japanese press:

"Some Englishmen applied for the purchase or the joint carrying-on of the business, but we rejected all these applications, intending to carry it jointly with some Japanese capitalists."

The reason he was able to so nonchalantly give the cold shoulder to the Britishers was that Furukawa had sent experts to investigate the property. They reported that it was distinctly promising, whereupon the "Japanese Rockefeller" contracted to pay Awaya his "reward" of $1,500,000 and to carry on the mine jointly with him, putting up a further $250,000 for development.

That the Japanese have nothing to learn from America in the way of watering stock is shown by the fact that a company capitalized at several millions is later to be formed to take over the mines.

It is interesting to point out that the Japanese had no difficulty in recording their claims in British Columbia, whereas no foreigners could hope to get hold of similar properties in Japan. But the persons in British Columbia who engineered the recent riot in Vancouver do not look kindly on this invasion by Japanese capital. They claim that it will inevitably result in the creation of "an integral and non-assimilating community of Japanese on the Queen Charlotte Islands."

YEN GOOD AS HALF-DOLLAR.

Less rabid citizens are inclined to welcome the influx of Asiatic capital. They point out that it is desirable that the resources of the country be developed, and that Japanese yen are just as good as American dollars—in the proportion of two to one, of course. They say that Furukawa intends to open up the minds on a large scale, which will mean that many supplies will have to be obtained from the cities of Vancouver and Victoria. They also assert that, far from discouraging so big a commercial house as that of Furukawa, it should rather be welcomed to invest in British Columbia. The Japanese concern is so large that its employés in the Ashio mines, near Nikko, are as numerous as an army corps. The company's properties produce one-third of the copper mined in Japan, and a large portion of the silver, coal and coke.

So far, Furukawa does not own any coal mines in British Columbia, and here is where the opportunity of the Los Angeles investors comes in. At the beginning of this year a company composed of local and Canadian people was formed to open up coal measures in the Queen Charlotte Islands. The Furukawa concern will need a great deal of fuel if it carries out its intention of working the copper mines on a large scale, and if success attends the operations of the Angelenos they will be able to secure a large customer at the very outset.

IMPRESSIONS OF MORMON DIXIE LAND, WHERE CLOCKS STOPPED IN THE SIXTIES.

Notes of a "Times" Reporter's Trip to Southern Utah—A Hard Road to Travel, and a Buffalo Bull Bosses It. Life in New Oil Fields.

BY ALLEN KELLY.

MORE THAN half a century ago Brigham Young sent his people out to do the pioneer work of State building and build outposts of civilization in the forbidding region that for many years was known to geographers as the Great American Desert. Trusting, obedient and patient, they trekked from Salt Lake into the desolate sagebrush wastes of Southern Utah, and where they found water and a few acres of tillable land they built homes and settled down to their dreary task of wresting a bare living from the most unpromising soil that ever was turned by the plow of the pioneer.

There was nothing alluring to the settler in that grim wilderness of rock, sand and lava. No immigrant, seeking a home in the Far West, would be tempted to halt and build his cabin there. To the farmer from the prairies of the Mississippi Valley, the woodsman from the lake regions, even to the man from the stony hills of New England, the gray desolation of the land was repellant, and the task of reclaiming it and making it habitable must have seemed hopeless. The free wanderer pushed on across the wastes to the evergreen forests of Oregon and the fertile valleys of California, leaving the desert to the Redskin and the Mormon.

The Mormons had been driven from Missouri and Illinois, where their rich lands had been taken from them, and their leaders had chosen for their habitation a land so uninviting that it would not be coveted by others for many years. Only a people seeking isolation could have been induced to settle such a country as Utah was in that day, and only dutiful obedience to trusted leaders could have founded the pioneer communities in the southwestern region and in the desert of what is now Western Nevada.

MORMON PIONEERS.

It was the policy of the Mormon leaders, doubtless, to establish small settlements in places remote from lines of overland travel, where they would be unnoticed and left to themselves, and so slowly and quietly build up a Mormon State, while the tide of immigration should be flowing past them to the more attractive Pacific Coast.

In pursuance of that policy, Brigham Young urged the pioneers whom he sent into the wilderness to give all their attention and energy to agriculture, and to refrain from developing mineral resources. His advice, which was virtually a command, was to let mining alone. The discovery of precious metals, he warned his people, would bring in upon them hordes of adventurous men and so change conditions as to defeat the purpose of their settlement. They could get along without gold and silver, but they must have the products of the soil, and therefore the Mormons were directed to devote themselves to farming and virtually forbidden to operate mines.

So Mormon pioneers went down into the land now called "Dixie," found a few acres of meadow or river bottom here and there, selected farms, turned water from the streams into irrigating ditches, built little settlements and set about the work of learning how to raise crops under conditions of climate and season that were strangely different from anything to which they had been accustomed. Patient industry, content with the crudities of the frontier, and wise guidance brought a measure of success to what must have seemed almost a hopeless undertaking.

The tide of immigration swept past, an empire was built and peopled to the westward, the transcontinental railroads carried millions of restless people through the land to the north and to the south, and for the half of the busiest century in the world's history the Mormon settlements of Southwestern Utah and Desert Nevada were forgotten outposts of civilization, remote, isolated, unknown.

OUT OF THE WORLD.

Few inhabited parts of the United States were so completely out of touch with the busy world as Mormon Dixie, until the Salt Lake Railroad cut across the country from the Union Pacific to the southern routes and opened up the desert mining regions of Southeastern Nevada. Oases in the Nevada Desert, such as Caliente, Moapa, Las Vegas and Panaca, being on the old freight route between Salt Lake and Los Angeles, were known to the men who drove teams along that weary way in earlier days, but Dixie was out of the line of travel, cut off from the rest of the world by mountains on the north, the desert on the west and the impassable barrier of the Grand Cañon on the east and south.

The people of Dixie raised cattle and sheep, grew grain, and other crops for their own use, planted orchards and vineyards, developed irrigation systems adequate to their needs and lived the quiet lives of farmers in small, self-sustaining communities, mutually helpful, and exchanging labor in lieu of the currency of commerce. The soil and climate of Dixie produced fine fruits—apples, grapes, figs, pomegranates, etc.—and when Old Pioche was a booming camp of 10,000, thirty years or more ago, the settlers found a market for their surplus products by driving 150 miles across the desert to the mines. They experimented with the sub-tropical crops, and at one time grew a considerable quantity of cotton, and from that the name of Dixie came to be applied to Washington county—away down south in the land of cotton.

GOING TO DIXIE.

It was the oil excitement of the Virgin River district that lured me into Dixie. So little was known of the country, that no two persons agreed as to the quickest and best route from the railroad. One who had been through Southern Utah a few years ago earnestly advised me to go to Salt Lake and down the Rio Grande Western to Marysvale, thence by wagon or saddle 200 miles to Virgin. Another—a railroad man—was sure that the only feasible route was from Moapa by way of the Muddy River and up the Virgin to St. George, 100 miles by stage. Others were sure that Lund was the best point of departure, but the railroad folder said the stage service on that route was discontinued. Sometimes you may believe a railroad time table, but mostly you should look upon it with suspicion. Modena was highly recommended, and as the time table indicated a daily stage, leaving at 11:50 a.m. on a 60-mile run, I chose Modena.

The engineer of the train by which I left Los Angeles seemed to be an irascible chap. Apparently the brakes became "frozen" on the rear coach about an hour out, and the engineer tried to yank them loose by the main strength of steam. He stook the smoking-room gabfest on its heads two or three times, and wound up with a squieting crash and bump that awoke the Pullmans in trepidation. The drawhead fetched away, and there were hours of hammering and language out at the stern of the train.

Wherefore we arrived at Modena some hours late in the dark and a drizzle of rain. A chance traveling companion, who had been there before, inquired anxiously if there was anything but the mail stage in from St. George, and he seemed depressed when the station agent said there was nothing. We navigated through the night by dead reckoning, and brought up against a saloon that hasn't yet heard of the pure food law. The saloon man was eager to put us up for the night and piloted us to a house. But the other man had been there before, and he turned away from the shelter without a word, beckoning me to follow. I followed, leaving the pilot gloomily speechless in the doorway, and as we bore away into the gloom I asked why we wandered thus. The other man said: "Bugs."

Out of the blackness of night arose a form, and the other man fell upon its neck joyfully. The form mildly allowed that the station agent was a liar in the matter of stage transportation, and took us in tow to Moody's, new, clean and comfortable, where one has a bed all to himself. In the morning the form materialized into Joe Farnsworth with a good team, and we set out in the rain for Dixie, hours ahead of the stage. The time table says the stage leaves at 11:50 a.m. other people say it leaves when it is good and ready; perhaps at 7 a.m. or any other hour. Good prospect for travelers depending on the time table to get marooned at Modena for twenty-four hours.

Across the gray prairie for fifteen or twenty miles, cloud-enshrouded mountains ahead promising storm and dreary chill for the rest of the day; Farnsworth expounding the merits of his outfit and giving reasons for disesteem of the mail stage and its stock. The road not bad of its kind, gradually climbing to higher, colder and wetter altitudes; disconsolate jack rabbits hopping reluctantly out of the way, too waterlogged to run; lonely ravens, flapping lazily in short precautionary flights ahead of the team. A stop for dinner at the only Mormon ranch remaining on the confines of Mountain Meadows, the dark and bloody ground of Utah's history.

IN THE LAND OF COTTON.

From the Meadows the road passes through Pine Valley, climbs to an elevation of 6000 feet, and then dips down into the valley of the Santa Clara. It was a long, dreary night drive and the road was bad. The horses plodded slowly through mud, splashed for hundreds of yards at a time through the beds of streams in water knee deep, picked their way over rocks, dodged deep barrancas of their own motion, and landed us late at night in St. George, the county seat of Dixie land, sixty-three miles from Modena. The mail stage got in about five hours later.

St. George is a pretty village with wide, shaded streets and neat houses, and it has the modern improvements of a bank and a good hotel. The Mormon settlers everywhere had the good sense to plant trees the first thing they did, and all their settlements are well shaded and picturesque. St. George also has a temple, a staring white architectural freak, reflecting the somewhat crude art aspirations of the strong man who led the Mormons into the Utah desert and built a State.

On the road from St. George to the Virgin River oil region are several old Mormon farms and settlements. One of the farmers, a Scotchman, and, of course, a gardener, was one of the first settlers. He had turned the water of a creek into an irrigating ditch more than forty years ago, and taught his neighbors how to use it, and how to grow vines and fruits. The Indians, he said, gave a little trouble, but good treatment soon made friends of the local tribes, and the chase and extermination of a band of raiding Navajos insured peace in that quarter. The Mormons followed Brigham Young's injunction to feed, rather than fight the red men, and the red men became their friends.

A typical Dixie settlement is Toquerville, perched on a narrow bench of tillable ground on the bank of Ash Creek, in the morning shadow of a malpais hill. It might be an old New England farming village, transplanted before railroad days, and slightly modified by environment. The wide street is lined with large, old trees, the Lombardy poplar towering among them, and on each side flows a stream of clear water, diverted from the creek above, and serving all domestic purposes. Cattle and horses are turned into the street morning and night to drink from the stream, and housewives dip from it their daily supply.

Toquer—the natives drop the "ville"—is a quiet, easy-going community. The lava hill delays sunrise some two or three hours, and there is nothing doing in Toquer before 10 o'clock. The spirit of hustle has not come yet to Toquer to vex the tranquil lives of its plodding people, but a portent of the change threatened by the oil boom recently appeared.

A PORTENT OF PROGRESS.

Two hustlers from Salt Lake had the hardihood to drive an automobile over the roads of Dixie, and the machine came snorting up the steep bank from the creek one Sunday, behind a wagon full of natives. The black muzzle of the hood, flanked by great, brass-rimmed goggle eyes, appeared suddenly and menacingly. The man on the back seat of the wagon valuted over a wheel, cleared the roadway in two kangaroo leaps, and took a fence in his stride. He explained that he wasn't what you might rightly call scared, but he "wa'n't taking no chances."

Down on the Virgin, the Mormon preacher, who had been outside and seen something of the world, was telling his congregation of the strange inventions of the Gentiles. He was in the middle of a description of the devil wagons, when the Thomas Flyer passed the church, and he shouted: "There's one of 'em now!"

Out to the street poured the congregation, followed by the preacher, and there was no more church that afternoon. The Salt Lakers put in the rest of the day giving Mormon lads and lasses the greatest rides of their lives in a Thomas Flyer, and some of the sedate elders were not loth to take a whirl up the road.

The next Sunday the preacher solemnly warned his flock against yielding to the insidious temptations of worldliness, and viewed with alarm the invasion of Dixie by the breezy, hustling Gentile. Out of the abundance of an experience gained as a missionary to the benighted tribes east of the Rockies, the bishop drew a lamentable picture of the impending demoralization of Dixie. "Have nothing to do with these disturbers of the established order of our lives," he exhorted. "They will bring money among you, but it will do you no good. They are ungodly men. Especially should our young people avoid them."

VAIN WARNINGS.

The evil consequences of the discovery of mineral wealth, predicted by the early Mormon leaders, loomed menacingly before the bishop's prophetic eye, and he raised his voice in protest against encouragement by his flock of the disturbing activity of the treasure hunters.

But the people of Dixie are weary of waiting for fulfillment of their dream of prosperity. For fifty years they have patiently toiled and lived the lonely, colorless life of an isolated farming people, wresting a bare living from a grim, forbidding land, and leaving untouched the wealth imprisoned in the rocks at their feet. They have obeyed faithfully the command to devote their labor and their lives to reclamation of the desert, and they realize that they have achieved all that was demanded of them, and all that is possible in the direction of agricultural development.

Much water has passed under the bridges since inhibition was laid upon mining by the church; the reasons upon which it was based have ceased to exist, and its force and authority have faded away. The work of the pioneer settler is done, and the day has come for development of all the resources of the land. The movement is in full swing, and the Mormon people are taking part in the new order of things and awakening to the possibilities of a broader life.

BETTER TIMES COMING.

In Mormon homes I have heard the women rejoice over the prospect of better times, and of relief from the dull, hard life of woman on an old-fashioned farm. One dear old lady, patient and toilworn, said: "We do so hope that the oil discovery will prove to be all that it promises to be. We have had a very hard life in this country. More than forty years we have struggled for bare existence and had few of the comforts of life. We do not complain of the past, but we do hope a change is coming and that our children may have what we have been deprived of all these years. You think there is a chance for something to come of this oil excitement? I am glad to think so, for it has been weary waiting."

Forty or fifty years have passed since these people came to Dixie, but the years have brought few changes in their way of life. They brought with them the habits, the simple, homely comforts and conveniences of the New England and Middle Western farm of the days before the war, and the great changes that have been wrought in the rural life of American homes have scarcely touchedt hem.

A Mormon farm house in Southern Utah might have been transported just as it stands half a century ago from Connecticut or Illinois or the Western Reserve of Ohio. There is the same "best room," with a Bible on the center table; the solemn family portraits in crayon on the wall—one perhaps framed in a withered funeral wreath, the crude paintings in real oil of impossible castles, and impracticable water wheels in cotton-wool streams, painfully produced by the family genius who once "took lessons;" the same china mantel ornaments; a three-volumed history of Utah in gorgeous binding, somebody's Compendium of Forms and Contracts, and a Handbook of Useful Information. Of ephemeral literature—daily papers and magazines—there is conspicuous lack.

NOT ALL FOR THE BETTER.

Surely the clocks of Dixie stopped in the sixties. That you know when the young men pass in the evening and you hear a serenade by a falsetto tenor, a throaty baritone and a rumbling bass, for they are singing "Listen to the Mockingbird." The swains of Toquer are "dreaming now of Hallie, sweet Hallie," and know naught of the she-hoodlum sweethearts of popular minstrelsy, or of coon lovers admonished in ragtime by dusky damsels, to bring money or stay away.

Yet I have some sympathy with the virgin preacher's apprehension of pollution of the simple life of Dixie. Far up North Creek, as I drew bridle before an ancient log cabin, the last outpost of Mormon civilization, my ears were assailed by the raucous, ineffably vulgar, brass-throated rantings of a descriptive song-smith, of the school of Bowery slang. Some muck-minded son of perdition had debauched that simple-souled settler with a phonograph and a collection of records that should be denied transmission through the mails of all civilized nations. Heaven help Dixie, for the voice of the Yahoo is heard in the land!

THE SIMPLE LIFE.

Simple, serious, toilsome people are these Mormons; just the same sort as you meet in the country districts of the States. They might be Methodists or Campbellites, or Second Adventists, or Christian Scientists, for all you could judge from their appearance, behavior or speech. The Mormon of fiction and the Salt Lake Tribune does not exist in Dixie. The goat-whiskered old satyr, riding herd on a harem and buying children's shoes by the case, lives elsewhere, if at all. He is an invention of the nature fakers, and the comic papers, instigated to criminal libel by black-coated fanatics, spinsters consumed with envy, and malevolent politicians. There is no sign of polygamy in the Mormon farming settlements. Forget it!

Many of the Dixie settlers have been quick to comprehend the possibilities opened to them, by the oil boom, and keen to take advantage of their opportunity. They have located claims and invited capital to help develop them, and they are eager to learn all they can about oil formations and signs from experts who have swarmed into the country. In the excitement, as usual in such cases, hundreds of locations have been made where there is not once chance in a million of striking oil, and many a dream of opulence will come to nothing but disappointment.

But in the meantime, there is more business in Dixie than ever in its history. Men and teams are in demand at higher rates than ever were known, and real money is circulating. Land prices—if not values—have gone kiting to unheard-of figures; there is a market for farm products and for stock; prosperity has struck the country and given it a jolt that dazes some of the people. It will take a little time for the slower-minded to adjust themselves to the new conditions, and to seize the benefits held out to them.

STUCK IN A TRADE.

Like most American country people, the men of Dixie do love to "dicker," and the quick, snappy business ways of the oil men take them by surprise. When asked their price for a thing, they fish first for an offer. "I dunno, what'll you give?" is the formula, and a terse demand for their figure dazes them.

An oil man from Salt Lake wanted a horse. A young farmer guessed he had one that would suit. "What do you ask for him?" "Oh, I dunno, 'bout a hundred dollars, I guess." "Let's see him!"

That was pretty sudden for horse trading, but the young man brought up the nag, the Salt Laker looked the animal over, and without another word passed over two fifty-dollar bills. As the purchaser

ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.

FIGHTING GOVERNOR OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Robert Brodnax Glenn Says He Goes to God About All Vital Matters—Impecunious Lawyer and His Fateful Sack of Flour.

BY JAMES B. MORROW.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

RALEIGH (N. C.) Oct. 19.—An impecunious lawyer in his shirt sleeves, unsteady, and crooked under his load as he walked a village street is the first picture in the panorama of events which recently culminated in North Carolina's challenge to the nation and its courts.

But for a bag of flour, which he bore on his back, Robert Brodnax Glenn might now be a school teacher or a small clerk and not the Governor of a State. Detestable flour, certain railway presidents and their boards of directors may exclaim. But passenger fares, the people will reply, have been reduced more than 20 per cent.

Governor Glenn.

As I walked through the glittering sunlight, under trees which would beautify a forest, I saw the case of North Carolina against the United States epitomized on three flagstaffs. The Stars and Stripes fluttered in languid folds over the Federal building, while a little farther away the wide, white and varicolored bars of the Commonwealth tumbled in a brisk west wind above the county courthouse and the Governor's office. The issue, mutely shown in bunting, State versus the Government in Washington, has made [illegible] a vital and curious personality in the news and interpretations of the day. Furthermore, he is a type of the new executives who have begun to rule in the South.

From his windows the Governor beholds among huge oaks, barren locusts, palms and magnolias, piles of spent cannon balls, examples of old ordnance, and the memorials in granite and bronze of three wars—statues of George Washington and Worth Bagley, the first American officer to fall by the hand of Spain, and a mighty shaft to the Confederate dead. Th scene is [illegible] and wild, but artistic, orderly and finished. Here the Jove of the dignity and rights of States fabricates his thunderbolts and in his leisure looks up the lessons of his Sunday-school class.

EVERY INCH A FIGHTER.

In stature and bulk Gov. Glenn is a fighting man, being an inch less than 6 feet in height and weighing 230 pounds. His eyes are gray, his face [illegible], and his head is almost bald. If he were not so tall and if his skin were dark and his eyebrows long and arched, he would look like McKinley's younger brother. He is candid, energetic and cheerful in his discourse and bearing, but within the scabbard of courtesy and kindness, as the stranger perceives, is the sword of courage, energy and principle. Such is the man who may go to the Senate, either from North Carolina or as Vice-President.

"[illegible]," I asked, "what was your [illegible] with the railroads and Judge [illegible] C. Pritchard, of the United States [illegible] Court?"

"When the Legislature began to [illegible] for a reduction of rates, the charge for carrying passengers on the railways in this State was 3¼ cents a mile. Wanting to be fair, I suggested to the officers of the railways that they ascertain for themselves by their records what reduction could be made after allowing for a reasonable profit on the business. My efforts to reach an understanding satisfactory to all having failed, having been ignored in fact, the Legislature cut the rate to 2¼ cents a mile. The law went into effect on July 1 this year.

"Some of the railroads had expressed a willingness to treat with the State, but later they were not inclined to regard the law. The Southern Railway Company, however, in its determination to run the State, disobeyed the law, and, therefore, we arrested one of its local ticket agents and President Finley himself, who had come to North Carolina on a visit. Whenever we arrested a man, Judge Pritchard took him away from us on a writ of habeas corpus. We were obeying the Federal laws, whereas the Federal authorities were doing everything possible to defeat us in settling a purely State matter in our own way.

"Sensational reports were printed that we were 'defying' the United States government. We had no disloyalty in mind. North Carolina is a part of this nation, but North Carolina has rights at home and will maintain them under the laws and within the Constitution. Moreover, let me say that no railroad will rule this State so long as I am its Governor. [illegible] management, recently agreed upon, the rate established by the Legislature—2¼ cents a mile—will stand, until the whole question in dispute is finally and permanently disposed of by the Supreme Court of the United States."

CORPORATIONS NECESSARY.

"What are your views as to corporations in general?"

"They are necessary in these modern days for the development of business, and are wanted in North Carolina. I came into office as an industrial Governor, with the purpose of doing everything possible to promote the material interests of the people and of inducing corporations to establish themselves among us. I told the business men of the State that I should employ my influence to keep down their taxes and to protect their property against fire and riot. Our healthful and comfortable climate, our forests and our deposits of mica, copper and gold, have been described by me in the hope of attracting outside energy and capital. I have said that nowhere else in the world can tobacco, cotton, rice, wheat, oats, corn and barley be found growing on a single farm. But I didn't suppose that a railway company would attempt to control the State, would defy its laws and treat its people with contempt. When it did all of these things I was ready to fight."

"Will the South always be 'solid' in politics?"

"The South was made solid on the negro question. We had negro rule in North Carolina and property wasn't worth anything. In 1899 I was a member of the Legislature and helped to frame the new Constitution, which eliminated the negro from politics by subjecting all voters to an educational test. We deliberately disfranchised the negro, did it in cold blood, and made no concealment of our purpose. And let me tell you that we accomplished our object. About 35,000 negroes could vote in this State if they wanted to, but no more than 15,000 take the trouble to qualify as citizens. Formerly many of the blacks sold themselves over and over again at every election. Now that they are kept away from the polls by a constitutional provision, they are no longer dealt in by the politicians, our elections are free from scandals, and the negroes themselves are much better off than under the old conditions.

SAVED BY WHITE SUPREMACY.

"Since the restoration of white supremacy we have prospered amazingly. Now property is worth something, and is increasing in value all the time. Until the threat of black rule which hangs over the South, with its train of evils, including poverty, corruption, and crimes against women, is at an end, this part of the country will be 'solid.' Furthermore, the South believes in home rule, or States' rights. The flag of the nation is over us; we are proud of it, and will fight for it. But local questions can be settled at home. We don't want to run to Washington on such business. I can add, therefore, that so long as there is danger of the nationalization of our State governments the South will remain 'solid.'"

"Your father, I suppose, was a planter?"

"He was an orphan, and an uncle by marriage reared and educated him for the law. The uncle had 3000 acres of land and 400 slaves, and grew large quantities of tobacco. Although my father was a Whig and opposed to slavery, he went off to the war as a captain, and was killed at South Mountain. Then his uncle took care of my mother and her children. I fell heir to my father's library and profession, attending Davidson College, going for a time to the University of Virginia, and graduating from a law school in North Carolina. We lived with our great-uncle, always had lived with him, in fact, and worked hard on his plantation. I would go to school for a time, and one of my brothers would run the farm. Then he would go to school, and I would run the farm. Chopping wood is what made me strong," whereat Gov. Glenn pushed back his sleeves and showed me two powerful hands and a pair of wrists thick as young trees and hard as iron.

"When our uncle died," the Governor continued, "he left us his land. I bought the interest of one of my brothers—he is a civil engineer—and by removal of the negro from politics, and the abortive but persistent attempt to make him the social equal of the white man."

"What do you mean by social equality, when you employ that term in connection with the blacks?"

"The promiscuous association of negroes with the whites in hotels, restaurants, theaters and other public places, and the resultant familiarity which would inevitably lead to the mixture of the races in marriage."

"With no thought of being flippant, I should like to ask what the southern white man will do when he gets to heaven?"

WHICH WIFE WINS?

"I don't imagine there will be any divisions in paradise, but I have often wondered what will happen to the fellow who has three or four wives. I know one old codger who has had five. However, as to matters on earth, I believe God Himself drew a distinction between whites and blacks early in Genesis, when, speaking through Noah, He said, referring to Ham: 'Cursed be Canaan; a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren.'"

HOROSCOPES OF PROMINENT MEN.

NO. IV— MAYOR HARPER.

BY M. I. BOUTELLE.

Arthur C. Harper, merchant, banker, capitalist and now Mayor of Los Angeles, the city of heart's desire and town of perennial uplift, was born in the old State of Mississippi, March 13, 1866, on which date the sun, moon and planets were distributed through the heavens in the following order: Mercury and Neptune in Aries, Uranus in Gemini, Saturn in Scorpio, Jupiter in Capricorn, Moon and Mars in Aquarius and Venus in Pisces.

Mayor Harper has a strong nativity and is also well charged with those influences which during life's progress bring good fortunes, personal advancement, wealth, emolument and positions of honor. He is physically and mentally well born, has excellent powers of endurance and is largely exempt from those conditions which bind a man to a particular environment or fetter the realization of his desires. He possesses a positive temperament, independence, assertiveness and fixedness of opinion, and yet is tolerate, sympathetic, considerate, regardful of the rights of others and swayed by honesty of motive.

THE SUN AND VENUS.

The sun in conjunction with Venus as it is in this nativity always brings good fortune, and their favorable aspect to Jupiter in the present case still further strengthens and increases this beneficial feature, bringing into the life powerful elements which contribute to exceptional fortune in business and in public life. The nativity of Mayor Harper considered in relation to municipal affairs yields conclusions which are stated in the following paragraphs:

Two powerfully fortunate influences, viz.: the sun and Venus in a watery sign, in favorable attitude to Jupiter in a business sign present strong proofs that the great undertaking of securing an adequate city water supply will advance and prosper under the administration of Mayor Harper, and that during his term of office, the ultimate success of that mighty enterprise will become assured. The Mayor possesses a peculiar type of mind, one in which honesty of purpose and desire to enlist all elements in his support are combined with a certain degree of doubt and hesitancy as to his sphere or limits of action. He is a man who needs earnest support, in order that he may fully carry out what innately he knows to be the proper course of procedure. The city of Los Angeles is at the present time fortunate in having a man in its executive chair who has these strong and fortunate influences existent in his nativity.

The years of Mayor Harper's administration will constitute a period in which religious and reform movements can be very definitely advanced, and if the ladies of Los Angeles have any projects which they desire to foster or develop, they should adopt active measures for the accomplishment of their purposes, and to this end, well costumed delegations presenting their views to the Mayor will be able to decidedly further the projects and plans dear to their hearts. The clergy of Los Angeles now have before them an opportune period and favoring conditions under which to undertake the elevation of public morals through the curbing of the social evil, the restriction of the liquor traffic, and to increase the effectiveness of charitable benefactions and the extension of moral and religious influences, and this all under the benign influences existent in the nativity of the present Mayor. In respect to the contemplated new charter for the city, some peculiar difficulties are denoted, and the work of its perfection will be a somewhat intricate task, owing to certain influences which will affect the legislative branch of the city government.

COMING YEARS.

Mayor Harper's horoscope, strong as it is naturally, is still to develop greater strength in the coming years, a period of unusual activity and responsibility is now opening upon him, the future is bright with promises of honors and advancement, and of increase and prosperity to the flourishing city of which he is the chief executive.

HONESTY MEANS WORK.

Employers Want Men Who Seek to Improve Their Work.

Eyployers want men who combine with ambition and material talents, honesty and capacity for hard work. Honesty means something more than financial reliability. It is the quality which makes a man work without watching the clock, or being afraid that he will give his employer more value than he is being paid for. The honest employé brings to his work the best effort of which he is capable and begrudges nothing where the interests of his employers are at stake. A young man was recently applying to a well-known employer for a position. He was in the midst of a rather glowing description of his qualifications for the place, when the employer interrupted him with: "Never mind about all this. There is just one thing I want to know. Will you work?"

Every man who intends to make himself of value to his employer and to win advancement (and the two go hand in hand, despite all that pessimists may say) must have this capacity for work. No matter how great his ability, how thorough his education, or how attractive his personality, these qualities are as worthless as a locomotive without fuel unless backed up by persistence and energy; wrote J. H. Hapgood in World's Work. He may be retained for a time because of his ability, but in the long race he will be found wanting. Some day his employer will be forced to give the position which he has hoped for, and which, by his natural talents, he is perëminently fitted to fill, to a man who, although less capable, has shown himself to be a worker.

It is work that makes a good salesman—not natural ability, appearance, or personality. One of the best salesmen in the United States is red-haired, homely, uncouth, and poorly dressed—he does not seem capable of selling bread to a hungry millionaire. Yet he sells on an average more than $100,000 worth of goods a year, in a field where competition is remarkably keen. He succeeds by making hard work take the place of the adaptability, the personal magnetism, and the appearance which he lacks.

The perseverance of this salesman is the quality lacking in many men. Plenty of men can work hard when the road to success seems clear, but when difficulties thicken they lost their grip. Others work by spurts, keying themselves up to high pitches for brief periods, and then lapsing into half-hearted effort. Neither the fair weather type, nor the skyrocket worker is desired. Employers want men who can be relied upon for even better effort when the skies are dark than in times of porsperity, and who will be as persistent the month after next as they are today.

MINES AND THE MINING INDUSTRY.

IN THE EARTH.

RARE MINERALS, METALLURGY AND CHEMISTRY.

To Correspondents:

This department is not conducted for pay. Its object is to convey reliable information of interest and value to the public, and it is not for the private benefit of any miner, collector, speculator or prospector. Correspondents are particularly cautioned to take careful note of the statements and injunctions contained in the paragraphs below.

(1.) Specimens must be small and bear a tag giving name and address of sender, and the general—not exact—locality from whence the specimen was taken, also the name of it as nearly as the sender knows. Send, also, with the specimen a clearly-written letter briefly describing the find and what the finder wishes done with it. The letter must be properly dated and plainly signed.

(2.) No attention will be paid to anonymous letters or to letters signed merely with initials.

(3.) No examination of samples or specimens will be made in cases where The Times may decide that the specimen and inquiry are not of public interest. This office does not undertake to perform the work of an assay office.

(4.) Inquiries relative to matters of purely personal interests will not be answered.

(5.) When no response to an inquiry made or specimens sent appears in these columns, the inquirer will understand that his inquiry does not come within the purview of this department.

(6.) It is impossible to return specimens, as they must necessarily be destroyed or impaired in the process of analysis.

Mineralogical Suggestions.

GLENDORA, Oct. 1, 1907.—[To the Editor of The Times:] From this locality I send you, under another cover, four samples of ore numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and I wish you to give me their mineralized names, their commercial value, if any, when found in quantity.

I would also be under obligations to you for any information which would be valuable to a novice in the study of rocks.

Thanking you for much help already received from your "In the Earth" department of The Times, and, in advance, for your help with the samples sent.

Yours truly, J. A. L.

ANSWER.—Sample No. 1 is plumbago (graphite) in schist. No. 2, impure trachyte. No. 3 is dumortierite, and No. 4, (limonitic) spathic iron ore.

No. 3 is more fully referred to in "Mineral Resources of the United States, 1905," and is of a bright, small blue color, vitreous in luster, and 7 in the scale of hardness. It is found, rarely, crystallized. (Your sample is not crystallized.) Specific gravity 3.3.

The graphite specimen is too much contaminated with deleterious admixtures to be of value.

Study geology for knowledge of "rocks." Dana's separate works on geology and mineralogy are the standard authorities. You should obtain working samples of rocks and of minerals from Braun of Los Angeles or the Foote Mineral Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

In addition, provide yourself with a cheap blow pipe (platinum point is not necessary;) sulphuric, nitric and hydrochloric acids. Blue and red litmus paper (for acid and alkali tests;) some cobalt nitrate solution (for distinguishing between magnesia and alumina, and for zinc;) a candle or alcohol lamp (for blow pipe use;) a magnet (for testing magnetic minerals,) or a magnetized knife blade; some charcoal blocks (for blow pipe tests;) add some small vials of sodium bicarbonate, borax and borax glass, cyanide of potassium, salt peter (nitrate of potash,) protochloride of tin, sulphate of iron (green crystals,) a few test tubes and small porcelain dishes, a test tube holder (you can make it of paper or wire,) and a good work on chemistry. Other necessary equipment will be called for as you advance in the knowledge desired.

Solid information is gained in mineralogy by almost constant comparison of colors, hardness, crystallization and specific gravity; withal, you will need a fairly-good balance and a fairly-good balanced head.

Talc.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 30.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Under separate cover I send you four specimens of mineral found in the San Francisquito Cañon, near Saugus. Specimens Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are from one deposit; have a soapy appearance and form a lather like soap.

Are the black sulphides in specimen No. 4 sulphide of magnesia? Are any of these minerals of commercial value?

Yours truly, W. R.

ANSWER.—No. 1 is gray-red talc (soapstone;) No. 2 is massive grayish talc; No. 3 is gray-white siliceous talc; No. 4 is impure serpentine, and the concentrates—black iron oxide—are too lean for precious metal values.

No. 2 has a commercial value, but freight and mining charges would result in no profits.

Gypsum and Bitterspath.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 2.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I inclose you a sample of rock taken from the Bonanza Mountain, Crackerjack mining district, twelve miles west of Silver Lake, San Bernardino county.

We are unable to classify the two formations of this rock. Will you kindly do so?

C. W. (Times Subscriber.)

ANSWER.—The white crystals are sparry gypsum. The gray mineral is "bitterspath" (a talcose magnesium mineral.)

Melaphyre.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 2.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Enclosed find two samples of rock marked Nos. "1 and 2," found by me in the following-named localities: No. 1—South slope of "Old Baldy," from a vein eighteen inches wide. Will you kindly inform me if I have named it correctly as "galena?" I have been told that there is galena in it. No. 2 is from the San Gabriel Cañon. Is this a trap rock, and, if so, is it a "diorite," and does it contain "tin pyrites?"

Respectfully yours, A. J. E.

ANSWER.—No. 1 is a quartzose rock with mangenese oxide and iron oxides present. No galena (lead sulphide) is in the specimen. Brilliant peacock iron appears under the glass, as, also, here and there disseminated microscopic crystals of magnetite. Sample No. 2: There is no tin pyrite (native tin sulphide) in this specimen. Trap rock (among the mining boys,) is any old, dark, igneous rock, as is, also, any volcanic rock. The sample is made up of titaniferous iron, chlorite, alivin and plagioclase, and it is properly known as "melaphyre."

Odd Number Bunch.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 15.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Please classify samples I am sending you. I think they are limestone. They are from the Clear Creek country, Piute Mountains, California.

Yours truly, F. E. B.

ANSWER.—Your samples were neatly forwarded in six separate sacks and numbered 3, 5, 7, 11, 13 and 14. You were "shy" on the odd number "9." Their classification follows: Sample No. 3 is limonite (yellow iron oxide;) No. 5 is black in color and A1 magnetic iron ore; No. 7 is a good grade of apatite (phosphate of lime) and made up of many colors; No. 11 is a silicate of alumina, too impure for pottery work; No. 13 is limestone (and not scheelite;) No. 14 is gypsum.

Asphaltic Calcite.

SAFFORD (Ariz.) Sept. 28.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am sending you a sample of rock taken from a small hill near Safford, Ariz. The hill is of clay and sandstone, dip about 40 degrees. Will you kindly tell me what the sample is? Is it of an oil formation? It appears to me to contain asphaltum.

I pulverized a small portion and put it in a bottle with a little turpentine. I then added water, and the turpentine which rose to the top was of a dark yellowish color, which on adding a drop or two of sulphuric acid turned a light yellow color.

I tested a small piece of Gilsonite the same way with the same result.

Yours very truly, A. T. C.

ANSWER: Oxidizing agents—nitric acid, for instance—convert oil of turpentine into a number of acid products. Nitric acid, sometimes, sets the oil on fire. Turpentine, with sulphuric acids comes very near the formation of cymene (methyl-propyl-benzine.) Did you ever buy a bunch of "Pharaoh's Serpents?" They come in packages and by lighting one of the so-called "eggs of Pharaoh's serpents" quite a carbonaceous imitation of a serpent is formed. Now, part of your sample (calcite, contaminated with manganese dioxide) was placed in a test tube and a little hydrochloric acid added thereto. Pharaoh's serpents are, "not in it" with this acid combination—try it; and then observe on sides of the tube some traces of asphaltum base.

There is no need of becoming enthusiastic over this chemical reaction, however. Such calcite you will find from the Mexican line to Montana and the Dakotas, from Dan to Beersheba, as it were; and, "the stuff" was the cause of the oil excitement in Colorado and Utah, especially, some five years ago, where some 300 wells went "down and out," so to speak.

Hematite and Bismuth.

PASADENA, Sept. 27.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Kindly find enclosed in separate package three samples of ore which come from the San Andreas Mountains, New Mexico. These samples are numbered. Please tell me what they are? They all come from the same cañon. Thanking you very much beforehand, I am yours truly, A. H. P. S.: I have in this same district 800 pounds of bismuth ore which would run between 15 and 20 per cent. bismuth. Is there any way I can dispose of this ore in this country? About a year ago we sent a sample to London, but, it would be too expensive to send large quantities that far.

A. H.

ANSWER: But two of your samples were received by The Times. No. 1 is a high grade hematite peroxide of iron resembling (somewhat) cuprite and meta-cinnabar. A deposit of this would be valuable for the iron industry—if you had the advantages of rail and furnace. No. 2 is titaniferous iron ore with acicular crystals of (both) tourmaline and titanium oxides on top of specimen. There is a large body of bismuth ores with some of its values averaging 15 per cent. bismuth near Beaver, Utah.

Can you concentrate the bismuth values to a higher percentage? "Fifteen to twenty per cent. bismuth" ought to pay—provided you shipped, say, from Galveston, Tex., to London—Johnson, Matthey & Co. of London and the government of Saxony control prices of bismuth in the United States.

Not Cerussite.

OGDEN (Utah) Sept. 30.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am much interested in your "In the Earth" department of The Times and learn mineralogical facts from it, that I would hardly know where else to look for. The specimen I send you this date comes from a large outcrop of porphyry or similar rock a few miles north of this place. We think the crystallized material is lead carbonate. Would be glad to have your opinion. Respectfully yours, L. J. C.

ANSWER: There are traces, only, of anglesite (lead sulphate) in your samples of crumbling porphyry, but, no lead carbonate.

Beryllium.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 26.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Enclosed please find specimen of rock said to be orthosilicate of beryllium. It is from a large deposit near Skidd's mining camp, Inyo county. Please give commercial value of this material and oblige. Yours truly, T. P.

ANSWER: Your best course is to prospect for beryl gems. Beryllium, generally, occurs in nature in combination with silicic acid; often such as your sample, which sample, is of but little commercial value. "Mineral Resources of the United States 1904-5," shows some facts on the subject of interest to you. Pale green beryl is known as the emerald. Large crystals of beryl—unfit for gems—are found in Southern California and are easily sold.

Limestone Only.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 1.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Please state mineral character of the three samples. From Douglas county, Oregon. J. P.

ANSWER: The three samples are named in the subheading. One broken nodular piece is known mineralogically as "turtle stone" and makes "Roman cement." Septaria is its proper name (consult Webster's dictionary.) The green sample is dolomitic limestone, but, of a worthless grade. The gray one is limestone also.

Concentrating Ore.

ETIWANDA, Sept. 27.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The rock I send to you is from a ledge in a cañon tributary to Lytle Creek fifteen miles northwest of San Bernardino. I think it carries gold, silver and copper and perhaps other metals.

If it is of any value it will be a good thing for "the mining boys," as there is plenty of it. I thank you in advance for an opinion, and your advice, in a Sunday's edition of The Times.

Yours truly, A. L. S.

ANSWER: The samples were not tested for gold. In their form and condition as obtained, natively, they are of but little value. The rock is a mixture of alumina and silica with some chlorite.

If you have water sufficient, some "good money" can be made by concentrating say 100 tons in one ton and then ship to the smelter. Plainly observable in the ore is chalcopyrite (yellow copper of the mining boys.) Pyrite (iron disulphide) with some little galenite (lead sulphide) and silver values, from microscopic horn silver (the native chloride of silver.) Pulverize some of the ore and with a pan and water wash away the earthy and other worthless matter, but—save the concentrates—i.e., such particles of sulphides, etc., as remain behind.

Important Notice.

Many recent letters from correspondents were consigned to the waste basket because of failure to give approximate locality where samples were taken, and, because of not being properly tagged. There are a great number of specimens now in course of analysis from Goldfield, Crescent, Ely, Belmont and other points in Nevada; as also, from mine managers in that State, and in Arizona, Utah, Oregon, Alaska and elsewhere.

The answers thereto will be herein given as rapidly as certainty of results are attained. Meanwhile correspondents will please be patient.

Not Cuprite.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 24.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In the enclosed specimen I wish to have you state whether or not the red ore is a form of cuprite (copper ore) or not. It is from a ledge located in the vicinity of Alamo, Lower California, Mexico. P. L. L.

ANSWER. Your question is a double-witted one. You ask if the sample is cuprite (copper oxide) or "copper ore?" It is copper ore, all right, made up of streaks of azurite and malachite running through the reddish "jaspery clay iron" (a variety of hematite,) structure of the specimen, which also carries low per cent. copper values.

Chalcopyrite.

PASADENA, Sept. 21.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Inclosed with this note you will find two specimens which were picked up in the mountains of San Diego county, near the Riverside county line, by a friend of mine. He has not located either of them, not knowing what they contain. Believing that they have some value, I send them to you and ask that you give me some advice in your "In the Earth" column, which interests me very much. Thanking you in advance. Very truly yours, J. E. T.

ANSWER. Sample (1) is copper iron pyrite (chalcopyrite)—"yellow copper ore" of the mining boys. No. (2) is gossan (hydrated iron oxide.) If specimen (1) is an average sample from the prospect, it should be located. It is not good business practice, however, to imagine that gold nuggets galore can be obtained from a prospect; such "vain imaginations" smack too much of business on hysterical and hallelujah principles.

Porphyritic Rock.

HIGHLAND, Sept. 28.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I have inclosed a small piece of ore taken from a ledge very near Newberry, this county. It carries a mineral I cannot decide with my spoon, and I get a trace of gold and silver. Your test on it will be appreciated. Thanking you for past favors. Very truly yours, C. M. S.

ANSWER. Some pseudormphic pyrite is in the rock. Why don't you horn the concentrates closer with your spoon? The stuff holding back is magnetite and other iron oxide.

Magnesium Minerals.

SANTA BARBARA, Sept. 23.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Will you kindly name samples sent you in your "In the Earth?" Each one is numbered and all were found in Fresno county. Please state if any are of commercial value. Yours truly, C. O.

ANSWER. (1) is a micaceous silicate of lime and magnesia; (2) is a gray-green hornblendic schist; (3) is soapstone of fair commercial value; (4) is foliated micaceous talc.

Hydrated Iron Clay.

FRUITVALE, Sept. 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Would you kindly give me a qualitative analysis of the mineral matter which I inclose? I thought it might be mineral ochre. It is found in the foothills of Alameda county. Yours respectfully, W. G. R.

ANSWER. The sample is a fairly good grade of "Terra di Sienna," which acquires a rich chestnut color by ignition and is then known as "burnt sienna." It will make good paint. Approximate analysis, 60 per cent. iron peroxide; silica, 18; alumina, 10; lime, 1; water, 11—percentages as stated.

Manganese Dioxide.

RANDSBURG, Sept. 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I send you a sample of rock from this district, which is of much interest to several miners. We shall appreciate your opinion on same, and please state in a Sunday edition of The Times what the rock is, and if of any value. We are, Yours respectfully, G. B. and E. B. S.

ANSWER. The sample is chiefly manganese dioxide and iron oxides. Tungstic acid is not present. Traces of lead are in the specimen. It is of low value commercially, unless carrying precious metals.

Silicate of Alumina.

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 19.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Kindly name the inclosed sample, which is said to occur in large quantities near Santa Barbara. Has it a commercial value? Can you suggest a method, or where to find a method, for its quantitative analysis? Respectfully, F. S. W.

ANSWER. The material resembles, in color, kaolin after being put through the finest mesh of the launder in a clay-washing machine.

It, temporarily, floats on water, then sinks in the menstruum and falls to pieces. Originally, it was, and now is, a good variety of Fuller's earth. It is an earthy hydrous silicate of alumina. It has a commercial value. For methods of quantitative analysis consult a reputable chemist; or follow directions set forth by Fresenius, Long or other authorities.

Topaz.

PIOCHE (Nev.) Sept. 21.—[To the Editor of The Times:] This sample was picked up a few miles west of this place; is it a quartz crystal? Please reply in your "In the Earth." G. B. F.

Meerschaum.

PASADENA, Sept. 26.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am inclosing a small specimen that I found in the southern part of New Mexico (Sierra county.) I think it is meerschaum, used in making pipes. Am I correct? If not, what is it? Is it valuable? How wide a vein is necessary to make a valuable mine? Yours truly, A. H.

ANSWER. The stuff is meerschaum, but it is too friable, brittle, and contaminated with deleterious substances to make a valuable commercial product without chemical manipulation. If all the meerschaum deposits that are known to the editor of this department of The Times—in New Mexico, Nevada and California—were put on the market, there could be made therefrom plaster and filling materials enough to rebuild San Francisco. Del Norte county, Cal., is the latest find. But few pipes (comparatively) are made nowadays.

Important Notice.

Many recent letters from correspondents have been consigned to the wastebasket, owing to the fact that they failed to give an approximate locality from where the samples came, and because of not being properly tagged. A great number of specimens now in course of anaylsis, coming from Goldfield, Crescent, Ely, Belmont and other points in Nevada; as also, from mine managers in that State and in Arizona, Utah, Oregon, Alaska, and elsewhere. The answers thereto will be herein given as rapidly as certainty of results is attained. Meanwhile, correspondents will please be patient. R. O. H.

NEVADA.

GOLDFIELD'S GREAT MINE.

NET INCOME HALF-MILLON DOLLARS A MONTH.

Record of Ore Shipments Broken in October—Baruch's Big Strikes on Consolidated Deal—Strikes in Victor and Red King—Jumbo Extension's Increased Output.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Oct. 25.—George Wingfield officially states that the Consolidated company's net income from the mines and leases is about $500,000 per month; that there is on hand a cash reserve of $2,000,000, held for the implanting of reduction works and other purposes, and a treasury stock balance of 1,400,000 shares, only 3,600,000 of the capitalization of 5,000,000 shares having been issued. Nixon and Wingfield hold about 2,000,000 of the 2,600,000 shares issued.

Dividends, at the present rate, will run to $4,320,000 per annum and actual gross production of the various Consolidated leases and company diggings is setting a present pace that means over $10,000,000 annually.

High-water mark in high-grade marketing of ore from the Goldfield mines and leases was reached by the week which ended Saturday night, October 19. The score of 5406 tons broke all records. Contributors and their contributions are Black Butte, 28 tons; Combination Fraction, 76 tons; Consolidated, 3548 tons; Florence, 305 tons; Jumbo Extension, 1444 tons, and Velvet, 5 tons. Company diggings produced 2534 tons and leases 2872 tons, the leases exceeding the output of company workings by 13 per cent. The greatest single shipper of the week was the Mohawk mine, which sent out on company account 1502 tons. The second largest was the Mohawk-Jumbo lease on the Jumbo Extension, whose share was 1444 tons. The third in rank was the Combination, which marketed 864 tons.

THE BARUCH DEAL.

Barney Baruch has picked up 220,000 shares of Goldfield Consolidated at $3.81 9-11 per share, cash. He advanced a million dollars. He received $160,000 in return. That left him $840,000 invested in Consolidated. To show for this he has 220,000 shares of the stock. Allowing 6 per cent. interest per annum on a million-dollar loan for eight months, which comes to $40,000, and the investment stands Baruch $880,000, for 220,000 shares, his stock costing him four dollars flat.

Consolidated owed Baruch $1,000,000. It paid him in stock and cash $1,700,000. If the 6 per cent. interest proposition is taken into account, Consolidated payed Baruch $660,000 for the mere surrender of his million-shares option. If the value of the million-shares option is left out of the account, then Consolidated paid Baruch $700,000 interest for the use of $1,000,000 for eight months. That is a rate of $1,050,000 on $1,000,000 for twelve months, or 105 per cent. per annum interest.

The Baruch deal sets a value upon Consolidated stock at four dollars per share, establishing the valuation of the mines at twenty million dollars.

A meeting of the stockholders of Goldfield Consolidated Mines Company will be held at Evanston, Wyo., November 11 to elect trustees for the ensuing year. Walter C. Geddes has resigned as general superintendent, his action to become effective November 1, but General Manager John W. Finch remains in office. James Harrington, injured in one of the Consolidated workings last May, is suing the company for $25,000 damages.

NEW DISCOVERIES.

A discovery of utmost importance to Goldfield district is the recent find of shipping ore on the Victor, the easternmost claim of Goldfield Consolidated's group, bounded on the east and west respectively by the Gold Bar and Blue Bull, intermittent shippers. A 200-foot drift northwest on the 312-foot level uncovered four feet of average $60 ore. This is the greatest vertical depth attained in that neighborhood and is accepted as substantiation of the previously entertained theory that depth in that section is the one requisite to success.

Florence's latest lease to report a rich strike is the Florence Annex, on the Red King claim near the Firelight line, diggings formerly operated by Truett and associates. Its crosscut on the 300 level has reached a ledge showing free gold, the ore being as rich as Little's Florence's best and the vein being a distinctly new find, separate from any heretofore discovered. The lease is now driving for the same body on the 500 level and will shortly be among the regular shippers.

JUMBO EXTENSION.

From the first week of June up to and including the second week of October five leases on the Gold Wedge fraction of the Jumbo Extension shipped 12,199 tons of high-grade, a rate of 31,717 tons in a year. Giving the product an average value of $54.50 per ton, which in the earlier stages was the usual worth of Mohawk-Jumbo ore, the annual rate of production in that period was $1,728,576.50. These five leases are the Frances-Mohawk, Higginson, Jumbo Annex, Mohawk-Jumbo and Mohawk Ledge. How rapidly the production is increasing may be seen in the fact that on the second week of October one lease, the Mohawk-Jumbo, marketed 1393 tons, a rate of 72,436 tons in a year, this output having an average value of $70 per ton and worth $5,070,520 per annum. Royalties received this year by the Jumbo Extension up to the first of October sum up to $117,652.51, of which $96,537.29 was paid by the Mohawk-Jumbo lease and $21,115.22 by the Higginson and Mohawk Ledge leases.

Velvet entered the shipping list on the second week of October with a half-dozen tons of average $100 ore from a two-foot ledge caught on the 75-foot level in the Original lease. This is thought to be the old Reub Ryder shoot, which two years ago yielded $10,000 from a shallow surface pocket. Ore consignments will be regular henceforth, shipments soon to be made from the 150-foot level in this lease and its shaft to continue to the 500.

SEARCHLIGHT DISTRICT.

New Ore Bodies Found in Parallel and Searchlight Mines.

SEARCHLIGHT (Nev.) Oct. 26.—The Parallel, on the western edge of town, is getting great results in its late work. The new work dates back but three or four months, when an eighty-five-foot shaft was sunk at a point 600 feet north of the old workings. This rested with four feet of $45 ore, and carried never less than $20 from the surface. About 300 feet east a shaft is now being sunk that is down forty feet, and has two and one-half to three feet of better than $100 rock; values all gold. The several shafts are in the nature of prospecting, with a view of getting the trend of ore in all parts of the property, and later to locate the main shaft and stamp mill to the best possible advantage.

The Searchlight Mining and Milling Company has a new ore body of large extent. It has been cut from the 300 to 400-foot levels, and a winze has shown a length of at least seventy-five feet. It has high grade in spots and streaks, but the average is $10 to $12, which figures are considered very profitable at this mine.

Final repairs were completed yesterday at the Cyrus Noble mill, and it is now running under the Blossom lease. The Blossom mine is showing great quantities of fine ore, and steps have been taken toward the erection of a stamp mill.

G. Fred Colton has gone to Los Angeles to close the sale of the Good Hope section of the Duplex mines to Colorado capitalists.

The surprise of the week was from two claims of Charles A. Clark, attorney, of this place, and Henry Huggins, recently cashier of the bank. They were located several months ago simply because of their nearness to the Pittsburgh, two miles from town. The first panning showed a long line of colors, indicating better than $50 ore. The ledge appears in place and about four feet wide.

E. J. Knight, a banker of Providence, R. I., and president of the Chiquita, twenty miles to the south, is here arranging for resumption of development work and operation of the stamp mill.

The big ranch, fifteen miles east, on the Colorado, has been sold by the Riverside Ranching Company to Alfred Bley and George C. Melrose of Tropico, Cal. It brought about $20,000.

MANHATTAN.

Three Mills Nearly Ready to Begin Production of Ore—Profits from Placers.

MANHATTAN (Nev.) Oct. 25.—Inauguration of Manhattan's milling era is close at hand. Before another month has elapsed stamps will be dropping. The Wolf plant, constructed on Mustang Hill by the Manhattan Ore Reduction and Refining Company, bids fair to become the first of the three to go into commission, it being probable that wheels will begin to turn about the first of November. The plant is to possess a daily capacity of 120 tons. The works of the Nevada Milling and Ore Purchasing Company, otherwise known as the Lemon mill, on Wolftone Hill, will prove a close second. By December the Chapman plant, building by the Cañyon Milling Company on Black Jack Hill, should be ready for action. This is a Huntington mill of 50 tons capacity.

Properties of the reorganized Sullivan Trust Company, especially the Stray Dog, Indian Camp and Jumping Jack, are looking better than ever before. Placer leasers are getting profit from dry concentration of the surface dirt, and quartz diggings are in high grade. Meanwhile an enormous tonnage of second grade material is being made ready for the mills.

One of the banner leases on the Dexter, the Cram-La Lime, has a $10,000 dump of milling ore and recently broke into an eighteen-inch streak that is being sacked for direct shipment. The deepest workings in these diggings are down seventy feet.

Wet placer workings are meeting with generous returns at the Cole-Burns lease on the Little Grey.

Three feet of ore on the Wolftone Extension displays high values in silver and lead.

BULLFROG DISTRICT.

Montgomery-Shoshone Increases Output of Mine and Mill and Ships High Grade.

RHYOLITE (Nev.) Oct. 25.—Montgomery Shoshone has increased the mine and mill output from 1000 to 4000 tons per month, and the reduction plant is not yet running full capacity. A carload of high-grade is being shipped each day to the Utah smelters, and with the new triple compartment shaft nearing the 600-foot level, this rate will soon be materially increased. The flow of water amounts to 30,000 gallons daily.

All workings on Tramp Consolidated's Denver diggings are in ore that is either of direct shipping or exceptional milling variety. On the 450-foot the pay shoot has been proved for a distance of over 100 feet, the north drift following fine milling stuff and the south drift penetrating rock that all sorts for the market.

On the hanging wall of a three-foot pay shoot, in one of the old stopes off tunnel No. 1, at the Gibraltar mine, there are five inches of quartz that averages easily $200 the ton, with smaller streaks good for the $1000 mark. From this source, which is vertically 400 feet deep, the Phillips lease is sacking the product for the Utah market. The rails of the Las Vegas and Tonopah Railroad cross the Gibraltar estate, obviating a long wagon haul.

From the ore operating lease on the Diamond Queen there will be made early in November, a large shipment of ore that averages upwards of $200 the ton, coming from a shaft on the ledge whose pay shoot has been demonstrated for a distance of 500 feet.

It is yet a question which of the two rival railroads from Bullfrog will first reach Goldfield, the Las Vegas and Tonopah being within a short distance of its destination and the Borax Smith line having been completed to the outskirts of Gold Center, where it connects with the Bullfrog-Goldfield. Rhyolite is advised that Goldfield will celebrate railroad day on October 28, and by that time both the Clark road and the Tonopah and Tidewater will doubtless be operating between the two metropoli.

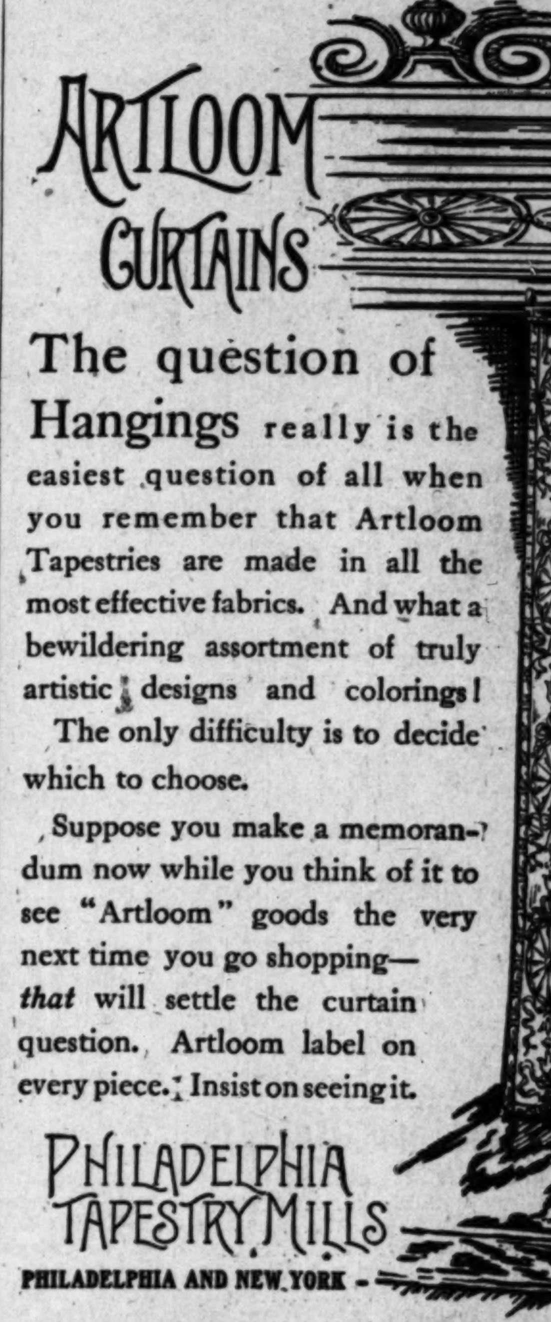
YUMA COUNTY.

Lease on Castle Dome Silver Lead Is Surrendered—Thumb Butte Mystery Solved.

YUMA (Ariz.) Oct. 26.—Robert De Luce and E. De Luce are again in possession of the Castle Dome Silver Lead Company's properties, after these mines had been under lease for twenty months to W. S. Ward, Denver, and Frank A. Ward, Rochester, N. Y. During that period, it is understood that the lessees worked on the basis of a 10 per cent. royalty to the De Luce people, and that they relinquished the remainder of a ten years' lease on the advice of their superintendent, Hugh R. Van Wagenen, of Denver. The De Luces were glad to take the property back in hand, and already they have resumed operations, and will make immediate shipments.

Another property which the De Luces have in hand at present is the Paymaster silver-lead group in Poormen's district, Imperial county, Cal., twenty miles from Glamis station, and forty miles from Yuma. They purchased the Paymaster group from Gus Livingston, the Sheriff of Yuma county, who is now in strong on the Thumb Butte. When the mines were worked before the owners operated a twenty-stamp pan amalgamating mill, which sometimes turned out as high as 60,000 ounces of silver bullion in a month. On the dump is a quantity of ore ready for shipment, which runs 70 per cent. lead and twelve ounces in silver, a value of about $36, laid down at the railroad station. The tailings at the old mill are said to carry about eight ounces silver.

The Mystery of the Thumb Butte company no longer mystifies. An assay shows that the ore is worth something more than $30, of which amount $11 is gold value and $19 copper, with only about six ounces of silver. The ore body is promising, and the company is more than satisfied with the



ARTLOOM CURTAINS

The question of Hangings really is the easiest question of all when you remember that Artloom Tapestries are made in all the most effective fabrics. And what a bewildering assortment of truly artistic designs and colorings! The only difficulty is to decide which to choose.

Suppose you make a memorandum now while you think of it to see "Artloom" goods the very next time you go shopping—that will settle the curtain question. Artloom label on every piece. Insist on seeing it.

Gold from Ocean Sand.

TYPE OF DREDGER THAT SEPARATES GOLD FROM BLACK SILICA OF BEACH.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

Barbara county, lying be- Point Sal on the south, and Rocks on the north, is a of beach where if you dig little way you will find black the coarse white sand; sand contains gold.

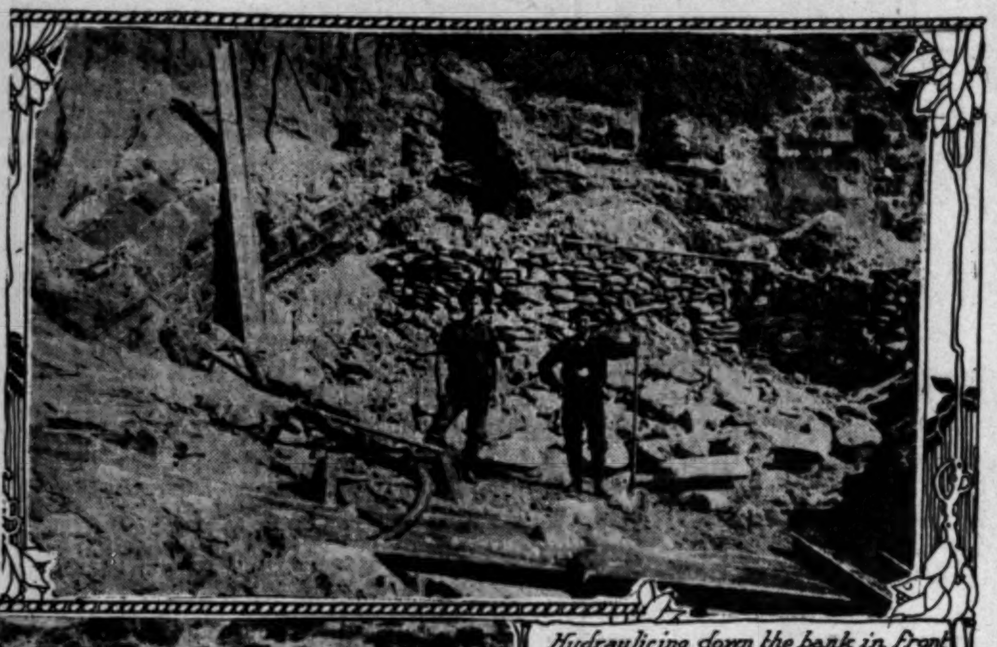
beach are sojourning some who are connected with the Mining Company of Guada- ornia; and here are they a new kind of dredger, wash- gold from the ocean sands.

dredger is a new idea for min- grade deposits containing the flake and floating gold the ocean beaches, rivers, etc.

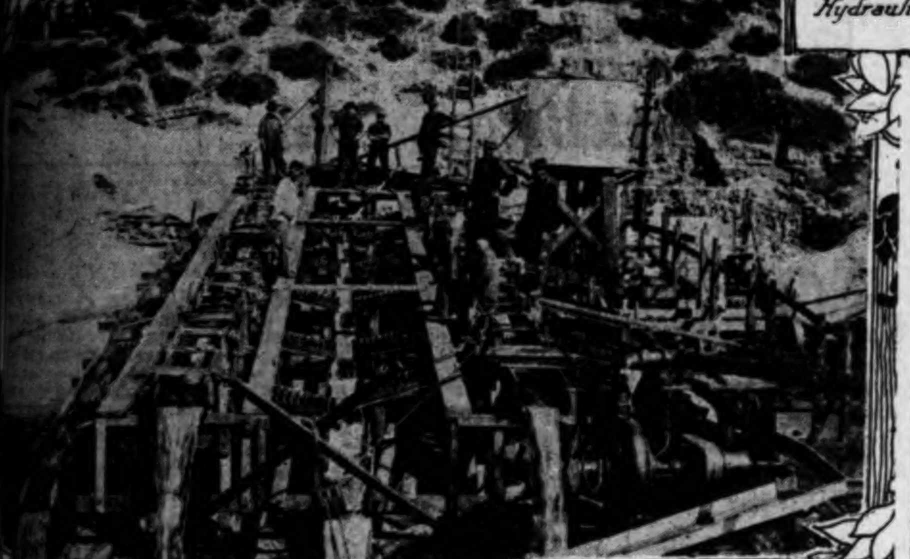
dredger consists of two pon- coupled together, forming a forty-five feet wide and feet long. On this deck is the superstructure; on each front end of the boat is lo- six-inch sand and gravel pump; of the front end are lo- fifty horse power Stover engines, connected to a forty- shaft, which drives all the pumps, etc. Near the center is located a six-inch water a little forward of the cen- one side is a six-inch wa- connected and used to hy- down the banks. On the rear near the center of the boat -inch sand and gravel pump stacking the surplus material. engine room is a 100-light connected to arc and incan- lights. The discharge pipes from the two six-inch gravel pumps on the front corners are eight feet high, and discharge into a flume constructed so as to concentrate the black sands and gold to the bottom. About sixteen feet from the discharge pipe this flume is separated into two branches, and along these branches at intervals of four feet the gold-saving devices are located.

The gold-saving devices are composed of patented riffles so constructed that fully 98 per cent. of the fine, flour, flake or floating gold is recovered. Each riffle is thirty inches wide and thirty-six inches long, having ten wells or depressions containing quicksilver. These depressions are fitted with a baffle plate the size and shape of the wells. The baffle plate, together with the angle at which each is set, makes a complete static pressure device, spraying the sands containing the fine gold onto the top of the quicksilver with about a two-inch head pressure, just sufficient to force the gold through into the quicksilver, but with not enough force to dislodge the quicksilver. By this method all sands, black and gray, are carried over into the next well, and so on until the sands have traversed through the ten wells or depressions.

Located in the flume at the heads of each set of riffles is a device for automatically taking out of the bottom of the flume just enough of the concentrates (gold and black sands) to furnish one set or two riffles. And floating on the water in the flume is another patented device that automatically takes enough water from the flume to wash the concentrates down over the riffles, leaving the balance of the material and water to go on down the flume to the next set of riffles.



Hydraulicing down the bank in front of the dredger



Dredger at Work

This is continued until all the concentrates (gold, etc.) are drawn off; the gray sand, gravel, shells, etc., are allowed to pass out of the open end of the flume with the surplus water.

Each of the front gravel pumps has two branch flumes, making four flumes to the rear of the boat. Along each of the branch flumes are located eighteen of these riffles, or seventy-two in all on this sized dredger, which is of 2000 tons daily capacity.

The sands here at Point Sal assay twenty-five cents per ton, and the cost of handling is only three cents per ton. A recent clean-up of 1000 tons of sand run over the device gave $200, a saving of fully 95 per cent. of the values.

As is generally the way with every invention, there have been discouragements galore. Even nature has taken a hand against them, sending the ocean against the boat last winter, demolishing what cost dollars and days to restore; but those who have slept and eaten with it from the time it existed merely on paper till now, when it is practically finished, have firm faith in its doing just what it was built for. With the dredger entirely completed, all the machinery, etc., at work, they estimate that they will take out $300 per day.

Iron Age.] The gravest evil from which this country is now suffering, graver by far than the exaggerated dangers from monopolies or from freight rebates, is the decline in the efficiency of labor. It finds expression in slouchy work on the part of those who know how to do better, and poor work on the part of those who have never been taught or are incapable of learning. To the more serious defect of lowered quality is added the troublesome feature of lessened quantity. It is a curious fact that the one question above all which is uppermost in the minds of manufacturers and other employers of labor, and which is privately discussed by them with helpless iteration, is so rarely touched upon in public utterances. The hope of developing some remedy is the only consolation to employers when they face the prospect of a decline in the volume of business.

There has been an extraordinary demand for labor of all kinds. So far as that has raised wages and directly increazed the cost of production employers have had no grievance, although it is a troublesome and difficult matter to carry them back to the normal level. Manufacturers know that prices for their products usually decline more rapidly than the labor cost, and must be willing to face that contingency. The laws of supply and demand never operate so promptly in the one case as they do in the other.

As for the quantity of output of labor, that, too, responds fairly well, when the demand for labor declines. The process of weeding out the lazy and the inefficient begins promptly, and it may be accepted as a general fact that few managers have not thoroughly examined their rolls with a view toward making their selections. The percentage usually will be small, but the moral effect is quite out of proportion to the numbers. During the past two years the knowledge that a job was waiting for any man who was willing to take it has had a demoralizing effect upon all labor throughout the country. The fact will be firmly realized soon that steadiness, reasonable industry and acquiescence in necessary measures of discipline are primary conditions for employment, and that simple application for work is not the only qualification.

Showing a Bad Example.

A grocer who was noted for his carefulness had an advertisement inserted in a local newspaper for a message boy, and a young fellow who understood the kind of a man who was advertising came to apply for the situation, and while the grocer was telling him how careful he must be a fly settled on a bag of sugar and the grocer caught it and threw it away. The boy then said:

"If you want me to be careful you are showing me a bad example."

"Why?" replied the former.

"Because," said the boy, "you have thrown that fly away without brushing the sugar off its feet."—[Tit-Bits.

Holding England Together.

It takes an army of about 1800 men and costs the tidy little sum of $30,000,000 each year to save the slices of the island of Great Britain, which would otherwise fall off into the ocean and disappear for ever off the world's map. Experts are employed constantly in going round and round the island watching the dangerous places and putting up embankments, piles and planting sand grasses in an endeavor to hold old England together.

ALSO CERAMIC ART.

FALSE TEETH, THEIR MAKING.

GREAT CARE REQUIRED IN PREPARING MATERIAL.

After the Teeth Are Molded They Are Baked, Then Subjected to an Examination and Finished, and Subsequently Given Another Baking at an Enormous Heat.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

The history of ceramic art is one of intense interest to the student. Simple and easy as appears the manufacture of a porcelain tooth, knowledge of a perfect product is of comparatively recent date. The basal elements required are feldspar, kaolin and silex, compounded in their proper proportions and carefully baked.

It was not until the year 1825 that Samuel W. Stockton of Philadelphia established the first factory supplying the dental profession with an article that bore semblance to a tooth. Since that time the art has reached a stage in which it is difficult indeed to distinguish the artificial substitute from a natural tooth, taking for granted that skillful adjustment has been made.

Nowadays, teeth may be obtained in infinite variety, both as to size and color, the shade varying from extreme white to the muddy yellow of the inveterate tobacco chewer. The cost of artificial teeth is constantly on the increase, owing to the scarcity of platinum, this metal being the only one that will not fuse when the teeth are baked. It is used for the pins and posts by which the teeth are attached to the plate bridge, or natural root, as the case may be.

The first step in the manufacture of forcelain teeth is the grinding of the ingredients. This is done in a special machine, and when crushed and ground, the feldspar is passed through sieves of graduated fineness. In this department the various materials for producing the various shades are compounded. In the molding room the pins which form the anchorages of the teeth are placed in their respective positions in the brass mold, and the mixture, which was previously been mixed with water, is poured in and lightly tamped to place, care being taken that no air bubbles enter with it. The molds are next placed in an oven and "biscuited." This operation drives off all moisture and leaves the teeth in a chalky state, when they are taken to the trimming department, filed, separated and given a general smoothing to remove all imperfections, each individual tooth being finished with great care, passing through a rigid examination before it is taken to the "burning" room. Here the biscuited teeth are placed on fireclay slides and put in the upper section of the large furnaces, the heat being raised very gradually. After a time these slides are removed to the lower muffles and subjected to an intense heat.

It has been found difficult to determine the exact temperature of the furnaces used, but through the aid of a recent invention, the electric pyrometer, it has been found to exceed 2624 degrees, Fahrenheit.

There is another fact which must not be overlooked in the baking and molding of porcelain teeth, and that is the shrinkage, which is about one-sixth of the bulk of a tooth. After the baking has been satisfactorily accomplished, the teeth are carried to the testing department, where each individual tooth passes through the hands of two skilled operators; one checking the findings of the other; all teeth found deficient in any manner being relegated to the scrap heap.

In the carding room the completed product is placed on wax sheets and marked with their mold and shade number. The dentist has a shade guide, furnished by the manufacturer, and determines the tooth to be selected by matching the remaining teeth in the mouth. If no teeth remain, he must utilize his judgment and furnish the patient with the proper tooth indicated by the temperament of the patient.

Teeth are carded and assorted into sets according to the number of teeth in a set. These are known as "fours," "sixes," "tens," "fourteens" and "twenty-eights," a full set of teeth consisting of twenty-eight teeth, the third molars not being incorporated into a set of artificial teeth.

There are an endless variety of teeth made, from the white, short, narrow tooth of the nervous temperament, to the large, broad, yellow tooth of the lymphatic.

So far I have spoken of only one kind of tooth, i. e., that most generally used, and especially adapted for rubber plates. The manufacturer must make, on the other hand, an entirely different tooth for bridge work, another variety for continuous gum; and in addition to these, he must furnish the dealer with porcelain crowns and shade guides, all these requiring a different variety of molds and an endless gamut of shade.

Truly, the manufacturer of porcelain teeth on a large scale has a host of details to attend to that is appalling.

AUGUSTUS SAULTIS.

Waited for the Train.

I happened, recently, to be traveling on a local train which was a marvel of slowness. The engine wheezed and puffed and pulled, but evidently the load was too much for it, and the delays were very numerous. The passengers were not in the best of humor, and the conductor came in for a great deal of harsh criticism. One man on the train, a drummer, was especially indignant, and taunted and gibed the conductor unmercifully.

"This blankety, blank, blank train is just about the limit. Why, it couldn't beat molasses in winter," etc.

Finally the conductor's patience became exhausted. "Say," he said to the drummer, "if you don't like this train, why don't you get out and walk?"

"I would," responded the drummer, "only my wife don't expect me until the train gets in."—[Judge's Library.

Why She Worried.

A lady carrying a little dog in her arms was riding in a 'bus that went along Park Lane. All the way up she worried the conductor to know whether they had come to No. —, mentioning a house nearly at the top.

When they reached this number, the conductor stopped the 'bus, thinking the lady wished to alight there. Instead of doing this, however, she went to the door of the 'bus, and, holding up the dog, said:

"Look, Fido; that's where your mother was born."—[N. P. C. in Illustrated Bits.

MORMON DIXIE LAND.

gone lame? Wages not enough?"

"Oh, them things is all right; but you see the old cow had a calf last night."

"No, I don't see what that has to do with your earning more money in a day than you ever saw in a month before. Why can't you go on hauling for me?"

"Well, you see, the old cow won't let the calf suck, and that blamed calf won't suck nobody's finger but mine."

Just a bit more hayseedy than Puck's Jerseyman and Western Kansans, but then Dixie is farther away from anywhere than other regions are, and many of its people have yet to see their first locomotive or telegraph instrument. No great sophistication is to be looked for in a country where bighorn bucks yet come down from the crags and fraternize with Merinos; where cougars cry in the night; where grizzlies take toll from herds in mountain pastures, and where roams at will the last of the shaggy-fronted lords of the prairie.

LORD OF THE RANGE.

From Lund on the railroad to the Virgin River wanders free and unafraid a great bison bull, solitary, sullen and formidable in his total lack of respect for man and all his works. The open prairie, the hill pasture, the fenced field and the highway are parts of his domain, and he is undisputed lord over all of it. When he chooses to take the road, the stage turns out for him and passes at a respectful distance, and freighters wait until it pleases him to move on.

The lone buffalo passed some time last summer along the banks of the Virgin, and when he was moved to go north he took the shortest way, which happened to be through a field where Farmer Workman was plowing. The fence was an obstruction, but no obstacle; the old bull walked through it and laid a course that took no account of the plow team. The horses promptly divested themselves of the plow and most of the harness and left the field, followed by Farmer Workman on the lope. But the buffalo paid no heed. He was not hostile; he only took the shortest way.

Just below Toquer, in the valley of Ash Creek, a green alfalfa field looked good to the Boss of Dixie. He demolished the gate and took possession, and there he dwelt in clover for two months, ignoring all attempts to evict him. Cowboys thought to drive him out, and they rode and whooped at him and threw their ropes. He eyed their capers with solemn disapproval for a while, and then he went into action. It takes a nimble horse to dodge the old bull, and one that was a trifle too slow experienced a rear-end collision that shortened his spine several inches. The Boss of Dixie has no respect for a man on horseback.

BOSS OF THE ROAD.

When the spirit of unrest possessed him, the big buffalo threw down the fence of the alfalfa field and took the road northward, traveling leisurely and frightening teams all along the way to Cedar bottoms. Recently he has been encountered on the stage road between Cedar and Lund. Nobody molests him, because the law protects him and he is supposed to be a ward of Uncle Sam's. The ranchers do not even dare to pepper him with bird shot when he preempts their clover patches or tramples their corn.

Probably the old fellow has been a polygamist in his day, but he is a reformed Mormon now, respecting the Edmunds act, and even shunning the society of the gentler sex. He even refuses to associate with cattle on the prairie.

If the tourist coming to California on the Salt Lake route keeps a sharp lookout between Lund and Modena, he may see the last wild wanderer of the race, whose thundering hoof-beats once made the earth tremble from the Missouri to the Wahsatch Range.

NEW DAYS FOR DIXIE.

The clocks of Dixie are ticking again, and soon will be keeping the time of today. The men of today have started them going and they will stop no more to await the tardy sunrise over Toquer's hill. Men from the oil fields of Pennsylvania and Ohio, Klondike adventurers, Goldfield and Bullfrog miners, oil drillers of Kern and Los Angeles have swept into the land and aroused it to life. The Mormons remember that Brigham Young, many years since, pointed to their mountains and told them that untold wealth was hidden there and some day would be brought forth. They think he meant oil, and that the day of discovery has come, and they are eager to prove his prophecy.

OUR TRADE WITH CHILI.

Most All the Imports Are Sent by Trans-Atlantic Rivals of United States.

Startling revelations of the advantage that has been gained over the trade of the United States in the South American republics by German, French, English, Belgian and other European competitors are contained in an official reference work of 500 pages, entitled "Chili of today," which has just been published by Señor Adolfo Ortuzar, the Chilian Consul-General in New York, who is regarded an authority upon the commerce of this country.

According to carefully compiled and very complete statistics of the foreign trade of the big South American republic, that are included in the publication, the European countries named have succeeded effectually in excluding the steel and iron interests of the United States from the markets of Chili.

Of the importation of steel rails into that republic during the past year, which totaled approximately $2,500,000, Great Britain captured a business that aggregated her manufacturers $1,523,592, Germany following with a custom valued at $504,580, while the United States secured orders to the extent of but $38,984. Bridge material valued at $496,230 was enterpd into the country, but in this business the American trade did not participate at all, the Creussot interests of France having supplied more than half the quantity imported, and Great Britain and Germany the remainder.

As an example of the insignificant proportion realized by the United States in the trade of Chili in wrought and unwrought iron, which reached a total of $5,832,358, less than $200,000 worth of that material entered the republic from this country. No black corrugaed iron (unpainted, non-tinned or non-galvanized,) was sent from the United States last year, although the importations from England amounted to $173,313. Nor did the American mills figure in the entry of unpainted smooth iron, which totaled $783,637, and of which aggregate the British interests succeeded in bringing in $639,807 worth.

Industrial Independence.

SCHWAB NEVER EMPLOYS ORGANIZED MEN BECAUSE INDEPENDENT WORKMEN ARE WORTH MORE.

THE visit to San Francisco of C. M. Schwab, the proprietor of the Union Iron Works, should have a most salutary influence upon the business conditions of that city. His will be an additional influence toward restoring to independent laborers their God-given rights which unionism has been seeking to wrest from every workman who has refused to become enrolled under some union banner. Mr. Schwab said, when announcing his intention to open up the Union Iron Works:

"No one believes in high wages more than I. I pay the highest wages, but I want the best work. We can well afford to pay our men in Pittsburgh four times as much as the steel workers of Birmingham get, because our men do four times as much work.

"I am not opposed to organized labor. I am opposed to labor unions as they are administered today. I am just as bitterly opposed to the employers who treat their men as some capitalists do today.

"I never had an organized man working for me in all of my experience. Why? Because I believe that my non-union men should be paid more than union men get. I so pay them.

"The union is like the trust in that it creates artificial prices and restricts output. For that reason, if they are maintained on that basis, both must fail of themselves.

"The union cannot live if it is going to persist in saying to its good workman: You must do no more work than our poorest worker."

The manner in which the unions have restricted the amount of work which shall be performed by their members has become apparent to many other employers besides Mr. Schwab, but rarely has the comparative value of union and independent labor been put in so concrete a manner. He pays his non-union men more than union men because they do a larger amount of work and are more valuable to him. The union scheme of reducing production to the amount that can be turned out by the poorest workmen in the union, has a most injurious effect upon industry, as it compels the employment of more workmen, and a larger superintending force. Mr. Schwab is a welcome addition to the large employers of labor on this Coast. His will be a helpful influence toward securing to the independent workers the rights that belong to them.

A Case in Point.

A company formed to manufacture steel was invited to consider a town in California as a possible site for its enterprise, says American Industries. The location was ideal, transportation facilities good and general surroundings entirely satisfactory, but the capitalists refused to invest their money because of the labor unrest then scourging that particular locality. In fact, the community was actively engaged in presenting to an attentive world an object lesson in which the evils of labor unionism formed a prominent part. The issue was the continuation of closed-shop domination, and the long-suffering citizens had been driven to desperation by their masters. It is no idle conjecture to say that every geographical division of the entire country has suffered even as the California community, and that industrial enterprises have sought other fields, or hesitated to risk capital in manufacturing plants simply because labor unions demanded the closed shop. The South offers proof of this evil condition. Southern States are bidding everywhere for both capital and labor, and, to quote from a recent Chattanooga publication:

"To obtain these, the South must be just to each and fair to both in equal exactness. This is only possible under the open shop. That principle is absolutely in harmony with what is right and inimical to what is wrong either on the part of capital or labor."

This belief that fairness and equality, our constitutional rights, are not possible under closed-shop conditions seems to have been accepted by the American public. During the last twelve months the growth of the open shop has far exceeded that of the union shop. Recent statistics show that a large number of prominent industrial enterprises have firmly established the open shop. Among these are William Cramp & Sons, Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, American Locomotive Company, Pennsylvania Railroad shops, International Harvester Company, American Steel Foundry Company, the Pullman Company, Meadville Steel Company, Illinois Steel Company, Baldwin Locomotive Company, Baltimore and Ohio Railroad shops, National Cash Register Company and the National Tube Company. These great industries employ a vast army of workmen, and, under the open shop principle, are entirely free from labor disturbances or unpleasant labor complications.

The Cost of Strikes.

The actual cost of strikes is hard to compute, but statistics that have been compiled for a period of twenty years show that the loss to employés in establishments in which strikes occurred amounted to the enormous sum of $257,863,478. The loss to employés from lockouts for the same period was $48,819,745, or a total loss to employés by reason of these two classes of industrial disturbances of $306,683,223. The number of establishments involved in strikes during this period was 117,509, making an average loss to employés in each establishment in which strikes occurred of $2194. These strikes threw out of employment 6,105,694 wage-earners, making an average loss of $42 to each.

It will be observed that the lockouts were less expensive. The number of establishments involved in this class of disputes was only 9933, but the average loss was higher, being to each employer $4915, while the number of employés dismissed was 504,307, making an average loss of $97 to each wage earner. Combining these figures it would seem that the wage loss during these twenty years to employés because of these industrial troubles, was $306,683,223, and the number of establishments involved was 127,442, while the two causes threw out of employment the enormous army of 61,610,110 wage earners. The combined figures show an average wage loss during the twenty years of $2406 to employes and an average loss of $46 to each person involved.

In addition to this must be included the assistance given to strikers during the twenty years which, so far as ascertainable, was $16,174,793; and to those involved in lockouts $3,451,461, or a total of $19,626,254. This sum is probably too low, and includes only such assistance from labor organizations as could be ascertained, and ignores unknown aid furnished by outside sympathizers.

It is estimated that the loss to employers through strikes during these twenty years amounted to $122,731,121; through lockouts, $19,927,983, making the cost of strikes and lockouts during this period $142,659,104.

The question of the recognition of union and union rules, either alone or in combination with some other cause, produced during these twenty-five years 26.35 per cent. of all strikes, and were the sole cause of 12.84 per cent. The percentage of strikes concerning recognition of union and union rules has shown a remarkable increase. They constituted less than 9 per cent. of all strikes between 1881 and 1885, and never reached 20 per cent. in any single year prior to 1896, yet during the five-year period of 1901 to 1905, they constituted more than one-third of all strikes.

Iniquity of the Closed Shop.

The question of a closed or open shop is one question that unions will not arbitrate, and it may be said that the primary purpose of the unions under their present leaders is to establish a universal closed shop. This makes it most important for the public to inquire into the closed shop as an economic institution, and particularly as to how its own interests are affected thereby.

A closed shop is a shop or business in which none but union men are employed, that is, it is closed to all non-union men by virtue of some agreement, express or implied, between the union and the employer. The closed shop, therefore, represents a monopoly of labor in that particular business in favor of the union. The union is a voluntary association of individual workmen controlled by the vote of the majority and usually having no financial responsibility that can be reached. It is directed by leaders elected by vote of its members and there is every tendency, therefore, for politics to develop, and as with national and State politics, for the "boss" system to become established. Most of the unions are in the control of bosses, who retain their positions and power, more on account of their political ability in building up and managing a machine than because of any special fitness they may have to direct a union, viewed as an important factor in industrial activity. Here, then, are sinister factors to be considered, a monopoly coupled with a "boss" system, and these factors are not only potential in every union, but to a great degree are actual facts in the unionism of today.

Another contribution towards high prices made by the closed shop is through the graft of the union bosses. Wherever there is a boss developed under a political system, there is the making of graft. Not all union leaders are grafters, but the price the public pays for those that are, would be stupifying if fully realized. Cornelius P. Shea of the Teamsters' Union, while under trial for conspiracy, was accused in sworn testimony of having received $1500 to call a strike in Chicago against Montgomery, Ward & Co. The leading papers of Chicago estimated that this strike cost the business interests of Chicago directly and indirectly about $25,000,000. Since that time hundreds of industries have moved away from Chicago, seeking locations where they might be free from the control of organized labor. Schmitz of San Francisco has become rich as a union Mayor. For years Sam Parks of the Iron Workers' Union levied tribute upon the builders of New York. You may be sure that the cost of this graft comes directly or indirectly out of the public in the last analysis.

Crime Against American Youth.

For the citizen who thinks more of his country and its future than of his pocketbook, the greatest crime to be laid to the closed shop in labor conditions is that against the American youth. Every union without exception, as it increases in power, decreases the number of apprentices allowed to learn a trade until in some cases absolutely none are taken. This means that unless there is a readjustment of some kind, the American youth of today cannot join the ranks of skilled labor. Wherever trade schools are established, the unionists make strenuous efforts, often successful, to gain control and to see to it that the character of the workmen who are graduated is not such as to furnish any menace to their monopoly.

The sad feature about all this is, that while it is the public that is the sufferer, it is also the public that sits passively by holding the key to the situation, and yet not using it. The man who pays the bills is the man who can control any industrial situation if he sees fit. Encourage the open shop; patronize it; give your moral and financial assistance to every fight to establish it. If you cannot or will not do these things, at least refrain from giving your approval and support to a monopoly of labor any more than to a monopoly of capital, for it has only been with the acquiescence of assistance of the general public that the closed shop has obtained such a foothold in our industries.

J. B. Duke a Strike-breaker.

James B. Duke, president of the American Tobacco Company, who employs several hundred laborers and skilled mechanics on his estate at Somerville, N. Y., and has a payroll of $8000 a week, made a record as a strike-breaker recently, landing fifteen union hodcarriers in the County Jail, and breaking the back of what was intended to be an extensive strike before it was an hour old. Mr. and Mrs. Duke recently returned to their summer home, after an automobile wedding tour through the Eastern States.

Mr. Duke is now superintending the construction of an addition to his mansion that is to cost $75,000. In order to push the work the contractors imported an additional number of bricklayers from a near-by city, but failed to get a sufficient number of hodcarriers to serve them. Manager Smith of the Duke estate put a number of Italian laborers employed on the place at work carrying hods to help out. The union hodcarriers, who are also Italians, threatened to strike if the men were kept on the job. Dr. Duke refused to take his men off and a strike followed. Eighteen union hodcarriers marched to the Duke mansion, and drove the non-union laborers from the job and guarded the building to keep other non-union men from work. All work on the building stopped. It was then that Mr. Duke personally conducted the warfare against the strikers.

Special detectives and constables were summoned, who swooped down on the strikers and fifteen of them were placed in wagons and driven to the County Jail. Former Representative Alvan A. Clark, Mr. Duke's counsel, was summoned to prepare a complaint against the men. Three of the laborers who were driven from their work charged the prisoners with assault and threats to take their life. Manager Smith also made an affidavit charging the strikers with conspiring to damage the Duke property.

Justice Suthphen held the prisoners to await the action of the grand jury under $500 bonds each.

Hand Made Trimmings

PROMINENT among the most elegant trimmings of the moment are ornaments and fringes.

They are found upon the choicest models of the most exclusive designers.

A sleeve is given grace by the weight of a row of heavy pendants like drops.

The bodice of a simple gown acquires character with a jaunty edge of little balls of fringe of the Spanish design.

Sometimes it is merely the fastening of a cloak, but invariably where there is trimming of any sort a motif of hand crochet is sure to be introduced.

As a rule it is not used in great quantities, and the making of a sufficient amount to trim one's own gown is thus rendered quite a possibility to those who are fond of such work.

It is mainly on the lovely light house or evening gown that these trimmings appear, but they are also frequently found on fancy bodices and wraps of dark material.

When used in connection with lace, a linen thread is employed, the cost being infinitesimal, of course. The very simplest form is the huge round button that gives a most distinguished touch to many a skirt and coat, irrespective of color or material.

For instance, the skirt pictured is made of palest gray net, the border of broadcloth held in place by buttons of this sort.

And when so made they are equally appropriate upon lace gowns and coats. Fashioned of silk they fasten or decorate the handsomest garments of rich cloth or silk.

Nothing is required but a simple wooden mould and a little puckered mat crocheted around and around from the center in spiral form with a single crochet stitch. Every little girls learns how to do this—especially the saucer-like cup of the edge.

These mats are drawn over the mould by a few big stitches underneath—which also serve to catch them in place.

Crocheted rings are a degree more difficult. The prettiest are those which are made of bent rings whose form when covered imitates curiously the outline of a flower.

Dozens and dozens of rings are required to trim a gown, but they are well worth the trouble.

After one's hand is in they go with astonishing rapidity, and when arranged according to one or two of the fashionable methods they make up the prettiest trimming imaginable with the right hand-worked effect of the moment.

A conventional sort of sprig with its stem is outlined upon the material in coarse embroidery silk. Six or seven of the rings are arranged to simulate a bunch of blossoms against the background so formed.

This motif is repeated in a border on the skirt and naturally usually trims the bodice also.

Lace leaves may be bought ready made and appliqued upon the gown. This is very pretty when a lacy effect is desired upon a light gown; the rings are then made of linen.

For cloth gowns they are made of silk. The favorite thing is to have this trimming of the same color as the gown, but in a different tone. Fringes of all kinds are fashioned of variously shaped pendants or of balls done with the heaviest silk or cotton, a bit of cotton batting filling the center to give them shape.

These must, of course, be put closely together, but there is seldom more than a couple yards used, so the task is not so arduous as it would first seem.

For instance, the sleeves only are finished with fringe in the handsome lace model of a cloak that is shown. The bodice is sparingly garnished, in the case of the ball fringe—which is not used at all on the skirt of the costume.

Fancy ornaments and tassel arrangements are the most difficult stage.

One must have taste and be able to improvise odd shapes, which are suspended upon crocheted cords from little crocheted mats and big buttons.

These, like the rest, are done in cotton or silk, according to the material.

Two is the usual number used. They are certainly worth the trouble of making, for they give a handsome effect to the simplest sort of garment.

A CHEERFUL VIEW OF LIFE . . .

AS A RULE, I approve of doing things promptly. If I have anything to accomplish, I like to get at it and turn it off to make room for something else.

Occasionally it is a mistake to do this, and there are some disadvantages about being what southern people call a "Dick-in-a-minute," but, as a rule, the do-it-now principle works pretty well.

To this rule, however, there is one important exception. It never pays to yield to your temper in a hurry.

As a matter of course, there are many who never would yield to their tempers at all if they took time to consider.

That they will tell you.

With them, they will say, it is a word and a blow, and the blow first. A sudden provocation comes, and if one is a little "quick on the trigger," a shot is fired before one knows quite what is being done.

The hasty retort, the angry speech, is out before one has more than drawn breath, and harm may have been done which cannot be atoned for in weeks.

While I deplore this sort of thing, and wish with all my heart that I, as well as every one else, could have sufficient self-command to crush back the sharp word unspoken, it is not of this I wish to speak especially this morning.

The kind of hurry I am deprecating now is the sort that really could be avoided if one would bring resolution to bear on the problem.

Hasty judgments, for instance. I have been the victim of these several times, and right in Each and All, too.

It is nothing unusual for me to be taken to task sharply by the girls for my failure to reply promptly to their letters.

UNDER MISAPPREHENSION

Such girls labor under the impression, perhaps, that I have only a few correspondents, and that there is something wrong with me because I do not reply to them all at once.

Possibly, if they saw the hundreds of letters that often come to me in the course of a week, the stack of correspondence piled on my desk, they might have a little more patience with me and delay their condemnation.

I am not so foolish as to be hurt when they write unpleasant things to me, but it would make things easier for me if some of the girls would be a bit less hasty in their judgments.

Then there are the girls who reproach me, with varying degrees of severity, for my failure to put their letters on the page at once.

They write to me and say: "Please put my name on the page for postcard exchange just as soon as you can. I shall look for it next Sunday."

Next Sunday!

When I see that sort of request I don't know whether to laugh or to groan. Often the letter does not reach my hands until after the date when the girl had expected it to appear in print.

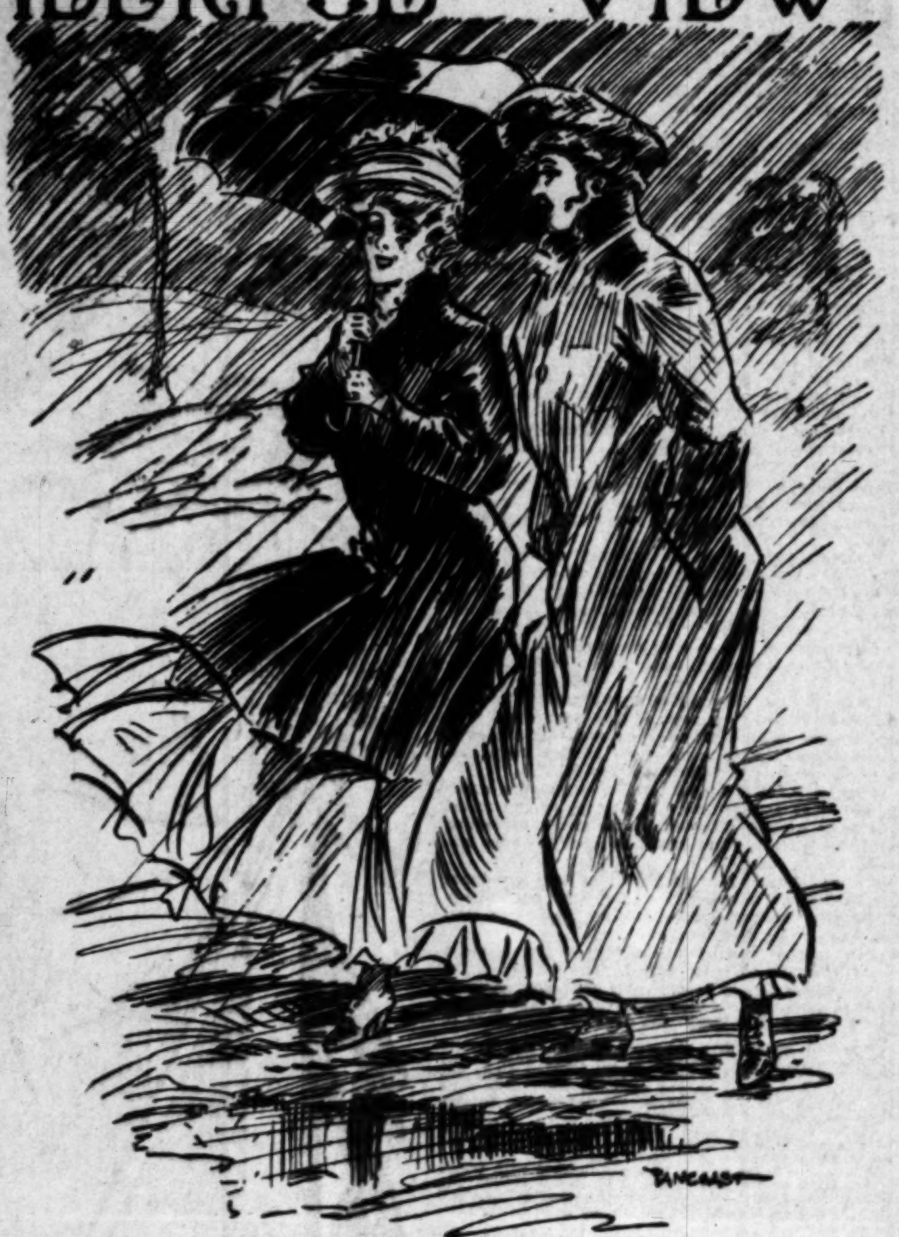
Then when I once get it, it has to be read and answered, the address entered and the request placed in the line with those others who have sent similar requests.

It would not be fair to print letters out of their turn.

Then when I have put the letter in shape for printing and turned it in it has to be set up in type.

It is impossible to get a letter in "next Sunday" or the Sunday after that. But the girl who looks for her communication on the day she had hoped to see it writes to me and says rather unkind things sometimes because her name has not yet appeared on the page.

If the girls would only wait to think that it takes time to forward letters from every corner of the country, that I live thousands of miles from many of them and that I have many correspondents, it would relieve the pressure a little.



"MAKE THE BEST OF IT."

I did not mean to go so fully into this, although it may be a good thing for the girls to understand the causes which stand in the way of the immediate appearance of their letters. I started, though, to give this experience of mine merely as an illustration of the benefits of waiting a little before you condemn unreservedly.

What is true in one case may apply in others. Let me give another illustration.

A woman told me with some bitterness of the rudeness with which she had been treated by a friend. "She didn't even take the trouble to answer my last letter," she said. "I invited her to my house, and she neither came nor wrote."

"Perhaps she didn't get the letter," I suggested.

"Now, my dear," she said, "that is nonsense. Letters don't miscarry!

"No," she meant to put a slight on me, and I have done with her!"

I happened to be present some weeks later when the speaker received back from the dead letter office her own letter to the friend whom she had "dropped" on account of the supposed rudeness.

A little error in the address had been the cause of the apparent slight which had induced the writer of the note to break off a friendship which had been pleasant and profitable.

Every one of us knows of similar cases where a snap judgment has been given and afterward proved to be unfair.

Do you see how much better it would be not to be in a hurry about such things, to take time to be sure before condemning?

Another time when delay is well concerning letters is when you have written in a hurry when you are angry.

Don't send that letter!

"I mean every word of it!" you will say, hotly.

I know you think you do. But put it away over night. Sleep on the matter. Think a little of what the letter will mean to the one who gets it, of the effects it may have upon both of you.

Compare your own conduct in similar circumstances with that which you now condemn. Have you always been guiltless of blame in like conditions?

And if not, wouldn't it perhaps be as well to exercise toward another a little of the charity you may have needed in the past or might possibly welcome in the future?

If you are entirely candid about the matter, if you say a certain little petition about having your own trespasses forgiven as you forgive those of others, if you meditate on your Each and All pledge a while, I think that when you reread your letter the next morning you will decide to put it in the waste basket and write one rather more gentle in its contents.

This same rule of deferring judgment works well in other cases. In your verdict upon others, for example.

A girl does a certain thing which at the first you do not understand. The general tendency is to criticise and condemn promptly, without stopping to think that you may either have misunderstood her action or that she had some reasons for it of which you knew nothing.

OFTEN JUDGE CRUELLY

You judge her readily and often cruelly, and then when you learn later that you had been mistaken you are sorry.

But does that restrain you the next time?

Are you not just as quick to decide that anything which appears ill must have the worst possible construction placed upon it?

The same sort of hurry often gets one into trouble about this or that course of action.

You hear of something you would like to do, and like a flash you form the intention of doing it. It may be imprudent or extravagant or inconsiderate, or perhaps even unkind.

If you stopped a little to think the matter over, you might come to a different decision about it.

And when you are in an unpleasant plight, make the best of it. Be cheerful under all conditions.

How many things have you done in haste and repented at leisure, from giving a sharp answer to a member of the family to making up your mind to get married?

Some of you may never have done either the one or the other, but if not, you have probably done something else about as bad. If you had thought, you would have acted differently.

Don't you all believe this?
Haven't you all done such things?
If you haven't, I would like to hear from you; and if you have, I would like to hear, too!

Christine Terhune Herrick

P. S.—Every mail brings a host of letters asking one or the other (or both) of these two questions: "How shall I address your letter?" or "How can I get a badge?"

Address all letters to me, in care of the paper in which you see our page, inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope, if you wish a personal answer.

For the badge—send 50 cents in stamps, registered letter or money order, made payable to me, and addressed to me in care of this newspaper.

An Interesting Letter

I am interested in everything and in all the girls, and would be glad to write on any subject.

I have been through an academy, studied music both in piano and singing, and I have picked up pen drawing from watching others.

I have traveled all over the North as far as Labrador, and in many of the states. I expect to go to old Mexico this fall. Many of my friends wonder why I don't get lonesome traveling in so many strange places as Newfoundland and in some of the western places; but no matter where I go I am happy, because I always find some one to please, and when I can please others it always makes me happy.

To be happy you must have a contented mind, and to have a contented mind you must have love for everything; and when you get so that you can see love in everything, everything will see love in you.

I am a great lover of letter writing, and would be glad to write to any of the girls and help the society in any way I can.

I am 19 years old. I would like my name in the Correspondence and Postcard Exchange, and wish especially to hear from the western girls.

I have written several books, and would like to get some new ideas from girls interested in the same work, and also to help others. Western books are what I have written mostly. I. G. (Leominster, Mass.).

With such a variety of interests and the knowledge gained from extensive travel, this new member should make an interesting correspondent.

Flower Seeds and Magazines

I lived in Philadelphia about ten years ago, and was happy there. Now I live on the prairie, where there are very few white people.

I have a lovely flower garden (really the only pleasure I have), and could send seeds to any one who wished them this fall.

Also, I have almost a year's subscription to Munsey, the Ladies' World and at least two dozen other good magazines, which I would be only too glad to pass on to an invalid or any one who could pay the freight or postage. MARIGOLD (West Selkirk, Manitoba, Can.).

Any member who would like to write to "Marigold" will find her a charming correspondent. Her offer of seeds will be readily accepted, I am sure.

Poppy Seeds and Recipes

I have some poppy seeds, which I will send to the girls if they want them. I also have two good cake recipes that I will be glad to pass on.

ASTER (Mount Carmel, Pa.).

Who wishes to accept these friendly offers? Inclose return postage when writing for "Aster's" address.

Fond of Riding

I am exceedingly fond of riding, and would like very much to have any of the Each and All girls who live in or around Los Angeles and are interested in the same pastime to call on me. ALICE T. (Los Angeles, Cal.).

Won't some girl who is interested in this outdoor sport write to me for "Alice T.'s" address?

One Girl's Expense Account

I will try to give you an idea of the way my money goes. This is not easy, for I have not yet a permanent position and find it hard to judge what I should do with a regular salary.

Last year I worked for $12 per week. We were given four weeks' vacation, and later were suspended for two months for lack of funds. At that time I took a month's study at the shorthand school and bought a typewriter; also paid $15 on a debt.

For regular expenses I have: Rent, $96; a $2 room and $1.50 in the summer. Food, laundry and the small housekeeping things, $120. Four weeks I was at friends' homes.

Dress, usually about $100. I make my own things mostly, and think, perhaps, it might be only $75, now that I have got well started on getting clothes.

Business carfares, $25. The rest of the items depend wholly on the amount I am earning. For all kinds of charity, $37, or about 71 cents per week. For my friends' gifts, visits, stationery, $20, or about 40 cents per week. My own pleasure (this year including music lessons), $40, or about 80 cents per week.

The latter includes the carfares necessary for my vacation. Doctor's and dentist's bills cannot be estimated. A slight illness keeping me from work a fortnight cost $20. M. L. F. (Boston, Mass.).

It seems to me that "M. L. F." manages very well. I hope her list of expenditures will offer suggestions to girls who are not so clever at making ends meet.

Will Help in Elocution

Each and All is doing so much for me that I should like to make some return. I am interested in elocution and have quite a number of nice recitations. If any of the girls would care for them I will gladly send them. Please let me know if there is anything I can do and I will do it most willingly. F. R. H. (Laphams, N. Y.).

Assistance in elocution and good selections are always in demand, and I foresee many requests for this address.

A Want and an Offer

I would like very much to have books or magazines from the members. I cannot afford to pay the expressage, but perhaps I could repay the kindness in some other way.

Does any one want tiny shells, bits of seaweed, moss and such things, which come from the sea? If so, I would be pleased to send some.

BESSIE (North Berwick, Maine).

Who wants to arrange an exchange with "Bessie"? Write to me for her full name.

Thinks it is Right to Work for a Home

I think a woman is doing nothing wrong by working, even if she is married, if the object is the sooner to get a home or if the head of the house is unable to work on account of sickness. But to work "just to have something to do," as so many say, I do not think right. It deprives women needing work of the positions and makes wages cheaper. I know one woman who says "she just can't sit around all day and do nothing." She does not need to work, for they own their own home and her husband makes good money. She can dress better and has more money to spend than the people she works with. In consequence, she rather holds herself above them, and I think that must hurt the girls who care for themselves or who have some one dependent upon them.

LASSIE (Los Angeles, Cal.).

Magazines, Patchwork and Patterns

I have quite a number of back numbers of different magazines which I will gladly send to any one wishing them. I also have silk, satin, velvet, woolen and calico pieces which I would be glad to exchange for postcards. R. S. W. (Kennebunkport, Maine).

I have a magazine called Short Stories which I will be glad to send, and there is also a magazine that comes with one of the papers every Sunday which I will send to some lonely girl.

My offer of patterns is still good, as I always draw from the original. I have a rose corset cover, a Battenberg corset cover and a Battenberg centerpiece. I can also send shells, moonstones and pressed California poppies, pepper flower berries and leaves, if any one will send the postage. Mrs. N. K. (Redondo, Cal.).

Both of these offers sound attractive, and I hope they may meet a felt want. We have several offers of patchwork pieces, to give or to exchange.

Will Give Hemstitching and Recipes for Quilt Pieces

Do you know any Each and All girls who would like plain hemstitching done in exchange for silk or woolen quilt pieces? I love hemstitching, and it does not require the least effort for me to do it. All I ask is that the girls furnish the materials, and they will be more than welcome to my work.

It is very lonely out here, as I am ten miles from a town and three from a postoffice, so in this way I can pass my time and be helping the Each and All girls at the same time.

I also have a nice book of recipes which I have selected from homes and friends, and will gladly send copies of them to the girls if they will state what kind they wish. I have tried nearly all and so know they are good.

I am trying very hard to get silk pieces enough for a quilt, but I find I have not enough to begin with. I also have a lovely worsted quilt I am piecing from all evening shades except white.

I am nearly out of pink, and if any of the girls have silk or worsted pieces they wish to exchange for hemstitching or recipes I will be very happy to receive them. I have three lovely correspondents and would like to enlarge my list to four times its size. I was 17 years old on July 30.

MABEL MILLICENT (Phebe, S. D.).

Who will make this exchange and cheer one lonely member?

An Offer of Silk Pieces

I am very busy, during both the day and evening, doing fancy dressmaking, needlework and wood burning, but the fact that one works for a living is no reason for being selfish and thinking that one cannot brighten the lives of others.

I have a great many scraps of silk, velvet, cloth and cotton pieces left from my work that I would gladly give to any one who would like them for a quilt or any other purpose.

One member, I notice, desires old fashion sheets to make paper dolls for the children in hospitals. I have some sheets she may have and will save all such in the future for her, and not throw them away, as I have been doing.

I have several pleasant correspondents in our society and am always eager for more.

Mrs. ELSIE S. H. (Philadelphia).

I wish I could always bring demand and supply together as quickly as in the two preceding letters. Some of the silk pieces will probably be sought by other quiltmakers.

A Canary and a Cat Wanted

I am a great lover of pets and want a canary bird (singer); also an Angora cat. I will exchange embroidery and work and silk pieces for either bird or cat. I do very nice embroidery. Mrs. H. A. E. (Los Angeles, Cal.).

Can any one put this member in the way of making the desired exchange?

From Our Home-Loving Girls

A number of our members have offered recipes and help in cookery.

Recipes and Music

I will supply any one requesting them with recipes or with any sheet music that I may happen to have.

F. E. J. (Warren, Ohio).

Interested in Cooking

My special interest is cooking. If I can be of service in any way, please call on me.

Mrs. H. B. C. (East Boston).

Recipes and Patterns

I would like to help the girls by writing to them or by sending them recipes. I have a very nice quilt pattern which any one can have for the asking. If any one would like patterns for suits for a little boy, 5 years old, they may have them. PEG (Anselma, Pa.).

Tell Him So

IF YOU hear a kind word spoken
  Of some worthy soul you know,
It may fill his heart with sunshine
  If you only tell him so.

If a deed, however humble,
  Helps you on your way to go,
Seek the one whose hand has helped you,
  Seek him out, and tell him so!

If your heart is touched, and tender
  Toward a sinner, howe'er low,
It might help him to do better
  If you'd only tell him so!

Oh! my sisters, oh! my brothers!
  As o'er life's rough path you go,
If God's love has saved and kept you,
  Do not fail to tell men so!

—Sent by "Mary," Los Angeles, Cal.

Candy and Cakes

I can send recipes for candy and cakes to any one who wants them. Mrs. E. G. (Mahanoy City, Pa.).

Another Point of View

Just a word on the servant question. Why can we not review the facts calmly and come to a dispassionate conclusion? Being neither a mistress nor a servant, but seeing a good deal of both, I have, perhaps, a broader outlook on the subject than either. To an Easterner such a letter as that of "Susie T.," written evidently by a person of both breeding and education, appears almost incomprehensible as coming from a servant. The majority of the women who do household work here are illiterate, vulgar, shiftless — in many cases dishonest and even vicious. There are, of course, many exceptions, but this is the rule. They are often composed of the scum of Europe, which has drifted to our shores; often, too, they are the incompetent and worthless negresses of the South; very seldom are they native-born Americans of good parentage. In the West a new civilization makes the outlook seem brighter, but this is only a transitory glow. On the other hand, it cannot be denied that many mistresses are utterly unfit to govern even such women as these, and a few of them are a disgrace to enlightened humanity.

Now, better treatment or increased competency in individual cases is not a remedy. It did not excuse American slavery to say that very many masters were kindness itself to their chattels, any more than it excuses the horrible negro situation of today to say that some colored men are honest, moral and intelligent. In the same way, mere justice nor good sense on either side will solve the no-servant problem. Some day—let us hope not far in the future—houses will be places in which to sleep and live; not kitchens nor nurseries. There will be a governmental ownership of cooking and eating establishments and creches. Servants will then be state officers—even to the cleaners, who will go from home to home—and will have to pass a civil service examination before obtaining their positions. Naturally, this will remove the odium from servitude and solve the problem.

Meanwhile, all we can do is to be as just and fair as possible, and to hope and work for the best. To work above all, for these ideal, municipally owned centers of a few thousands each that should supplant our vice and disease breeding cities will never come while men and women still prefer to give a few pennies to a beggar, rather than devote them to a cause that will eliminate beggardom and poverty forever.

And women, above all, should give heed to the "Zeitgeist"—for with state servants will come forever an end to the day when a woman is expected to be a woman before she is a human being!

LAMIA (Philadelphia, Pa.).

Here is an entirely different view from that held by the majority of writers on this subject. I hope to receive comments upon it, and to have free and frank expressions of opinion.

One of Our Home Girls

I am 20 years old. I can keep house and do my own sewing, and I also like to work outdoors in the flower garden. I would be glad to help any one in either of these lines. I have a number of good recipes that some one might like to have. FERN (Hynes, Cal.).

Our young housekeepers should appreciate these offers.

Help Wanted in Sewing

Should you learn of any member who would like to assist me with my sewing, I would be glad to know her.

Mrs. M. V. H. (Philadelphia, Pa.).

This member has done much for Each and All, and I trust her request for help will meet with a prompt response.

"No Accomplishments"

I am like the girl in "No Accomplishments," but would dearly like to do all I can in any possible way. I can give good and tried cooking recipes and helps on housekeeping and children.

I am a young mother, aged 27. I have never done anything but housework. I can do plain sewing and some kinds of fancy work.

I should be pleased to have you enter my name on the correspondence list.

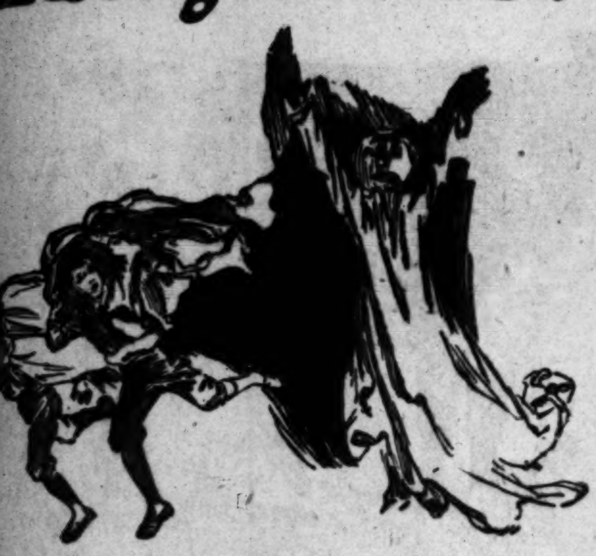
Mrs. H. W. A. (Nashua, N. H.).

To be a good home-maker is an accomplishment in itself. Other young mothers will appreciate the help this member can give.

POLLY EVANS' STORY PAGE for BOYS & GIRLS

(Copyright, 1907, by The North American Company.)

Ghost Against Ghost



HEARD A MOAN BEHIND.

PERHAPS it wasn't altogether their fault that they seemed to be always hungry, for boys of 10 and 12 who are steadily growing simply can't get enough to eat. Why, a meal is hardly over before the ordinary boy is wondering how long it will be before the next mealtime comes. At any rate, the appetites of Jack and Joe were enormous. Ellen, the cook, would have told you that.

Now, Cook Ellen really wasn't an enemy of the boys. Bless you, no! She loved them with all her heart. But, of course, no cook would allow boys in the kitchen, and many a fierce skirmish had she with Jack and Joe. Since the boys' mother had died these battles grew all the more frequent.

There was only one thing in the world Ellen was afraid of, and that was "ghosts." Of this Jack and Joe were well aware, and many a time had they frightened her by their weird tales in order to secure some dainty from the pantry.

"I say, Jack," said Joe, "Ellen's getting stingier than ever, and we've just got to give her a good scare on Halloween."

Jack was always ready to join in any mischief, so together they mapped out their plans for the morrow. This took considerable time, but at last everything was arranged, and they darted upstairs to make arrangements. Soon Ellen heard a great noise of pounding in the boys' room, but when she went to see what the matter was she found the door locked, nor would Jack and Joe permit her to enter.

After the cook had disappeared, grumbling down the stairs, Jack whispered to his brother: "This does make a whole lot of racket; we'll have to be quieter, or we'll give the whole thing away."

Next the boys' room was that of Ellen. Right through the wall which separated the two rooms Jack and Joe were boring and hammering a hole. We shall soon see what this was for.

When their work was completed the boys made their way to the kitchen, where they found Ellen in a worse temper than usual.

"Can't we have some cake, Ellen?" pleaded Jack.

"Ye, bad luck to ye, with all yure tricks and misbehavin's," retorted the angry cook.

The boys stalked away, muttering under their breath that "she'd be sorry."

Ellen was sleeping peacefully that night, when all at once she heard a low wailing cry of "Ellen! Ellen!" at her very ear.

She jumped up and looked all around her. Not a thing was to be seen. Then again came the mournful wail:

"Ellen! Ellen! You are not treating my boys right. You are starving Jack and Joe. Give them what they want, or I shall visit you every night." The cry died away with a sob.

Burying her head in the bedclothes, Ellen shook with fear. Sleep was not for her that night. Too frightened to move, she lay dreading to hear the voice of the "speerit" once more.

Meanwhile, Jack and Joe lay chuckling to themselves. Jack it was who had called through the hole into Ellen's room. He and his brother rolled on their bed in glee.

When the cook told the boys' father about the ghost next morning he looked curiously at Jack and Joe, but said nothing.

During the day Jack and Joe were pampered with goodies to their hearts' content, until when evening approached their determination to annoy the cook further had greatly weakened.

"Let's do it just this once," insisted Joe. "Being Halloween, it will do more good than any other time."

Once in bed, Ellen did not go to sleep quite so easily as on the night before. Instead, she lay awake thinking of "ghosts." If ghosts were to come at all, this was the very night for them to appear.

The door creaked ever so slightly. Raising herself on elbow, the affrighted cook saw two white-sheeted figures. Ghosts, as sure as you live!

Waving their arms, the ghosts disappeared as quickly and as silently as they had come. Ellen shrieked aloud.

Of course, the two "ghosts" were Jack and Joe. Alarmed at Ellen's shriek, they hastened down the hall. They had just reached their door, when they heard a moan behind. Glancing over their shoulders, they saw a real "ghost" advancing threateningly toward them. In dismay they rushed pell-mell into their room.

The real "ghost" laughed softly to itself; then it threw off the enshrouding sheet, revealing the father of the boys. He advanced sternly to the boys' room, where they confessed how they had frightened the cook. Then and there they received a whipping they will never forget.

Jack and Joe don't like to talk about the time they tried to frighten the cook with ghosts. But they still whisper between themselves about the tall ghost that was after them. Never have they suspected that the ghost was their father.

Halloween Plans That Failed

LAST Halloween had proved costly to the "Bloody Pirates." Led by Captain Mike Flannigan, they had "cleaned up" their end of town, causing considerable damage to property during the celebration. Nothing could be traced to any one particular member of the band, but the sheriff had reprimanded the "gang" as a whole. And their parents, forgetting the exalted station of each gallant "Pirate," had led them sternly to the woodshed.

So this year Mike Flannigan gathered his minions together for a last consultation upon their plans. Pete McGuire wasn't present, but of course that wasn't his fault. He couldn't help it if the teacher "had a spite" against him and kept him in whenever she could.

Mike stood upon a disused chicken coop in the wagon shed of Jerry Mulligan's father, where all meetings were held since the "Robbers" had driven them from the "Cave."

"Fellers," he began, with a dignity that greatly impressed his hearers, "ye know we got it good 'n hard last year from everybody. 'Twasn't 'zackly fair, neither, 'cause ten to one them 'Robbers' had something to do with the trouble what happened. But there ain't no use talkin' about what's gone and done with. Let's get down to business.

"Now, I've been thinkin' this whole thing out 'n' I've got a jim-dandy plan." Here Mike paused to note the effect upon the rest of the band. Every face expressed the liveliest curiosity, so he went on:

"'Stead of makin' a racket at this end o' town, s'pose we sneak over to the 'Robbers'' side an' cut up like all hallelujah. Then if anybody's blamed it'll be that measley crowd an' not us."

Not a "Pirate" but thought well of Mike's scheme. They could get into all sorts of mischief, and so long as they kept out of reach of the policemen no one would think of blaming them. Surely, the idea was the greatest ever! The program of the evening's celebration was then discussed thoroughly, after which the band dispersed.

Suppers disappeared in less time that evening than usual. Soon the "Pirates" had assembled in their meeting place, armed with the ammunition gathered with much labor during the past few days. Corncribs for miles around had paid their toll, as was testified by the bags of shelled corn and the piles of cobs. Of carrots, beets, walnut burrs and "tick-tacks"—all ready to attach to the doors and windowpanes—there were a-plenty.

Giving the signal, Mike stole out the back door of the wagon shed, down the alley. After him came his faithful followers. Cautiously they made their way, avoiding all the main streets, until they found themselves in the territory of their deadly rivals, the "Bloody Robbers."

Pausing in front of Aunt Abbie Harn's door, Mike whispered: "Her steps are loose, I know. We'll swap them and Fahler's cross the street. All of you go and bring Fahler's steps while I fix a 'tick-tack.'"

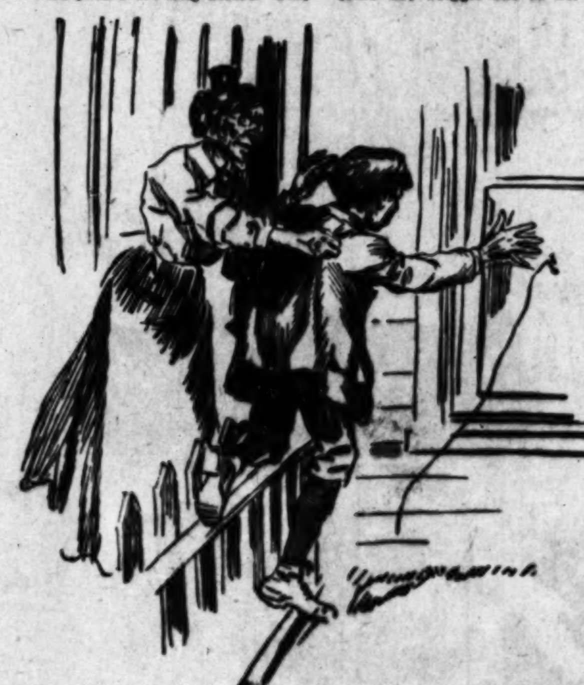
It so happened that the "Bloody Robbers" had passed not long before. They had already removed the loose wooden steps in front of Aunt Abbie's door and replaced them by the steps of Fahler's house. So silently had they worked, however, that no one was the wiser.

As the rest of the "Pirates" were carrying what were really Aunt Abbie's steps across the street from Fahler's, Mike attached the "tick-tack" to her door. But no sooner had he finished than out swooped Aunt Abbie herself, grabbed him by the coat collar, thrust him inside her door and closed it tightly.

Before Mike knew what had occurred, she had tied her bonnet under her chin, wrapped her shawl around her, and was dragging him out the front door.

"So you were taking away my porch, were you, you rascal!" she said wrathfully, as she observed the steps which the "Pirates" had dropped in their alarm.

Mike protested that he was innocent of this mischief, but his declaration only tended to make Aunt Abbie more angry than ever. With a grip so tight he could not wriggle out of her clutches, she hustled him down to the "lock-up," where he was given into the care of the "sheriff" himself. There Mike rested until the morrow.



DRAGGING HIM INSIDE THE DOOR

In the meantime, the "Pirates" were having a hard time of it, without the skilful leadership of their captain. Two of them had already been caught for especially wicked bits of mischief, and were sent to join Mike. Others were recognized by Mr. Grimes and Mr. Roberts, the policemen, and the next day they were haled before the sheriff.

But what the sheriff said to the "Bloody Pirates" next day was nothing to the punishment they received from their fathers. Naturally, the "Pirates" were accused of all the malicious mischief done over night, and they received more than their just deserts.

No, the "Pirates'" celebration could hardly have been called a success. But what hurt most was the way the "Robbers" laughed at them.

Musical Pussy.

A lady owned a cat who would jump on the keys of the piano when no one was looking and play to her heart's content.

On a certain day Pussy overturned a can of black paint. The painter angrily chased her away, and Pussy, to soothe her wounded spirits, made her way to the piano. The lady was horrified to observe the black tracks of Pussy's paws. Following them into the next room she was greeted with the sight of Pussy prancing with her dirty paws up and down on the keys of the piano. Needless to say, Pussy was forever banished.

Double Up.

It was with the greatest difficulty that little Sammy learned to say "double l," "double e" or whatever the repeated letter happened to be. So his teacher was much encouraged when she saw that he was beginning to show interest in the subject.

One afternoon she called on Sammy to recite a verse beginning, "Up! up! and see the sun."

"Ah! here's my chance," thought Sammy. Rising proudly, he burst forth with:

"Double up and see the sun!"

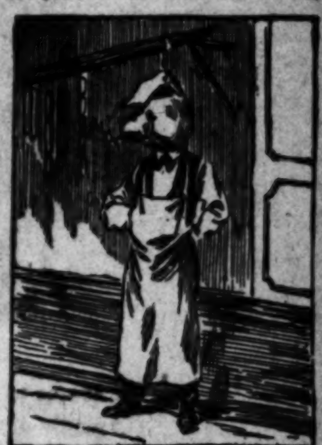
Overlooked.

Mother—Freddy, there were five jars of preserves in the pantry, and now there's only one. How do you explain that?

Freddy—Don't know, ma; guess I must have overlooked it.

Funny Picture Making

THIS is a queer picture, isn't it? It looks as though piggie were a butcher — and having a good smoke, too. As a matter of fact, poor piggie is "deader than a doornail"—and you know how dead that is. Only his head is hanging from the hook overhead. But it is funny, isn't it, that the butcher should happen to be in such a position that his head is just behind that of piggie, and his body and pipe seem to belong to piggie? That's how the artist came to draw such a comical picture. If the butcher had moved ever so little, you would have seen his head beside piggie's; but then he didn't.



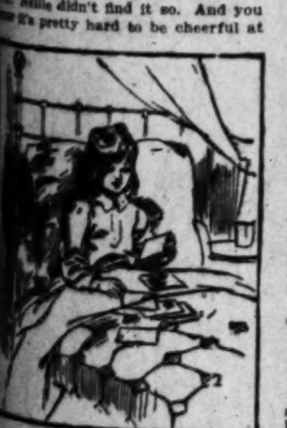
ILLUSION FORMED BY ACCIDENT

Many funny drawings and photographs are made by accidents of this kind, but I think you will agree with me that this is about the most amusing that could possibly occur.

The Postcard Party

"DEAR me!" sighed Nellie; "this will be about the worst Halloween I ever spent, I s'pose. Even the time I had the mumps wasn't as bad as this, 'cause I could do something to celebrate then, and I can't even move now."

A broken leg isn't the nicest thing in the world to have, when you want to have a jolly Halloween celebration, is it? Nellie didn't find it so. And you know it's pretty hard to be cheerful at such a time. Nellie was trying very, very hard, but you really can't blame her that she did feel a little disappointed.



"ALL THESE FOR ME!"

But then Aunt Mary came in with a whole armful of mail, and a face that would cheer one as well as a nice letter.

"All these for me!" gasped Nellie, as she looked through the great heap. "Why, here are lots and lots of the very nicest Halloween postal cards!" cried Nellie, "with witches and cats and brooms and pumpkin heads and funny faces, and, oh! everything; but there isn't a single name, and the addresses are all printed in the same handwriting."

Auntie looked wise, but she said nothing. Her niece now was as happy as she had been downcast a few minutes before. When she had been sent such nice gifts she couldn't help but be happy.

Early that evening she was surprised to hear the sound of many feet in the hall, and the sound of laughter. A moment later, and her room was stormed by an army of her friends.

"Oh, I know who sent the postal cards!" cried Nellie.

All laughed, and then some one suggested that they take turns guessing who had sent the different cards. Nellie entered into the game with the rest, and all had a jolly good time, until Aunt Mary suggested that perhaps the doctor would like Nellie to take a little rest after her excitement.

Nellie was further surprised and pleased by dainty Halloween souvenirs, one of which was left by every one of her visitors.

"You see, you couldn't give them a party, as you intended, so they thought they would give you one," explained Aunt Mary, when all had gone.

Nellie laughed delightedly. "And I think a postcard Halloween party is the nicest sort of one for a girl with a broken leg," said she.

To Learn Your Future

IF YOU wish to read the future—and who doesn't?—Halloween is the very best time to try it. Then the spirits will help you, as every one knows.

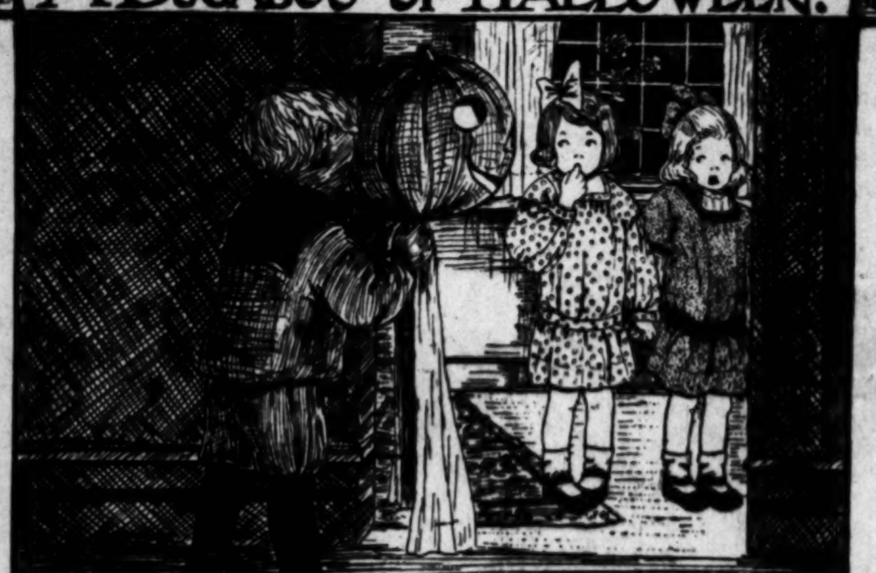
An easy way is for each person to melt some lead and pour it through a wedding ring into a dish of water. The shapes in which the lead will cool will be suggestive of future events.

Cut the letters of the alphabet from a newspaper and drop them in a basin of water. The floating letters will combine to spell the name of future husband or wife.

Tie a wedding ring to a silk thread and suspend it within a goblet. While the ring is swaying slightly repeat slowly the alphabet. Whenever the ring strikes the side of the goblet, begin the alphabet again, and in this way spell out the name of your life partner.

String a raisin in the middle of a thread a yard long, and let two persons take each an end of the string in his mouth. Whoever, by chewing the string, reaches the raisin first will be the first to be wedded.

A Bugaboo of Halloween.



I'm not afraid of pumpkins if
I see them in the light—
But my! dont they look scary when They're all lit up at night!

Who would have s'posed when Teddy said,
"Here's someone come to call,"
We would have found that awful face
A-grinning in the hall!

The Extra One.

Bad Little Boy—How much are your apples, please?

Apple Woman—Ten cents a dozen.

Bad Little Boy—Won't you give me thirteen.

Apple Woman—Since you're such a nice boy I believe I will.

Bad Little Boy—Then I'll take the extra apple now and pay for the dozen tomorrow.

Halloween.

"THERE is a world in which we dwell,
And yet a world invisible!
And do not think that naught can be,
Save only what with eyes you see;
I tell you, that, this very hour,
Had but your sight a spirit's power,
Ye would be looking, eye to eye,
At a terrific company!"

Weren't Very Thirsty.

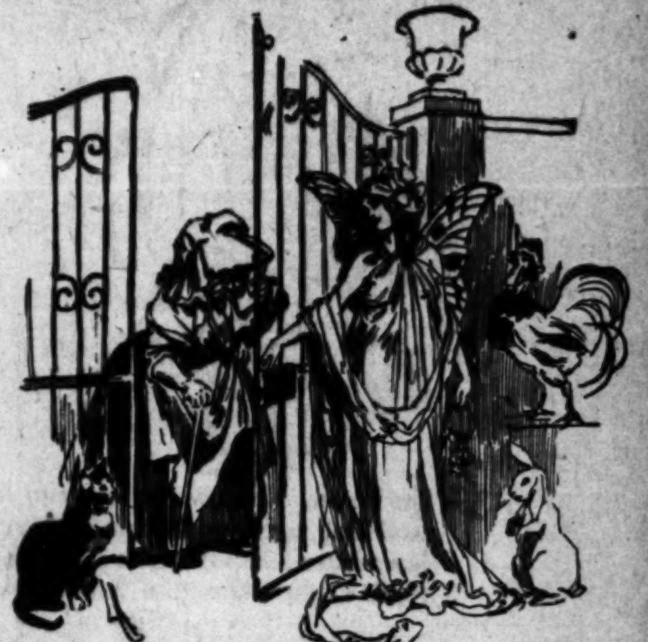
Little Betty had been given the care of the fishes in the aquarium.

Some weeks later her mother called to her in consternation:

"Why, Betty! every one of your fish is dead. Haven't you given them any fresh water?"

"No, mamma; I saw they hadn't drunk the water I gave them last month yet."

Cat, Cock and Rabbit



GREETED BY A FAIRY PORTRESS

WHEN THURLO was a little boy, before his head rose much higher than the top of the rough deal table in the kitchen, he romped all day long round the little cottage and in the woods nearby. He never went far, it is true, for 'way in the deep forest lurked hungry wolves, and bears and what not. But then he did not wish to go far, because he had everything to play with by the side of his home. Yes, those were happy days, when Thurlo was a little boy, and he and his mother lived together on the edge of the great forest.

But one can't always remain little, you know, and before his mother could hardly realize it the wee boy had grown into a big, strapping youth. And, of course, long before this he had explored further into the forest and had longed to go into the outside world. Thurlo was a good son, however, and rather than leave his mother he curbed his impatience and hid these thoughts from her.

Still, mothers are wise, and she knew what was passing through her boy's mind. So, after many a sigh, she called Thurlo to her one day, and said to him:

"My boy, I know you are anxious to go out into the world to seek your fortune. You have been a good son to me, but I do not wish to keep you here always. Suppose you journey for a fortnight and return to me at the end of that time. Perhaps you may then be able to decide what you wish to do for a living."

Thurlo protested, saying that it was not right for him to leave her, but she insisted, and at last he set forth.

A long distance he traveled through the forest. Just as he imagined he would reach its border he found that he had lost his way. With but little food left, he pushed forward desperately. To his relief, as twilight was falling, he came in sight of a great gleaming wall.

Hurrying his steps, he finally gained the outside of the walls. On either side of him they stretched, seemingly without a break. Apparently there was nothing for him to do but to climb over. This feat he accomplished with great difficulty.

When he gained the top, his head whirled at the scene which lay before him. For, lo! he had entered Fairyland. So overcome was he by surprise that he tumbled forward and dropped to the ground. Immediately there rose by his side an angry sprite. A wand was waved above Thurlo's head, and in place of the handsome youth there stood an animal.

A fortnight passed, and still Thurlo did not return to the little cottage. His mother determined to go out in search of him. Fortunately, she took much the same road that Thurlo had traveled, so that she, too, came in sight of the walls of Fairyland. She found a path that led directly to the gate.

Rapping at a little lodge by the gate, she was greeted by a fairy portress. At once she poured forth the tale of her errand. Thereupon the fairy called in her musical voice, and a cat, a cock and a rabbit ran to her.

"My good woman," said she, "your son climbed over our walls. For so trespassing he has been changed into an animal. Indeed, he is either this cat, that cock or the rabbit yonder. You may taken all of them home. When there, you must say, 'Change again!' and the proper animal will once more take the shape of your son."

Joyfully the poor woman gathered the three animals under her arm and walked homeward as swiftly as she could.

But hardly had she covered a mile before the rabbit escaped from her and sped into the depths of the forest. She went on her way weeping. What if the rabbit should be her son!

There was still a great distance to go, when a robber stopped her and demanded the cock. In tears she begged him not to take the fowl from her, but the robber roughly snatched it and killed it with a twist of the neck.

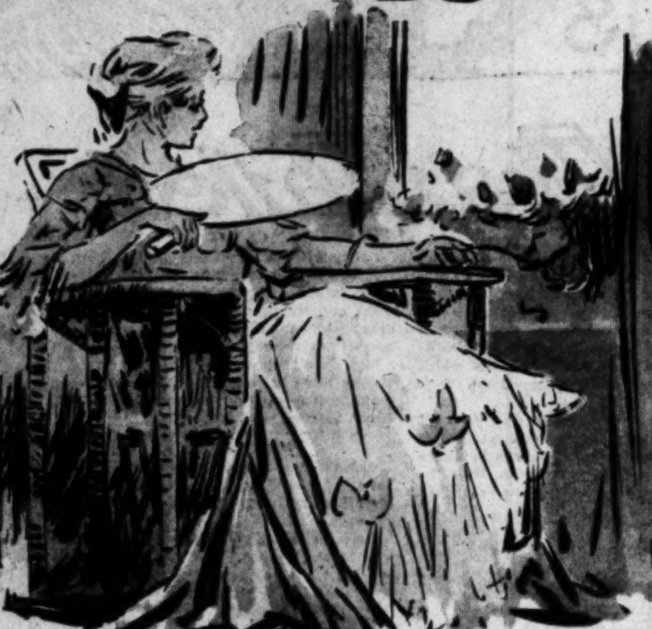
Almost beside herself, she hastened to the cottage, reaching it without further incident.

As soon as she had entered the house she stood the cat before her, and cried, "Change again!" Instantly, the cat disappeared and her own Thurlo threw himself into his mother's arms.

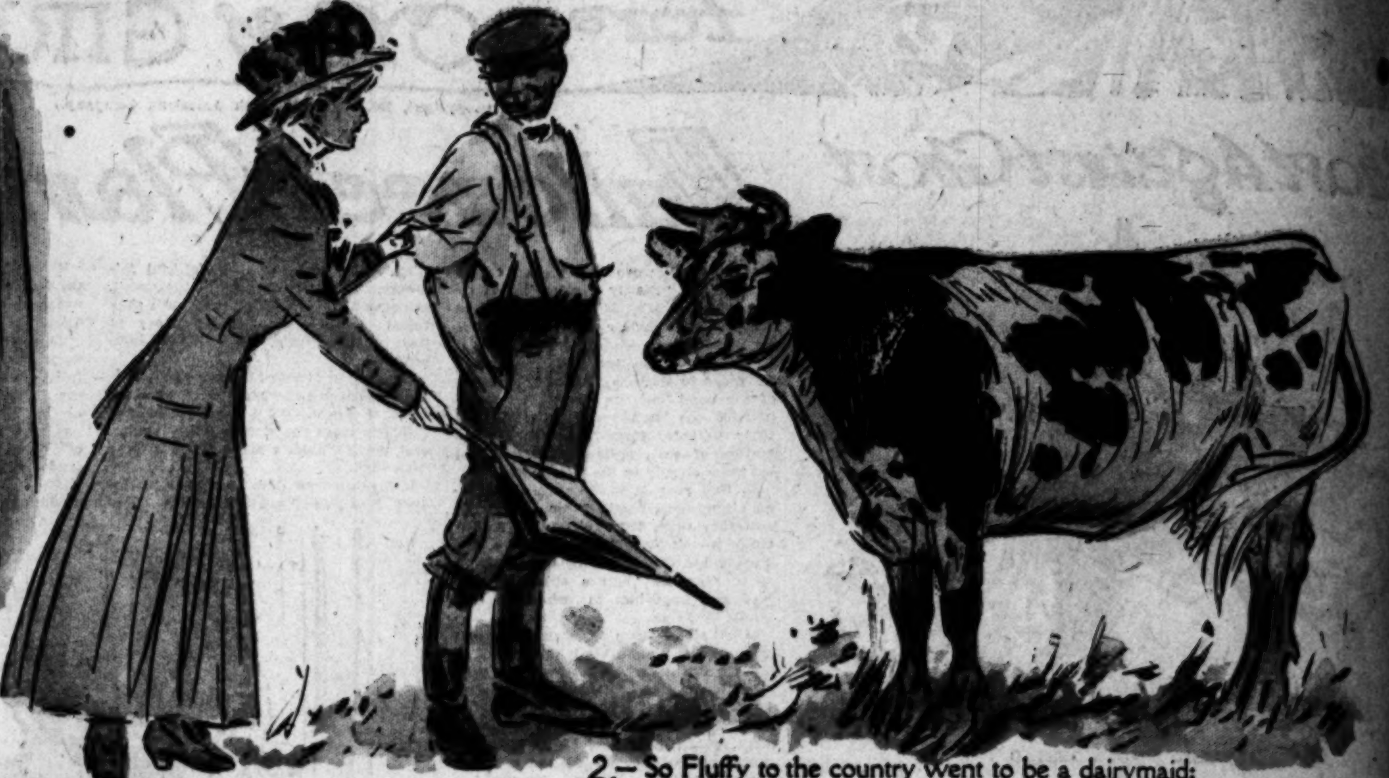
Thurlo lived with his mother after that until her death — several years later. Then once more he journeyed forth, but you may be sure that this time he did not go toward Fairyland.

FLUFFY RUFFLES

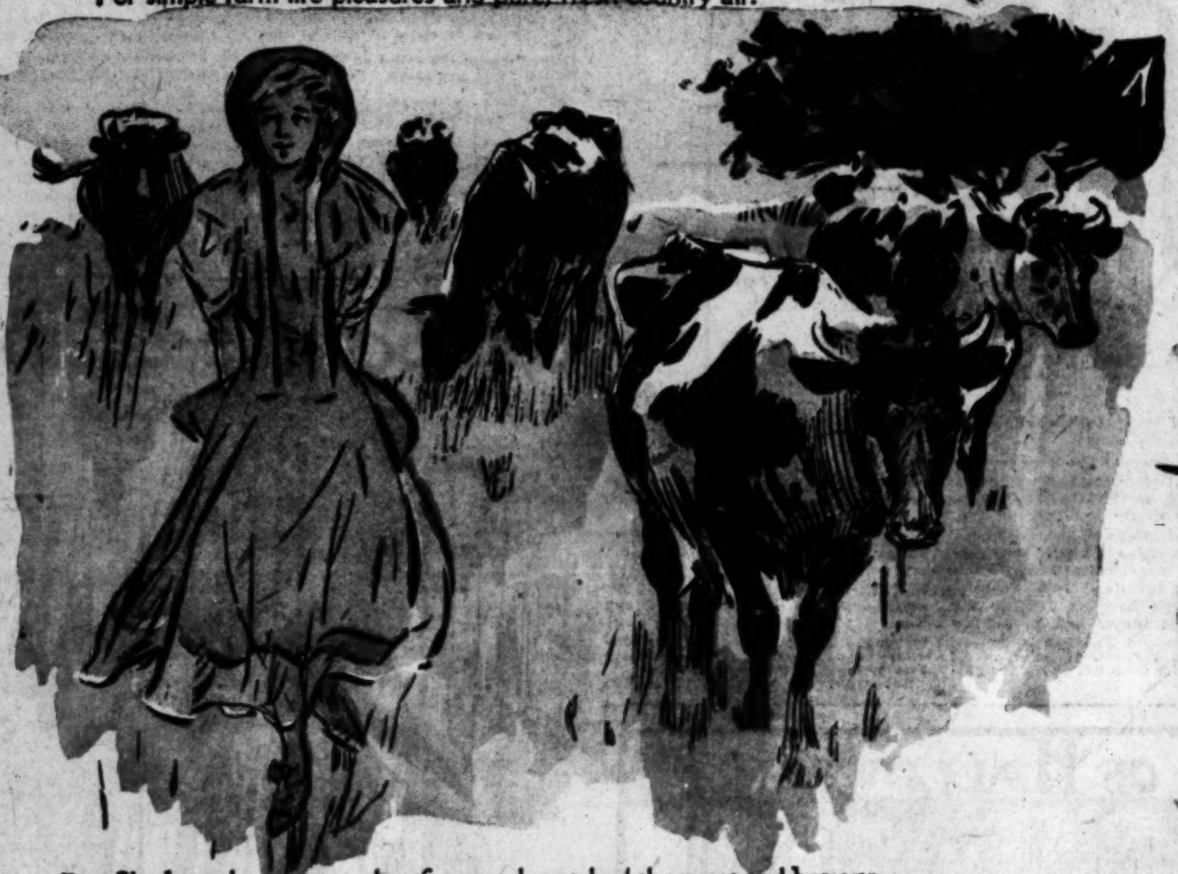
Drawings by WALLACE MORGAN



1.— "It seems to me," said Fluffy, "I'd like a country life.
I'd gladly get away from all the city's din and strife.
I pine for rolling fields of grain, for meadows green and fair,
For simple farm life pleasures and pure, fresh country air."



2.— So Fluffy to the country went to be a dairymaid;
And though, like all true women, of cows she was afraid,
She learned to stand quite near the bars and see the creatures lie
In calm content and now and then whisk off a bothering fly.



3.— She bravely overcame her fears and watched them eat and browse,
And finally achieved the feat of "bringing home the cows!"
She strolled across the fields at eve; the lowing herd and she Made a delightful picture "winding slowly o'er the lea."

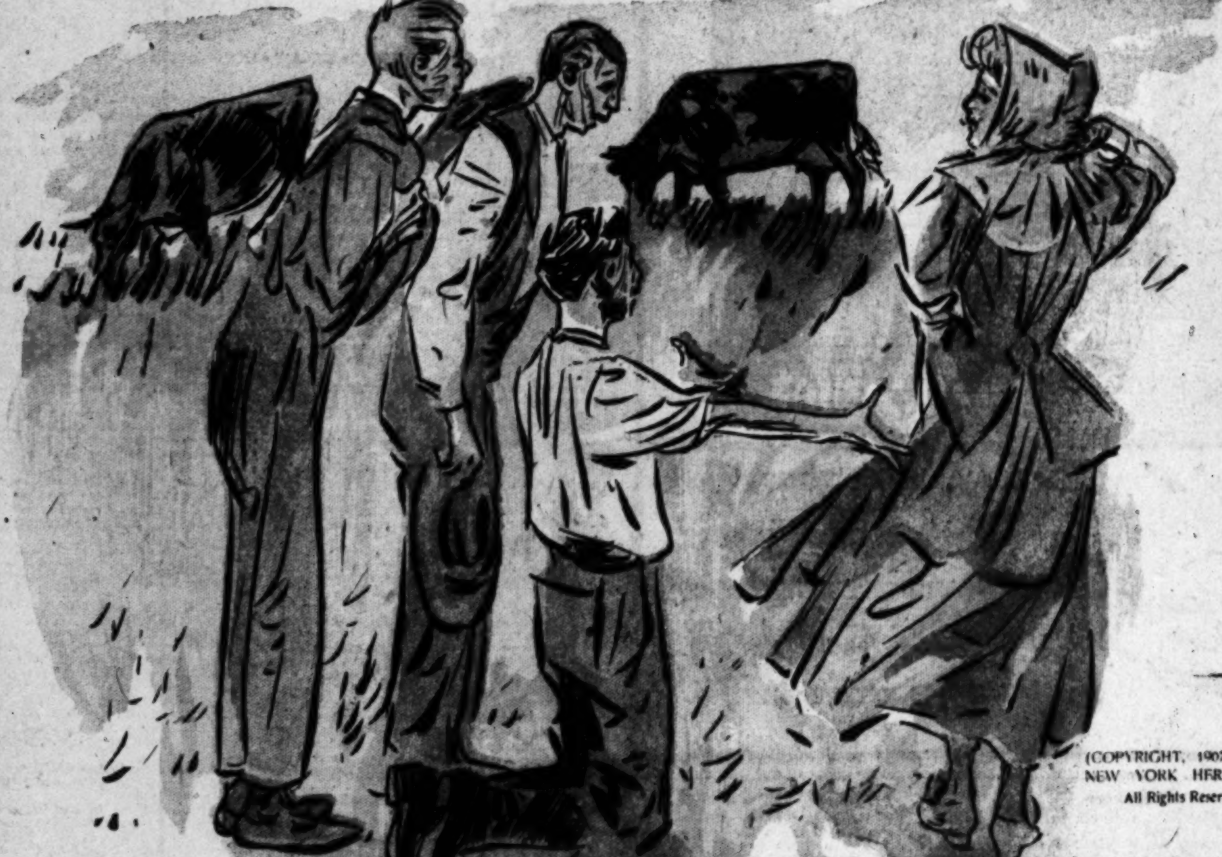
4.— Meekly the cattle followed, but not they alone, alas!
Other submissive beings followed Fluffy o'er the grass;
And as she rambled homeward at the closing of the day
Full many a doting rustic chanced to go the selfsame way!



5.— Nor was this all! The neighboring youths, with Chesterfieldian bows,
Would beg that they might help her to usher home the cows;
And anxiously for this same boon besought her on their knees,
Which is absurd for people winding slowly o'er the leas!

6.— In the dairy she took refuge, she skimmed the milk from cream;
But still those young men flocked about. 'Twas like a horrid dream.
They begged for draughts of buttermilk, for cream they urged their plea,
Till Fluffy said, "A dairymaid's is not the life for me!"

Some Matters of Special Interest to the Women.

DOMESTIC SCIENCE.

BY EMMA PADDOCK TELFORD.
[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

I know it is the fashion nowadays with many to look for a woman's excellencies and influence away from her home, but I know, too, that almost as many eager and hopeful hearts still cherish the belief that her virtues will range highest and live longest within those sacred walls. . . . Be this how it may, the heart of a man with whom affection is not a name, and love a mere passion of the hour, yearns toward the quiet of a home as toward the goal of his earthly joy and hope. And as you fasten there your thought, an indulgent yet dreamy fancy paints the loved image that is to adorn it and to make it sacred. . . . She is not unmindful of those old-fashioned virtues of cleanliness and of order, which gives an air of quiet and which secures content. Your wants are all anticipated; the fire is burning brightly, the clean hearth flashes under the joyous blaze; the old elbow chair is in its place. . . . And in sickness—sickness that you almost covet for the sympathy it brings—that hand of hers resting on your fevered forehead, or those fingers playing with the scattered locks, are more full of kindness than the loudest vaunt of friends; and when your failing strength will permit no more, you grasp that cherished hand with a fullness of joy, of thankfulness and of love which your tears only can tell.—[Mitchell's "Dream Life."

This is the true nature of home; it is the place of peace; the shelter not only from all injury, but from all terror, doubt and division. . . . And wherever a true wife comes, this home is always round her. The stars only may be over her head; the glowworm in the night-cold grass may be the only fire at her foot, but home is yet wherever she is.—[Ruskin.

While some women take more naturally to nursing than others, being, like the poet, "born" with facility in that direction, not "made," it is an art that every woman should do her best to acquire. Sickness and accidents are apt to enter any home, no matter how carefully guarded, and that without warning.

Fortunate is the woman who at such time of trial may obtain at once the services of a skilled and conscientious nurse, but for one who can compass this there are hundreds to whom it is an impossibility, and their own skill and knowledge may be all that intervenes between some loved one and death. "Emergency" lectures, and courses in dietetics and home nursing are doing much to prepare the younger generation for their responsibilities in caring for the health of the family; but there is much still to be learned. Tomes have been compiled and inserted in cook books and household manuals, under the caption, "The Family Doctor," but the "Family Nurse" (and she is more invaluable than the doctor,) has not been so well represented. How many of us know how to make a plaster that will draw, but not blister; a croup tent that will enable us to relieve the labored breathings of the baby when croup comes on in the night and a doctor twenty miles away; to extract a fishhook from the flesh, relieve a hemorrhage, internal or external, relieve a child when it pokes a shoe button up its nose, or swallows a pin, how to give a hot pack or wash the long hair of a patient confined to the bed? Yet we may be called upon at any moment to perform such services personally, or at least direct some one with more strength, but less intelligence. In "Practical Nursing," a new book just issued by C. P. Putnam's Sons, the proper care of the sick is succinctly explained. The book is the joint work of Miss Maxwell, superintendent for many years of the Presbyterian Hospital School of Nursing, New York, and Miss Pope, instructor in the same institution. Among the practical suggestions that every housewife will do well to ponder, then "make a note on't," or paste in her own family scrap book, are the following:

CARE OF BEDS AND BLANKETS.

Blankets are best for the sick-bed when made two parts cotton to one of wool. A larger proportion of wool will not stand frequent washings, while a smaller proportion will not give sufficient warmth nor wear well. Care should be taken to prevent the unnecessary soiling of blankets, as washing greatly deteriorates them. Never allow the ends of a blanket to drag on the floor, and see that while it is over the patient, the top is well protected by the sheet and spread. (It is a good plan to protect all blankets by basting a fold of cheesecloth three or four inches deep on either side over the top of the blanket.) Use an old blanket when one is needed next the patient and there is likelihood of its becoming soiled in any way. Blankets are best disinfected by being exposed to the action of formaldehyde fumes. Dry cleansing is recommended when not too expensive, as the blankets remain normal size. Spreads should always be made of some lightweight material, such as dimity. It is often imperative to protect the mattress with a rubber. The black rubber blankets used by the United States Army are excellent for this purpose. White double-faced rubber is nice for home use, but frequent disinfection soon discolors it. When impossible to obtain rubber, oilcloth, such as kitchen table covers are made of, may be used; or in an emergency, several thicknesses of newspapers, brown paper or Japanese paper tacked together.

TO DISINFECT A MATTRESS.

The mattress must be disinfected, after the recovery or death of a patient. If the patient has had a contagious or infectious disease or a septic wound, it must be either baked or exposed to formaldehyde fumes. Under other circumstances it is disinfected by whisking it well with a whisk broom, wet in 2 per cent. formaline solution" or a one-twentieth carbolic solution. To disinfect in the ordinary manner, bring the disinfectant to the bed in an agate basin, dip the whisk into it frequently, and whisk vigorously, paying particular attention to all seams and tuftings. The same solution made half strength by the addition of water, is used to disinfect the bedstead. As disinfecting solutions are very expensive, only the amount required should be prepared.

THE PILLOWS.

Feather and horse hair are the best fillings for sick-bed pillows. When there is profuse perspiration or other conditions exist likely to cause the wetting or soiling of the pillow, a rubber pillow case should be put under the muslin one.

TO GET A PATIENT UP.

Place a chair at right angles with the bed, make it comfortable by placing one pillow in the seat and another at the back, the open end of the pillow case downward. Put a blanket cornerwise over the pillow, lift the patient, placing your arm over his shoulder if he is sitting up in bed, and taking a firm hold under the opposite axilla, have him clasp his hands on your near shoulder and place your free arm under his knees. This method, though not always the most convenient, throws the strain on the lifter's shoulders, which can stand it better than the back. Seat in the chair, wrap the blanket about him, leaving it rather loose around the feet and legs and pin with a large safety pin. Count the pulse as soon as he is up, and again shortly afterwards. After an illness of any severity, a patient should seldom remain up longer than twenty or thirty minutes the first day, and even a shorter time if the pulse changes.

TO SIT A PATIENT UP IN BED.

To sit a patient up in bed, a back rest is very helpful, since it saves the use of a large number of pillows. Without one, it requires at least six pillows to make a patient truly comfortable. Dispose them in such a manner that the head will not be thrown forward on the chest and that the small of the back will be supported. If the patient is inclined to slip down in bed, either put a small soft pillow under him, or fix a board or pillow at his feet. For the former a piece of board six inches wide and twenty-four inches long, with two holes in each end, may be used. Through these holes run pieces of rope long enough to tie to the head of the bed when the board is at the patient's feet. Pad the board, or if necessary place a pillow against it. A good substitute for the board is a pillow doubled over a bandage placed at the patient's feet. This should be tied first to the side of the bed on a line with the pillow, and then to the head of the bed. Patients who are obliged to sit up in bed continually are often more comfortable if they have something on which to lean forward. To such, give a bed-tray with a pillow on it, a board with a block of wood nailed to either end or even raised on a bundle of magazines tied firmly together. In such cases it is generally necessary to prop the patient up well in bed to prevent slipping down. In cases of rheumatism, neuritis, etc., the pain is sometimes lessened if the affected parts are fixed by means of splints or sand bags. When there is inflammation in an extremity, relief is afforded by elevating the affected part. An extremity thus elevated must be supported its entire length and the elevation be gradual. If the weight of the bedclothing causes discomfort to any part of the body, a bed cradle can be improvised by using half barrel hoops tied at each side to a stick, or by placing a long pasteboard box on a thin board or a bundle of magazines.

TO MAKE A CROUP TENT.

To make a croup tent, so-called because of its frequent use in croup when steam inhalations are necessary, stretch two sheets right sides together. If the steam is to be introduced at the back of the bed, pin them down the center, putting the pins quite near each other, and fold each sheet over upon itself in order to form a seam. If the steam is to be introduced at the side, put the sheets wrong sides together and do not pin. Lacking hoops or frames such as are used in hospitals, tie canes, sticks or umbrellas four or five feet in length to each corner of the bed, then tie a bandage from rod to rod, stretching tightly, and drape the sheets over the bandage. To drape the sheets, wind a bandage around the top of the frame secure in place, and put the double sheet over it, allowing it to hang about a foot in front and at least to the line of the mattress in the back. Fold the excess width from the back around the sides and pin to the bandage. Then fold up the sides of the front and pin them in place. If the steam is introduced at the back, put the spout of the kettle through an aperture made by removing a pin or two in the seam. The spout of the kettle must be at least two feet above the patient. In an emergency, an umbrella can be tied to the head of the bed and a sheet thrown over it in such a manner that the sides and back of the bed will be walled in and the steam can be made to enter at the back.

FOR BONE IN THE THROAT.

An obstruction in the throat, trachea or oesophagus may sometimes be removed by striking the patient forcilby on the back between the shoulders. Sometimes it is expedient to invert him while doing so. A child can be held up by the legs, but an adult should be placed across a bed or chair with his head and chest hanging well over the edge. If the object is in the oesophagus it can be often washed down with a drink of water or forced down by eating bread or other solid substance. To prevent excoriation of the alimentary canal after the swallowing of any sharp substance have the patient eat plentifully of bread, potatoes or mush, but do not give a purgative.

TO EXTRACT A FISH HOOK.

Push it sufficiently through to break off the head, then draw back

GLUTEN BREAD.

For a diabetic, who must eliminate from his "staff of life" all sugar and starch, bread made in this way is to be commended: Dissolve a third of a compressed yeast cake in two tablespoonfuls of luke-warm water, with a half teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of butter and enough gluten flour to make a stiff batter. When well mixed, beat in the white of one egg and let rise until light. This can be set at night this time of the year; but in warm weather it is safer to set in the morning and bake the same day. When light, add just enough more gluten flour to enable you to knead the loaves, as they should be as soft as possible to be handled. Put into greased pans, let rise until light and bake in a moderate oven.

GLUTEN FLOUR POPOVERS.

Beat one egg without separating until light. Add a cupful of milk, a pinch of salt, one cupful gluten flour and one teaspoonful of baking powder. Pour into hot, well-buttered gem pans and bake in a quick oven. If milk is prohibited on account of the sugar it contains, use water in its place, adding a teaspoonful of soft butter.

BROWN BREAD FOR DYSPEPTICS.

Stir together three cupfuls of whole wheat flour, an even teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of soda slightly rounded, and two scant teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar. Add about a cup and a half of cold water and stir with a spoon, beating until smooth. Turn into a buttered pan, then steam from a half to three-quarters of an hour. Set in a moderate oven and bake slowly for an hour, or even longer. The next day, slice and dry like zweiback in a slow oven. It must be closely watched, but left in the open until every particle of moisture is gone. Cool, then pack in a tight box by itself, closely covered. If directions are carefully followed, this twice-baked break will keep sweet and fresh for a long time; but if imperfectly dried it will seem tough and stale at once, and one such slice will spoil the whole

WHOLE WHEAT BREAD.

For growing children, especially, the whole or entire wheat bread is most useful in keeping the processes of digestion in order. It is the gluten, which lies next the bran, contains the nitrates that feed muscular tissues and the mineral products that nourish the nervous system.

To make the bread the easiest way, scald one cupful milk, add a tablespoonful each butter and salt, a tablespoonful sugar, and a cup water. When lukewarm add a half compressed yeast cake dissolved in a little lukewarm water, and enough whole wheat flour, to make a thin batter. Do this in the morning. Beat the batter until smooth and let it rise until very light. Add whole wheat flour little by little, beating all the time, until as much has been added as you can beat or stir in. It should be too soft to knead. If the flour is not beaten in gradually and thoroughly the bread will be coarse grained. Turn into greased tins, let rise again until light, then bake in a moderate oven for at least an hour.

WHOLE WHEAT AND RYE MUFFINS.

Sift together one cupful whole wheat flour, one cupful rye meal, a quarter cup sugar, four level teaspoonfuls baking powder and a half teaspoonful salt. Beat one egg light, without separating, add one cupful milk and stir into the dry ingredients. Lastly add three tablespoonfuls melted butter, pour in hot, well greased gem pans, and bake in a hot oven about twenty-five minutes.

Her Independence.

JOSEPHINE FINDS IT NOT WHAT SHE ANTICIPATED.

BY ELIZABETH HARMAN.

There was a woman once, and she loved a man. The first part of the statement makes the second superfluous. The man was Stilson Adams, captain of the Fourteenth United States Cavalry, and the woman was Josephine, his wife. And the man loved his wife, but she would not believe it. She thought that love could only exist between people who were financially independent of each other, and financially she was absolutely dependent on Capt. Adams.

"Of course you say you love me, Stilson," she said one morning after a heated discussion, "but how can you prove it? If I were rich, it would be different—then you could leave me if you wanted to—but I haven't even a cent! I know that you are lovely to me, but that doesn't mean anything—except that you pity me. You give me everything you have, because you have such a high sense of honor and of duty and of niceness—for you are nice, Stilson! I wish you were not—it makes such a slave of me! And what good does the devotion of a penniless creature like me do? You probably think that I 'devote' to get more out of you. And as for your sense of duty, I wish you hadn't any! I wish that you were only good to me because you loved me—that I knew that, if you didn't love me, you would pound me black and blue every day; but if you had married the Old Scratch's grandmother, you would be just as sweet to her as you are to me, and since I understand your noble character, how can I tell whether you love me or not? And I don't believe that you do! And I don't believe that you believe that I love you! I am going away, Stilson! Of course you know that I am not, for I have nothing to go on; but I am going to live all by myself in the little dressing-room, and you must live in one room, the room that has been ours heretofore. I will not just live with you because I am poor and have to—I love you too much! I will stay alone until I am a self-supporting individual—not a supported 'good and chattel.' Are you thinking 'bad and chattel?' Don't, Stilson! I am not bad. And don't try to dissuade me!"

And thereupon Mrs. Adams went up to the little dressing-room, and sat down at her desk, and wrote, and wrote, and wrote. Writing was not a new thing with her. For several years she had been trying, spasmodically, to win her way in literature with a story or a poem; but "pipe she high or pipe she low," she could not strike the keynote at whose sound the walls around the sacred precincts of editors fall down, opening the way for the piper.

"But this will be accepted, I am sure," she said to herself as she folded up that particular story, and put it, with its stamp accompaniment, into an envelope and started it off.

She wrote all that week, and then her story came back. She stamped her foot, tore the printed slip of thanks and regrets into infinitesimal fragments, and—said things.

"Poor old lady!" said Capt. Adams tenderly. And she wept on his breast.

Then she went upstairs and wrote another story—and in due time it also came back.

Then Mrs. Adams became desperate and enraged, and broke her pen holder and threw her ink bottle out of the window, where it knocked the colonel's cap off, and made spatter work on his new blouse, and caused a stiff and indignant letter of inquiry to be written to Capt. Adams, to which Capt. Adams replied that he had nothing to say in explanation; and as soon as he had gone to the troop, Mrs. Adams hied herself to the colonel's office and explained, and the colonel forgave her freely and with a charming courtesy, but with a suspicion of amusement in his eye that made Mrs. Adams feel that she hated him.

"I will be independent!" she said aloud when she was home again in the dressing-room, and she emphasized her words by pounding on the dressing table with her brush, and Capt. Adams in the next room heard her, and knew that she was in trouble; so he went to the locked door and said:

"What's the matter, dear?"

"I'm so miserable!" wailed Mrs. Adams. "Go into the hall—I want to cry."

So Capt. Adams went into the hall, and on that neutral ground Mrs. Adams met him and wept in his arms; and that afternoon Capt. Adams went to the post exchange and bought her a new ink bottle, and Mrs. Adams began a novel.

"I think I can finish it in six weeks, dear, for I shall work day and night," she said to her husband. "Maybe it will be successful," and she looked at him with very wistful eyes, that failed in their effort to look brave.

"But, dear, you do me such an injustice!" said Capt. Adams. "I love you! and it is not being dependent to take what I give you."

"Then why do you use the word 'give'?" said Mrs. Adams superciliously.

"Oh, if you are going to pick me up on every comma! But you know what I mean. You know that I love you, Josie, and you treat me like a dog."

"I don't. I only won't be treated like a bound slave. I must be independent. All the unhappiness of marriage comes from the vile, dependent position of women. They have nothing except what their husbands give—give, forsooth! I hate your old money! I wouldn't touch a cent of it if I didn't have to, and if I respected myself as I should, I wouldn't ever speak to you until I could support myself! Don't look that way! I can see that you are thinking it would be a long time for me to keep quiet. And I can see that I grieve you and hurt your feelings all the time, Stilson, but I can't help it. This isn't just a crank—it is a principle!"

The novel was finished and sent off, and one morning ten days later, while Capt. and Mrs. Adams were at breakfast, the maid brought in the mail.

Mrs. Adams's eye instantly caught the import of the large envelope with many stamps. She took it mechanically and told the maid that she could go. Then she leaned her head on her hands, and did not struggle against the torrent of misery that broke over her.

"Dear, dear old lady!" said Capt. Adams, putting his arm around her.

She suffered herself to be drawn against him and be kissed.

"Come back to me, Josie," he whispered. "I can't bear to see you working! It is both my duty and my pleasure to work for you."

For a moment she wavered. Then she drew away from him.

"No, Stilson," she said mournfully, "I must not be so weak," and she forced herself to take another letter that had come for her.

"Stilson!" she exclaimed, excitedly.

"What?" said Capt. Adams.

"Aunt Maria has died and left me all of her money! I am independent at last!"

Her face fairly glowed with happiness. But there was no answering glow in his.

"I congratulate you," he said.

"Stilson! You're not glad at all! You don't realize it!" she cried. "We are rich."

"No, dear; you are," said Capt. Adams.

"Oh, how can you treat me so?" cried Mrs. Adams.

"How could I do otherwise, dear? I never knew the meaning of 'mine' and 'thine' until you taught it to me! Everything that I had has always been 'ours' with me—and always will be; but you look on things differently."

"What do you mean?" demanded Mrs. Adams.

"I mean that you are now independent of me, as you have long wanted to be, and that your fortune is yours alone;" and with the only cold kiss he had ever given her, Capt. Adams left the house.

Days passed. Capt. Adams said nothing to his wife about her leaving the little room. He looked depressed and he felt so.

One morning when he came home from the troop he met the carpenter at the gate, and when he went upstairs he found Mrs. Adams standing in the middle of the big room over the drawing-room that had been theirs.

"Stilson," she said, holding out her hands to him, "I—I had the carpenter take down this wretched door into the dressing-room, and I've hung the Bagdad curtain there—and I've changed this room into ours again—and, Stilson, Stilson, take me back! I hate being independent!"

Mother Made the Mark.

HOW A BABY WAS IDENTIFIED BY HIS MOTHER.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

Babies born in hospitals ought to be carefully watched, and unerringly marked for identification..

As soon as a baby is born in an average city hospital, one of the trained nurses takes the naked child from its mother, from the physician, and from the room. She proceeds to the room set apart for the children thus born, and places the baby in a crib which is marked with the name of the mother.

Very recently two girl friends who had become wives within a year, were residing in adjoining flats, in a large apartment house in Washington city; both of them expecting to achieve maternity about the same time; and both of them were intending to go to the same hospital. An elderly lady friend warned them that their babies might get mixed in the baby ward; and they spent many anxious hours discussing the possibility and probability of such a catastrophe.

Their husbands were drawn into the controversy, and one of them urged that they send their wives to different hospitals, but to this the elderly friend objected, saying:

"They might get mixed with the babies of total strangers. It would be better for you ladies to feel that, even if the babies might be exchanged, each one would be nursing the well-bred child of a friend."

There was very little encouragement in this, as their sole object was to prevent any possible mixing of the babies, and the elderly friend comforted them by saying:

"You'd better stick together; for suppose something should happen like the calamity that befell Mrs. Wellington, of Boston. She had a baby here in one of the hospitals, and when she went to her hotel and her husband came on here to meet her, they unwrapped the baby, and found it to be a very delicate, deathly white, consumptive-looking, and mulatto weak-eked girl baby."

"How could such a thing happen in a first-class hospital?" they both exclaimed in unison.

"All nurses look alike," was the reply. "In their uniforms, they are all similar in appearance. Some of them are not as angelic as they look. Some of them also are very careless. In this case of Mrs. Wellington it proved to be a case of carelessness. Her baby, a beautiful brawny boy, was found in the colored ward. The nurse who made the substitution made the excuse that she had been on duty continuously for three days and nights. It often happens that the nurse girls are thus driven almost to insanity by the tyranny of their female superintendents."

Very few babies ten days old have such close resemblances to their parents as to warrant satisfactory identification; but in the case of the Wellington baby the eyes were exact reproductions of the eyes of the father. Even the microscope showed no difference whatever. But, in the case of the average baby, not one out of ten thousand could be unequivocally identified. Consequently the young mothers-to-be and their husbands were agitated to an intensely exciting degree. In the same house with them was the mother of a trained nurse, and when that young lady visited her mother, she was called into consultation; and she agreed that, if the ladies came to her hospital, and the prospective fathers could induce the superintendent to place her in charge of both cases, and give her an assistant of her own selecting, she would guarantee that there should be no mixing of the babies; and this was done.

Finally, in September of this year, they went to the hospital together, and were assigned to adjoining rooms. The senior nurse selected as her assistant, a newly arrived junior nurse, who was a personal friend. When it became apparent that both of the babies were likely to arrive on the same night, the senior nurse telephoned to the apartment house for the prospective fathers, and they came as fast as automobiles would bring them. They sat together in a little reception room, murmuring to each other their apprehensions, until shortly after midnight, when the senior nurse appeared with a well swaddled baby, saying:

"This is for Dr. Gelatt. I deliver your property to you, and hold you responsible for it," and so saying she placed the bundle in the arms of the tremblingly happy young pharmacist. She led him to a bedroom and told him to lie there, with his baby in his arms; and he did so.

Within fifteen minutes, the nurse appeared again, with another bundle of swaddled babyhood, and said: "This is for Mr. Hanford. I deliver your property to you, and hold you responsible for it," and so saying, she led him to a room on the opposite side of the hall, and left him with his baby in his arms.

During the night the happy husbands got together, compared babies and compared notes of their weight and appearance, and finally dropped off to sleep together on the same bed; their babies between them. Thus they were found, and the babies lifted from their perilous position by one of the passing nurses. Then the children were hopelessly mixed, after all, for, with all of their apprehensions, the young mothers had made their baby clothing identical.

The fathers were disconsolate; and looked at each other with glares of intense hatred. They were about to fly at each other's throats, when the senior nurse came in, saying very sweetly:

"Knowing by experience how careless all men are, I did not trust you gentlemen altogether with your own property. With indelible ink I wrote the word 'Hanford' on one little diaper; and thus I have kept my faith, in preventing the hopeless mixing of the babies."

The children were kept in the same rooms with their mothers after that first night, and are now at their respective homes, without any cloud on their titles to their names or fortunes.

Judge Crutchfield lives in the same apartment-house, and when he heard this story, he told an assembled coterie of ladies in the big reception-room, the following story:

"There lived in New York an aggressive, strenuous, aspiring young lawyer, who had political aspirations. One morning, in his own home, he called his wife who found him gasping for breath. He managed to tell her that he was stricken with heart failure, and, as soon as she had sent for a physician, he gasped to her: 'By mother's will, baby will have quarter million, if a boy. Do not lose sight of baby when born. Do not lose consciousness. Be sure of baby's identification.'

"He lived for three days, the greater part of the time in a comatose condition. Several times he managed to repeat his warning, so that she comprehended and assured him of her understanding of the situation; and then he died.

"Four or five months later her baby was born. It was born in her own home. The afternoon before baby's birth her sister-in-law came visiting, bringing with her a baby ten days old. Remembering the words which her dying husband had struggled to repeat to her, the young wife retained consciousness. She had with her a faithful colored woman, from her old Virginia home. There was a trained nurse who started out with the baby, but the mother demanded it, and the colored woman laid it beside the young mother. There was no cradle nor crib provided, and so the young mother said that a bureau drawer must be used. While the things were being taken out of the drawer, and a little bed was being made in it, the young mother grasped her little boy and squeezed his breast until the new-born screamed with pain. As the baby was taken from her and placed in the bureau drawer, she lost consciousness.

"More than a week elapsed, and the young mother was growing strong and cheerful, when, one morning she told her colored servant to call in the next door neighbor. This was done, and to her neighbor she confided the need of having her late husband's law partner call on her at once, bringing with him two other lawyers and a stenographer. The old colored servant remained with her.

"Within a reasonable time the lawyer friend arrived, accompanied by two other lawyers and a stenographer. The young mother then demanded the immediate presence of her sister-in-law and her baby. The sister-in-law came in, seemingly perturbed, and the young mother, after telling the stenographer to take down her words, repeated the warning of her husband. She said: 'I never saw the will in question, nor do I know anything about the law, but that is what my husband said.'

"'You understood correctly,' said the young lawyer.

"'Then look at the breast of my baby as he now lies there in the arms of my sister-in-law. That is my baby. He must have on his breast a tremendous birth-mark, where I almost crushed him with my frantic effort at identification, as I felt that I was losing consciousness.'

"They looked and saw the mark. It was not an ordinary red birthmark, but a deep dark-brown mark of the mother's hand. The identification was indisputable. The sister-in-law had substituted her baby, despite all of the watchfulness of the mother and servant."

Several ladies expressed doubts of the truthfulness of the story; wondering how it could be possible for a mother to do such a thing, even in the desperation of such circumstances. And Judge Crutchfield said:

"I know this to be a true story. I know that the baby grew up to manhood, and acquired his property. Besides, ladies," and he bowed to the circle, "you are all mothers, and here, beneath this negligee shirt, as you see, is the dark-brown birthmark. I was the fortunate baby in question."

Stripes in Vogue.

Stripes in every imaginable width, shade, color, and material will be the fasionable wear during the autumn and winter, and for once no one will be disposed to quarrel with the decree of the arbiters of dress.

In the hands of a skillful dressmaker a striped material can be made the most becoming thing in the world; it can be so manipulated as to give either height or breadth, and there is no figure that it will not beautify.

The new materials are all very tasteful. There are no violent contrasts, the stripes being for the most part in two shades of the same color, or if two colors are used they are both in dark tones and chosen with an eye to harmony. A pretty combination in these two-color stripes is chestnut brown and a very dark shade of myrtle green, which blend together in the exact hues of a pheasant's plumage.

Every shade of brown, violet and gray will be used for tweed and cloth walking dresses, some being striped with a very fine line of black over two shades of the self color. The make of these costumes inclines toward that elegant simplicity which is so difficult to achieve, the most common skirt trimming being three bands of the material cut diagonally, the bodice having a little waistcoat and cuffs to correspond. Some tailor-built coats are made entirely in diagonal stripes, but the result is somewhat weird and not so becoming as the long straight lines.

There are some beautiful evening dresses in black and white, but with that exception all the materials for evening wear are of one color only.

Chief among these is chiffon velvet, but satin striped chiffon, gauze, crepe de Chine, and ninon de soie will all be worn very much. They are made up either over silk of the same shade or over white, which greatly accentuates the effect of the stripe, and brings out the delicate colors to the utmost.

A little lace will be used on sleeves and bodices, but the dressmakers are relying for success more on the genuine beauty of the material itself, and less on its decoration.

Black lace dresses are being made with narrow lines of black velvet or satin ribbon down the whole length of the skirts, or with panels and insertions of thick passementerie, and black chiffon gowns with either velvet or satin stripes will also be extremely fashionable.—[London Express.

His Fortune.

There was no reason in the world why Dick Hobart shouldn't marry. He was well off and he knew it, and moreover, he had sufficient sense to let well enough alone. He was 30, and when a man gets over the morass of early youth and lands safely at 30 he generally begins to think what an ass he might have been and how lucky he is not to be the ass he might have been.

Dick looked about him at the callow youths in their first dress suits and with the first symptoms of down on their upper lip, who were hanging over the pretty girls present, and thought what idiots they were. "Gad," he murmured to himself, "they'd probably think they were walking directly into Paradise if those wax-faced dollies should say 'yes' to 'em. Wonder if I oughtn't to give 'em a bit of paternal advice?" He didn't, however; for no matter how generous and Christian the man, there is a certain satisfaction in human nature, as well as in poultry, to be able to sit on the fence and crow. Dick glanced over at the flower booth, where the fairest damsels of the evening, in dainty gowns of hues to match the flowers they were selling, were cajoling the verdant youths to part with the contents of their pocketbooks in exchange for a single rosebud or wilted carnation, and shook his head with an air of superior wisdom. The flower booth was a delusion and a snare.

By and by some one insisted upon his going on and having his fortune told. "You must do something to assist the bazaar. Remember, its' for sweet charity," was the plea. So Dick drew aside the oriental hangings and entered the tent. The sibyl was awaiting him as though he of all the world were the one she was expecting, and with a calm and confident air of being able to see directly through him, buttons and all.

"You have a good deal of self-confidence," she began.

"Why, where do you see that?" inquired Dick, staring hard at the lines in his hand.

"In the formation of the thumb," she replied; "and I also see that you are somewhat egotistical, selfish and conceited——"

"Thunder!" exclaimed Dick; then he begged the gypsy's pardon; "but, you see," he explained, "I am not accustomed to quite so much frankness—but haven't I any good qualities?" regarding his palm, ruefully.

"Yes," answered the gypsy, "you have naturally a great many excellent qualities, but constant self-indulgence is rapidly crowding them out. By nature you are impulsive, generous, warm-hearted and affectionate, but a sort of cold calculation has been growing over you of late years, which is harmless now, but which, unless certain forces are brought to bear, will make you a sour and crusty individual. Your line of life is good, but there is a tendency toward indigestion after middle life. Your head and heart lines converge; you consider the former the stronger; but it is not so; the latter is a deeper, more clearly-defined line, and if it were allowed to have its sway your impulses would be better and nobler. In early life you were susceptible, fickle and somewhat reckless, and you were ten times happier and more contented than after you began to calculate and reason. Look out for the age of 30—that will be a sort of crisis—a turning point in your life. It is the tide which, if taken at the flood, leads on to fortune, but which, if ignored, will make a shipwreck of you forever after. There are certain forces at work all the time, but you turn from them persistently——"

"You speak of certain forces at work; will you please tell me what those forces are?"

The hand that held his swayed slightly as she answered in a low tone: "The influence of a woman."

"Indeed?" returned Dick, deeply interested.

"Yes," she continued, "you will fight hard against it, but you will not succeed, and you will be much happier when you yield. It will be like opening the musty blinds and letting in the sunshine."

"Who is this not impossible she?" asked Dick, gazing very intently at his palm.

"Well, that would be more likely to be in her hand than yours, but it seems as if it was some one whom you knew in earlier life and who crosses your path again."

"When?"

"At about the age of 30."

"Will you pardon an impertinent question?"

She looked up inquiringly.

"Who are you?"

"I am only a fortune teller," she answered.

Those outside the tent were becoming impatient again, but Dick paid no heed to them.

"Who am I?" he asked. "Can you tell me that?"

She laughed a little, low, soft laugh. "No," she replied, "I can hardly tell you that from the lines in your hand."

"Do you know anything about me?" asked Dick.

At this moment something caught in the yashmac and it was torn from her face. There was revealed a delicate, oval face, a straight small nose, ripe, red lips and a softly modeled chin. Dick gazed at her full and searchingly.

"Alma Gordon," he cried. "Don't you remember me, Dick Hobart?"

Her face crimsoned all over in the light of the swinging brasier.

"Why!" he cried, "it's five years since we met that summer at the little inn at Interlaken, yet I remember you perfectly."

"Well, you see you did not wear a mustache then," she explained, "and the expression of your face has changed."

"You haven't changed a bit—hang those people outside!" for those whose fortunes were yet to be told were getting obstreperous. "But, Alma," he went on, "you

Hundreds of Motor Cars Are Seen to Advantage.

Balloon Racers Among First-Night Visitors.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—No signs of the financial flurries projected themselves into the opening of the eighth annual auto show, under the auspices of the Automobile Club of America, and participated in by the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association and the Motor Manufacturing Company, in the Grand Central Palace Thursday night. The show was opened by a private exhibition in the afternoon for members of the automobile club, bringing out a large gathering of those high in social and financial life.

Many deals were made for new machines, and there was no apparent lack of funds to invest in cars that were superior to those previously used. Not until 8 o'clock were the doors of the place thrown open to the general public, the delay being due to the extra preparations that were made to show King Automobile in all his splendor.

Artists with keen distinction must have added the setting for the show of the speed machines, for everything pleased the eye. Generally the autos were red, and pleasantly contrasting with this color were the decorations of subdued and pale gray autumn leaves.

Two floors of the palace were utilized for the purpose of exhibiting the cars, while the third floor was devoted almost exclusively to the showing of the adjuncts, necessary and unnecessary, that go with the complete automobile outfit of 1907. This will make up the fashion of the spring of 1908.

Considering the way automobiles cover distance, there was little surprise manifested that a large amount of space had been reserved for the Aëro Club exhibit, placing ballooning and automobiling in the same class.

Among the most interesting visitors at the private view were Charles Leve, M. Sasnier, Alan R. Hawley and Percy M. Chandler, who were among the aëronauts in the recent balloon race from St. Louis.

All were sunburned, as a result of the long trip through the air, and regretted the loss of sleep consequent on the race. Each expressed himself ready and willing to indulge in another test of aëronautic speed.

The number of exhibitors this year in the automobile show is greater than ever, the total reaching 2[illegible]—showing a still further increase in the interest of the public. Of these, 209 exhibitors are not alone making a feature of their cars, but are attracting purchasers through the aid of accessories, meaning much for the automobile industry as a whole. Everything in the line of automobiles, commercial vehicles and motorcycles is being shown.

The display of commercial vehicles at the present exhibition shows a noticeable advance. While many makers have supplied business wagons, when ordered, using their regular chassis and simply substituting a different body, a number of concerns are making a specialty of business vehicles almost wholly, and have developed this type so that it is quite different from the touring-car type, and well adapted to the uses for which it is intended.

Prominent among these business vehicle makers are the Mack Bors Motor Car Company, who build the Manhattan trucks and sightseeing cars; and the Rapid Vehicle Motor Company, who likewise build delivery vehicles with twelve and fifteen-passenger omnibuses and wagonettes. Both companies make light delivery vehicles; while the Reliance Motor Car Company build trucks.

This range, from the 1000-pound package cart of the Brush to the 6000-pound Reliance, gives a buyer of a business vehicle a splendid opportunity to select the truck wanted. On these vehicles solid tires are sued with but few exceptions.

The larger trucks use thirty-six-inch rear wheels, and for the heaviest loads twin rear tires are used, as, for example, on the five-ton Manhattan truck, and twenty-two-passenger omnibus, the front tires are six-inch solids; the rear tires twin four-inch solids, and the same sizes are used on the Reliance five-ton truck. On the three-ton Reliance truck the front tires are five inches, the rears twin three and one-half inches.

On the lighter vehicles thirty-two-inch wheels predominate, with two-inch solid tires on the Brush package cart, three-inch solid on the Brush delivery and on the Rapids, with four-inch on the two-ton Reliance trucks. The motors are pretty generally developed from touring practice, and vary from the six-horse-power Brush, used on the package cart, to the sixty-horse-power Reliance, employed on the five-ton truck.

The Reliance trucks use both dry cells and storage, but the majority of others depend upon dry cells. Three speeds forward and two speeds backward are used in about equal numbers. While pleasure cars are built of standard gauge, about fifty-six inches, trucks, because of carrying capacity wanted, usually exceed this and employ gauges of various widths.

BASEBALL IN PHILIPPINES.

St. Louis Browns Planning to Go to Manila to Play Series of Games With Soldiers.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] If the steamship companies sailing from San Francisco or Seattle will make satisfactory rates, President Robert Lee Hedges and fifteen members of the St. Louis Browns will sail on November 5 for Manila to play a series of games with the United States army, Russian, Japanese and native teams in the Philippine Islands.

Five thousand dollars has been subscribed by the merchants and army officers of Manila as a guarantee for the team to make the trip, and efforts have been made to carry the men over on an army transport, should the Browns decide to go.

Hedges is now negotiating for transportation with two steamship lines. It would be the longest journey ever made for games in a single country.

FLAG IS TO FLY IN LOS ANGELES.

HOW THE PACIFIC COAST LEAGUE PENNANT WAS WON.

Success Attends Baseball in This City and Future Prosperity Is Predicted—Life Story of Players Who Have Brought Sporting Fame to Eerry and the Town.

The baseball season comes to an end next Sunday, with Los Angeles as the winner of the pennant. This is the third time this city has been lucky enough to get the premier honors in Coast baseball, since the sport took form here in 1901. It is plain to be seen that the reason the Los Angeles team captured the pennant was owing to the class of its team, for it has never had any such encouragement as a league official or an umpire that came from this end of the State. Every circumstance has favored the two teams of Oakland and San Francisco, and yet Los Angeles has taken the rag three times in seven years

The league has had the usual vicissitudes of all leagues, and had more than its share of success and prosperity, except in 1906, when all business was retarded by the great earthquake in San Francisco. Owing to this calamity, the league clubs lost from $15,000 to $25,000, out this was doubtless the first reverse Coast baseball ever met.

What is now the Pacific Coast League began its career six or seven years ago as an outlaw league, and the four clubs in it were Oakland, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Sacramento. It continued as an outlaw until after the season of 1903. At the beginning of 1903, Seattle and Portland were taken in for a a six-club league, and after the 1903 season was finished, the league joined organized baseball. In 1904 it was still a six-club league, but the Sacramento franchise was transferred to Tacoma.

This proved such a poor business proposition that at the end of 1905 the Tacoma franchise was given to Fresno and the raisin town was such a bad investment that both Seattle and Fresno were kicked out, when the league finish came last winter.

During its existence, the Coast League has had more great players in it than any other class A league in the country, Frank Chance, Pat Dougherty, Chase, Waddell, Raymer, Sheehan, Courtney, Unglaub and Doc Newton being among the number, and Newton, Chase, Dougherty, Corbett and Waddell were on the Los Angeles team.

J. F. Morley was the first manager of the Los Angeles team, and continued on the job until the spring of 1906, when the big earthquake scared him into giving up the team. It was kept up by Cal Ewing for a month or more, and then the present Angel City Baseball Association was organized, with C. W. Pendleton, president; Freddie Maier, vice-president; City Clerk Lelande, secretary, and Henry Berry, manager. The fans were slow in subscribing for the stock, and finally one day Henry Berry bought all the remaining stock.

From a deficit of $7000 last year, the club has paid it from this year's receipts, and has a little balance to show for the season. Capt. Dillon has kept the team in such good shape that it easily won the pennant this year, and Mr. Berry, who knew little of real baseball when he bit into the Los Angeles club, has learned a lot since then about the practical part of the game, and is glad of it, and events have proven that he did not bite off more than he could chew. His personal popularity and the standing of the directors associated with him, have done much to place the club in its present position, pennantly and financially, and a brief glance at the careers of the players who have made these things possible, is a fitting climax to the flitting history of the league.

FRANK DILLON.

Of all the great players that Los Angeles has ever seen, the best that ever showed here is Frank Dillon, first baseman and captain of the team, who has guided the fortunes of the club for four or five years. The best evidence of his ability as a captain is the fact that in the five years he looked after the team it never finished low-

WHOA, YOU KIDS.

HIGH SCHOOL'S GREAT GAME.

Occidental Eleven Defeated by a Large Score.

Sorenson's Team Looks Like Southern Champion.

Stan Mitchell's Great Run for Touchdown Is Feature.

L. A. High outplayed Occidental in every branch of the game in the football contest at Fiesta Park, yesterday afternoon, and won by the score of 26 to 0. The great feature of the game was a run of 106 yards to a touchdown by Capt. Stan Mitchell of L. A. High in the second half. Mitchell's performance is unequaled in Southern California High School football and the run is but one yard less than Caley's famous run in 1902, in the Pomona-U.S.C. game.

The score stood 21 to 0 against Occidental and the colege players were threatening the High School goal, in the middle of the second half, when Mitchell made his great run. Occidental had the ball on the fifteen-yard line, on the third down, when Bruce Merrill attempted a forward pass.

The ball went straight into Mitchell's hands near the east side line. Mitchell evaded eleven Occidental men in rapid succession, and broke into the open field alone, closely pursued by Thomson, the Occidental fullback. At the high school 35-yard line Thomson overtook Mitchell and lunged for a tackle which brought the L. A. High captain to the ground.

Mitchell quickly rolled from Thomson's grasp, and with Watlington acting as interference, ran to the goal. He failed to kick goal for the only time in the game, and the score of 26 to 0 was unchanged at the close of the half.

GREAT CONTEST.

The contest was one of the best ever seen in Southern California, and contrary to the indications from the one-sidedness of the score, was fast and exciting throughout. Both sides resorted to kicking at all times, with L. A. High gaining ground on almost every exchange of punts. Long runs were frequent, Mitchell and Cass making the best gains for the High School, while Bruce Merrill and Thomson carried the ball for big gains for Occidental. The ball was in sight of the bleachers throughout the game, and the 1000 spectators went wild with enthusiasm at the wonderful work of the High School players.

During the first half a very light rain fell, but in the second half the sun shone for a few minutes and the afternoon proved ideal for football. The field was slippery, but in fair condition.

Occidental started with a rush, but after the first few downs it was evident that High School had the better of the argument. Goheen's players showed great ground-gaining ability at various times during the game, and in the first of the second half had the prep school players on the run for a few minutes, but they were unable to keep the ball in the High School territory for any length of time.

High School scored nine points in the first half on a place kick and a touchdown, which Mitchell followed with a kicked goal. Luck seemed to favor the High School in this half, and both scores largely were chance plays. The first four points were scored by a place kick by Mitchell after High School had carried the ball to Occidental's fifteen yard line and there failed to gain their yards on bucks.

Berryman fumbled the pass for a place kick, rolled the ball to Mitchell, and the captain ran around right end for a gain of six yards. Powers bucked three more, but Referee Traeger penalized the team fifteen yards because the quarterback ran five yards straight ahead with the ball before passing it to the halfback. High School formed for a place kick on the 25-yard line, and Mitchell sent the ball over the posts for four points.

RETURNS THE PUNT.

The teams changed sides and Mitchell kicked off to the Occidental goal line. Wieman returned the punt on the first down to Mitchell, who carried the ball twenty-five yards down the field. Occidental held again, and High School once more formed for a place kick from the 35-yard line. An Occidental player leaped high in the air and touched Mitchell's kick with his fingers, causing it to fall short, and to one side of the posts. Johnson followed the ball as it rolled across the line, but as he waited for it to roll over, Watlington fell on the ball for a touchdown. Lull made a muss of the kick-out for position for a goal kick, and the score stood 9 to 0.

In spite of these favorable chance plays, High School also had its poor luck in this half, being penalized thirty yards, and once losing the ball to Occidental by a decision of the referee.

The first score in the second half was also the result of a lucky play on Brant's part, coupled with a costly misjudgment of Thompson, who replaced Johnson as fullback for Occidental. Following a rally by the Presbyterians, High School carried the ball to within fifteen yards of the Occidental goal by a series of bucks and forward passes, only to be penalized on the last one, which was unsuccessful. Mitchell then punted to the Occidental back line, and while Thomson was waiting for the ball to roll over, Brant fell on it for a touchdown. The goal was an easy one, and the score stood 15 to 0.

BRILLIANT PASSES

The next score was the result of a series of brilliant forward passes, which brought the ball to Occidental's 2-yard line, when Geissler carried it over. Mitchell again kicked goal, making the score 21 to 0. Mitchell's great run scored the next touchdown, and the remaining ten minutes of play was devoid of further scoring.

Occidental made absolutely no defense against the forward pass, playing two men in the back field and the rest close to the rush line. As a result, High School had a clear space in which to make the long throws forward, and succeeded in making many big gains in this manner.

Occidental failed to work the long forward pass to any advantage, as most of the throws went wild. On ROAD BUILDERS.

SHORT CUT TO "CROWN CITY."

Pebbleless Speedway Is Now Almost in Readiness.

Thirty Thousand Dollars Is Cost to the County.

Inter-City Tournament Is to Mark Completion.

Men and teams are rushing the work on the splendid boulevard between Pasadena and Los Angeles. Less than one mile remains to be completed. When the speedway is finished it will be possible to drive to the Crown City over a road as smooth as a tennis court.

Months of effort and the expenditure of a large sum of money has worked wonders. Where formerly an indifferent road, over numerous steep grades, connected this city with Pasadena, now a fine thoroughfare that is a credit to Southern California is almost ready for the public.

The Board of Supervisors, which is putting the road through, will expend $30,000 on the project. One-third of that sum has been paid. Supervisor Eldridge said yesterday that the completion of the boulevard is only a matter of days.

The speedway connects with Huntington boulevard at Alhambra junction, and runs to Bairdstown, where much work is being done to put it into proper condition. Here a hollow is being filled, and when brought to grade, the completion of the boulevard will be rapid.

The road is fifty feet wide. There is plenty of room for vehicles to pass at any point on the boulevard. It is the intention of realty men, and others who own property along the route, to build a double road the entire distance to connect with Huntington boulevard. The road follows the short line tracks.

Thirty men are at work rolling and smoothing the drive. On the part that is completed not a pebble can be seen. Motoring is a pleasure over this fine driveway. Motorists will appreciate the short run to Pasadena as it cuts off several miles.

POINT OF INTEREST.

Auto men of Los Angeles and Pasadena are taking great interest in the work. Every day parties of motorists drive out to the completed portion and speed their machines along the miles of smooth road.

Oil has been used to form a dustless surface that will pack more solidly as motor cars are driven over it. The oil has been worked into the soil by machines which scratch the surface to a depth of several inches, and allow it to become thorouhgly saturated.

When the top soil is thoroughly soaked, a heavy roller is driven over the surface. This is followed by a scraper, which removes all the surface rocks. The road is then treated to a hand-finishing process, which leaves it in excellent condition for fast motoring.

Signs to be placed along the boulevard will indicate the miles and give directions. It is expected that this road will be one of the heaviest traveled of any thoroughfare in the county. For that reason special care is being taken to put it into the best shape possible.

Where the old road turns to the right, about a mile beyond the city limits, the boulevard continues over a new bridge. The approaches to the bridge, which crosses the Short Line tracks, are easy and the grades gentle.

HEAVY TEAMING.

The question of heavy teaming is interesting the motorists. Should the old road be entirely done away with, as now seems probable, teams must pass along the boulevard between Los Angeles and outside points in the San Gabriel Valley. Already a suggestion has been made that another, and possibly narrower, road be built for heavy wagons.

Oil wagons, and even heavy loads of hay, would cut the surface of the thoroughfare and make it unfit for fast motoring. The interests of automobilists seem to demand that the road be used exclusively by motor cars, and possibly light vehicles.

At present, the surface is like glass. A day's heavy teaming could cut deep ruts into the road, which would play havoc with tires and take away the comfort of a motor drive to Pasadena.

Automobile men have started a movement which may result in the early completion of a boulevard to the sea to connect with the new drive. A suggestion advanced by many motorists is to extend the boulevard, by way of Washington street. This boulevard could be extended to the several beaches, and it would then be possible to make a complete circuit of the seaside resorts. From Pasadena to the sea in an automobile, over a road as smooth as glass, would then be a possibility.

Arrangements are being made for an automobile parade to celebrate the completion of the boulevard. Los Angeles motorists have agreed that such an event should be made of special import, as it marks an epoch in road building in the county. An intercity motor tournament has been suggested.

RANCHERS USE AUTOS.

Grain Men Travel Over Vast Acres in Big Motor Cars and Save Time.

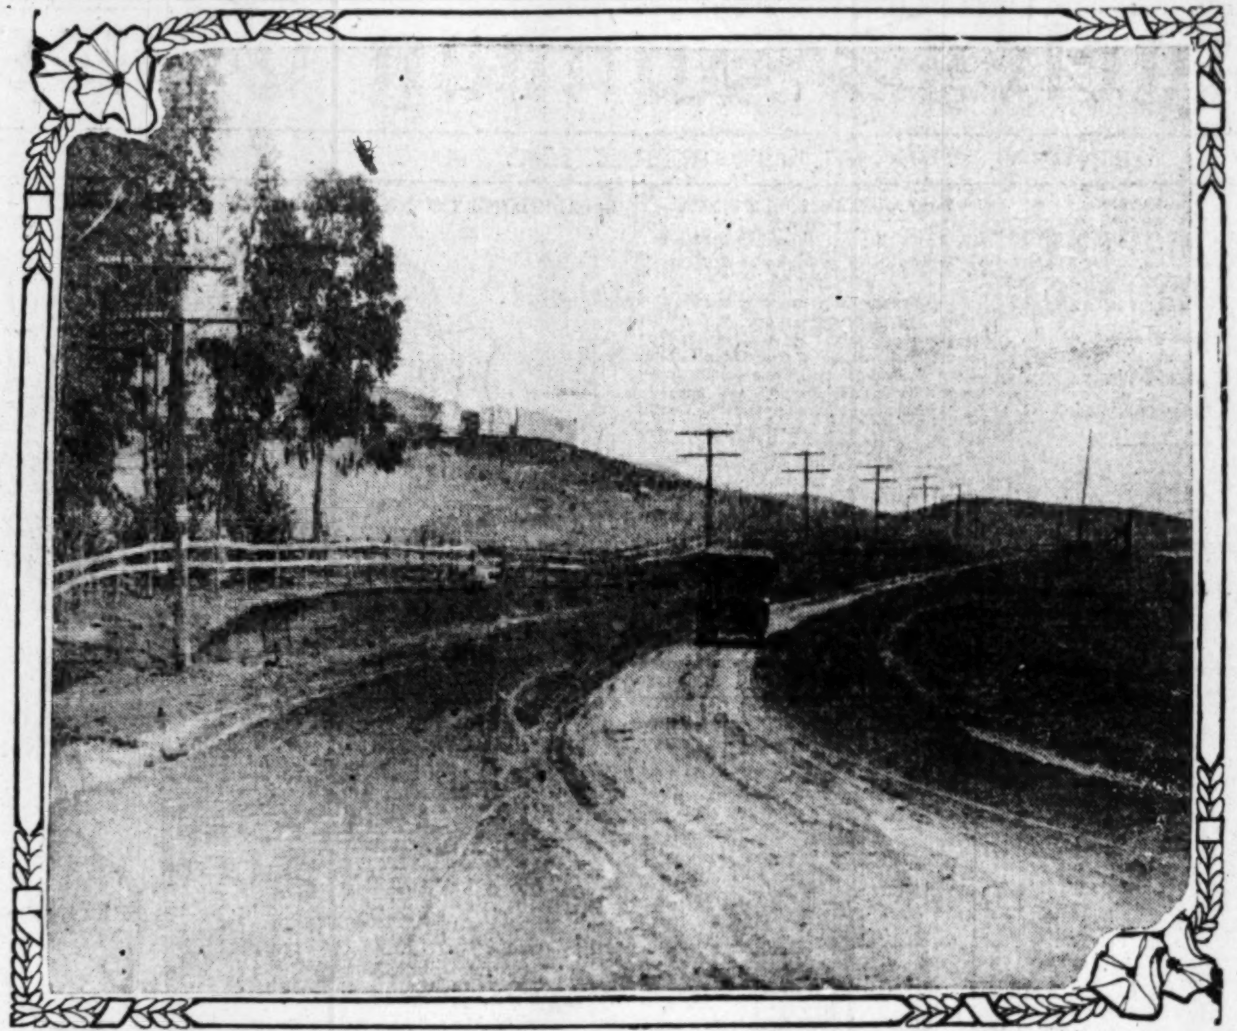
Sales Manager Jesse L. Draper of the Wayne Automobile Company reports a steadily increasing use of automobiles in the great Northwest for driving about the enormous ranches and grain fields. There are hundreds of acres of land in that territory requiring the personal attention of the owners and managers, which were visited only at infrequent intervals in the past because of the fact that it required so long a time to cover the grounds on horseback or by driving.

This was speedily remedied as soon as the automobile was introduced, and now the owners and managers, who are forced to travel over the miles of land, do so in automobiles. Mr. Draper reports a deal with one big ranch owner for six Wayne Thirties, with which to stock his motor-car stable.

In this particular instance it has formerly required about a week's time to make a complete tour of the cultivated lands. With an automobile the same territory is now being covered in less than two days.

Makes Good Showing.

In a recent contest at Milwaukee a Buick lowered the world's twenty-four-hour record for two-cylinder cars. At the end of the long grind a Buick, a Locomobile and Mitchell were the only cars running. The Buick ran the entire distance without a single adjustment, it not being necessary to take out so much as a spark plug. The Buick covered 884 miles, and used but fifty gallons of gasoline.



Rounding a curve on the Los Angeles-Pasadena boulevard, now nearing completion.

SPICK AND SPAN.

NEW DESIGN IS HANDSOME.

CAR IS BUILT FOR SPEED AND ENDURANCE QUALITIES.

Thomas Detroit Arrives from Factory With Engine Designed by Hereshoff, Great Yacht-builder. Motor Differs from This Year's Model and Will Be Faster.

The first car of the Thomas output for 1908 is here, the Thomas Detroit, which is being demonstrated by the Western Motor Car Company. The new car is a departure from that of last year, and is French in design. It is improved in almost every detail.

The motor is the work of Herreshoff, one of the members of that famous family of shipbuilders, who has been making the government torpedo boats for years, and from whom have come some of the best engines now in use. He was asked a year ago to make the best motor he could design, regardless of expense, and the engine in the Thomas Detroit is the result.

The cylinders in the new car are 5x4¾, and the transmission is heavier than formerly. The steering wheel is larger and the general construction is of the highest grade. The Thomas company is making most of its own parts, and everything on the car is sold under an absolute guarantee.

In 1907 the front axle was drop-forged, welded in the middle. This season it is a single piece, drop-forged. The clearance of the front axle is 10½ inches, and the rear 9½. This is enough for the California or Nevada roads. Timken roller bearings are used in the axle, and the transmission. The seats will be wider this year, and the general appearance of the body richer.

The Mayer carburetor will be used. This has been highly successful on the Thomas Flyer. The clutch is cone, leather-faced, sixteen inches in diameter, and may be removed from the car without disturbing the motor or transmission, and can be adjusted in a minute's time with a bicycle wrench. An adjustable spring beneath the leather renders engagement easier than in 1907.

The flywheel weighs ninety pounds and has the valve timing stamped on the rim. It is drawn on tapered end of the crank shaft and is held by a heavy key and nut, insuring a tight flywheel at all times. The car shows forty horse power. The ignition is by jump-spark, and a magneto can be attached at a minimum expense.

The touring car has a speed of fifty-five miles an hour and the runabout sixty. The positive interlock mechanism within the transmission case prevents absolutely the shifting of one set of gears while another is in mesh. The wheels and tires are 34 by 3½ by 34 by 4. The wheel base is 112½ inches.

New Model Out.

The début of the new Studebaker model, which is of forty horse power, will be made at the Madison Square Garden show in New York. This car while meeting all the requirements of a large touring model, follows very closely the design and construction of the smaller Studebaker car, which has performed so creditably in road and track contests during the past season.

SKIDD DOWN STEEP PASS.

Autoists Have Thrilling Experience While Crossing Newhall Grade After Dark.

A party of seven from Fresno in C. B. Shafer's big White touring car, had an exciting experience getting down the south side of Fremont Pass Wednesday night. Shafer was accompanied by his wife and two daughters and Dr. Davidson and wife. W. D. Warner of Fresno drove the car.

Bakersfield had been left that morning at 8 o'clock; the rain setting in soon after. Going uphill there was little to worry about and the 300-foot climb up Tejon Pass was easy. Lunch was taken at Neenach, leaving 107 miles for the afternoon trip into Los Angeles. As the road was well marked by the emblematic road signs, the last part of the trip was made in the dark. Warner had been over the road before, except the new route via Mint Cañon.

All went well until the summit of Fremont Pass was reached. It was still raining, but the four ladies decided to walk down this awful chute, in preference to riding. Driver Warner took the big car down safely, but it turned completely around twice, skidding on the steep grade in the mud.

BIG OVAL NOW.

Motor Clubs Would Build Four-Mile Track Near Chicago for Racing Purposes.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The attitude of the Chicago Automobile and the Chicago Motor clubs, on circular track racing, that special tracks should be constructed for the speeding of high-powered cars, has revived interest in schemes for the building of a three or four-mile oval near Chicago. One of these has reached a stage where it is more than talk, and if the American Automobile Association takes action which will prohibit the holding of regular events on mile turf tracks, a project for the construction of a five-mile racing area in Indiana may be carried through.

This project is now being considered by the officials of the Monon Railroad, to whom it was suggested by N. H. Van Sycklen, who was formerly interested in the building of circular bicycle tracks in this country. It contemplates an oval with one and a quarter-mile stretches and turns, or one and a half miles on the stretches and mile turns. The track would be built within forty miles of Chicago and there would be seating facilities for 70,000 persons. The plan is to promote each year at least four big racing events, of which at least two would attract national and international attention.

Open House for Autoists.

The New York Automobile Club has thrown open the doors of its New York Club House for the fall and winter season, and the restaurant and buffet at the town house, No. 306 West One Hundred and Ninth street, are in good working order. The club is receiving steadily applications from many owners in Greater New York. During the auto shows the New York Automobile Club will keep "open house" for all representatives of the trade visiting the city, and a sweeping invitation will be extended to automobilists generally to visit the city house during their stay.

AUTO SHOW TO BE BEST EVER.

COLISEUM IN SAN FRANCISCO TO HOUSE EXHIBIT.

Second Week in December Is Date of Opening—Steep Hill Adjacent to Building Will Be Used for Demonstrations—Decorations in Colors of California Automobile Club.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 25.—As a result of the success of last year's automobile show, the Dealers' Association of California have determined upon a second exhibition. The Coliseum, which is one of the largest buildings in the United States, again has been chosen to house the display. The date has been fixed as the second week in December, and at a recent meeting of the Dealers' Association, a committee composed of George Middleton of the Middleton Motor Car Company, Herbert Choynski of the General Motor Car Company, and J. A. Marsh of the Mobile Carriage Company, were elected to handle the show. N. R. Cooper, who had charge of the show last year, has again been engaged to manage the affair this season.

The possibilities of an elaborate show in San Francisco are very pronounced. The Coliseum, where it will be held, covers almost an entire block, and is situated opposite the main entrance to Golden Gate Park. Directly to the south of the Coliseum, and only two or three blocks distant, is one of the steepest hills in San Francisco. With this incline for demonstration of hill climbing ability, and the smooth roads of the park accessible for purposes of exhibiting the other faculties of an automobile, it is not necessary for the San Francisco dealer to take long runs into the country to show every phase or every talking point of his car.

In addition to this, the Coliseum is almost entirely on the ground floor. Last year San Francisco's show housed eighty-four exhibits, and showed more than 150 makes and models of automobiles. This year the exhibits probably will be even larger on account of the number of six-cylinder cars which have invaded the field.

Decorations, out of courtesy to the California Automobile Club, will be in green and yellow, the official colors of this club, and will consist largely of green shrubs and palms, taken from Golden Gate Park. As in last year's show, uniformity of exhibits, decorations and signs will be preserved throughout the entire pavilion, and simplicity also will be sought.

Athletics at Y.M.C.A.

Athletic activities at the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium at No. 833 South Spring street are ow well under way wth the greatest attention being paid to basketball. The members of the association who follow this game practice regularly, and Physical Director Price expects to organize three teams within a short time. Since the disbanding of the indoor baseball league, none of the Y.M.C.A. athletes have been playing this game, but a team will be placed in the proposed new league which "Red" Perkins wished to organize.

LITTLE SPARKS FROM MOTORDOM.

Don't run your machine when it has a unknown noise without investigating its cause.

Licensed, unlicensed and foreign manufacturers will exhibit under the same roof at the Philadelphia show, the rivalry among the different classes being less marked in the Quaker City than elsewhere.

Terre Haute, Ind., is experimenting with an automobile patrol wagon, using it for both day and night service.

Contrary to expectations, the Chinaman has proven a reliable chauffeur in his native land and motor buses are supplanting the tramways at Shanghai.

Over 1200 machines were present at the Wood County, O., Fair at Bowling Green this year. Three years ago exactly three machines were registered.

From December 28 to January 4 are the dates that have been selected for the Importers' Automobile Salon show of foreign cars at New York.

The first company of its kind in this country has been formed at New York to keep an automobile in running order, making all necessary repairs, together with storing it when not in use for a fixed price per year.

Pleading in a Connecticut court that he was asleep and that his chauffeur was in full charge of the car, a motorist recently escaped a fine for speeding.

Ejected from a relief train en route from Houston, Tex., to a railroad wreck, newspaper men made the trip to the wreck, thirty miles distant, in an automobile, secured their stories and returned before the first hospital train.

A new feature at the coming Philadelphia show will be the setting apart of the morning hours of each day to allow students of technical schools to examine and study the mechanical details of the cars exhibited.

An organization of French chauffeurs has requested the support of the Minister of Public Works for the passage of a law that will limit their profession to men holding certificates issued by the government.

Joseph May, of Winnipeg, recently established a new record for six-cylinder motor cars by winning, with his Franklin H, the Brandon Auto Clubs run from Winnipeg to Portage La Prairie.

Joe Gans, the negro pugilist, has joined the ranks of the motorists. Recently he walked into a New York salesroom and purchased a car and fittings which cost him $5685, which amount he paid in cash, to the surprise of a salesman, who, not recognizing him, mistook him for a chauffeur.

A wonderful escape from death was that of Fire Chief Croker of New York, whose car, while going at a fifty-mile clip to a fire, lost a wheel. Without upsetting the car tore up the pavement for 100 feet before it stopped, while the wheel ran ahead for a block, then smashed through an iron fence as though it were paper.

Following the example of the United States, almost all the European shows will be held early. London's big Olympia show will be held November 11 to 23, and its rival, the Stanley affair, November 22 to 30. The big Paris show in the Grand Palais and the Place des Invalides will run from November 12 to December 1; the German show at Berlin from December 5 to 22, and the one at Turin, Italy, from January 18 to February 2. There also will be a voiturette contest near Paris from November 1 to 15.

Favor Medium Power.

The tendency toward moderate horse-power which is evinced by many American makers is even more plainly apparent in the standard European manufacturing centers, according to C. R. Mabley, manager of the Importers' Automobile Salon. The makers of Europe discovered a year ago, says Mr. Mabley, that the demand was no longer for high-powered productions, but that a medium amount of horse-power upon which the owner could depend was the essential qualification. The importers have followed this lead during the past year, and a continuation of the same policy is evidenced in the fall announcements. In nearly every case the cars featured (and which it is evident are the ones which will be pushed) are the medium-powered cars. The field for cars of extreme power is now more than ever the racing field.

GOSSIP ALONG GASOLINE ROW.

The Auto Vehicle Company have sold to W. S. Tevis of Bakersfield, a four-cylinder touring car which was delivered to Mr. Tevis at San Diego. He will tour Southern California with his family, and will then drive to San Francisco by automobile.

The Stoddard-Dayton Motor Car Company expect a consignment of 1908 cars the latter part of this week.

R. L. Forsyth, agent for the Auburn motor car, returned from New York yesterday. He has arranged for the delivery of 128 Auburns during the year. The 1908 model is equipped with the prestolite, has a speedometer and wind shield. The wheel base is three inches wider than the last year's model.

Earle Anthony's lavender Packard roadster will be here this week. The car was nicknamed the "Purple Pup" at the Packard factory, and is certain to attract much attention.

Two shipments of 1908 Thomas Flyers are on the way to the Western Motor Car Company by express.

Packard cars for Tod Ford and Harry Gray are on the way west.

E. B. Perran drove his Thomas Fyer from Los Angeles to Goldfield last week. The car went through without mishap, taking the heaviest grades, and ploughing through the deepest sand trouble. The roads were in a wretched condition.

The Success Automobile Company expect a carload of Type B Locomobiles today.

Don Lee, of the Lee Motor Car Company, left yesterday for New York to visit the auto shows.

Dist.-Atty. Fredericks returned yesterday in his locomobile from a three thousand mile intercounty trip. He visited thirty-five counties of the State during his outing.

Edwin Cosgrove of Seattle has purchased a four-cylinder Tourist from the Auto Vehicle Company. Mr. Cosgrove has planned a tour of Southern California in his new car. His family is with him.

William Fraser, of Riverside purchased a Model G Cadillac last week from the Lee Motor Car Company.

Graphite Grease Cools.

A planetary transmission gear which persists in overheating may be kept cool by the use of graphite grease in moderate quantities, instead of oil. This grease generally has a mineral oil body similar to non-fluid oil, and the graphite maintains the lubrication temporarily in case of the grease escaping. Only a small quantity should be used, as the grease is very stiff and does not soften under heat like some kinds of grease generally used.

TAYLOR SELECTS BERKELEY SCRUM.

'VARSITY MATERIAL IS IN FINE PHYSICAL CONDITION.

Captain Tuller and Cerf Sure of Their Positions—Field Meets and Basketball Interclass Contests Being Conducted—Johnson Running the Two Mile.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Oct. 25.—The California scrum seems practically decided, although there are ten men to be considered in its selection. The seven who seem the most probable to face the Cardinal pack are Barnicott, Harris, Fairbanks, Bell, Twitchell, Stow and Budelman. Barnicott and Harris will be on the 'varsity for the first time, while the rest of the men have played in a big game. Farmer, Northcroft and Ashley are the other three men who must be considered in picking the scrum.

Capt. Tuller is certain of his place at wing forward. His play in the last two games has shown a decided improvement over that earlier in the season. Markwat will be his understudy. Butler is a fixture at fullback, and is playing that position in fine style. He is improving in his place and goal kicking, and although not as sure as Fenton of Stanford, he should be able to score when called upon.

Cerf will play a five-eighths beyond doubt, and it is fairly certain that Freeman will be the other five. Cerf put up a better game than did any of the English backs in the Vancouver games. Freeman is playing good ball, but is prone to pass too low and to fumble occasionally.

TAYLOR'S SELECTIONS.

Coach Taylor will have a difficult time in picking his three-quarters, as H. Johns, Paul, W. Johns, Dyer, Jackson, Dwiggins and Renouf are all putting up the hardest kind of a fight for a quarter position. Taylor's action in playing H. Johns throughout all the recent games seems to indicate that he will be chosen. Jackson, the freshman, has been played more than any other of the remaining candidates, and as he is wonderfully speedy, it looks as though he will make his place. The third man is an unknown number. Dyer, Paul and W. Johns played in the Nevada game, Dwiggins in one Vancouver match, and Renouf in the other. Renouf is slower than the other men, but more than makes up by reason of his accurate drop and place kicking.

Schaeffer will be halfback beyond doubt, with Dwiggins a good understudy. Both Stanford and California have agreed that Jenkinson, who refereed the freshman game satisfactorily, is the man to officiate at the big game, and he has been asked to do so, but because of business interests may not be available.

GIRLS' BASKETBALL.

The women have started their basketball tournament among the classes. The first contest was won from the freshmen by the juniors, by a score of 14 to 6. Miss Christine Krysto has been elected 'varsity captain. The interfraternity baseball games have reached the semi-finals. Phi Sigma Delta, which won the cup last year, was put out in the first round by Phi Gamma Delta, which appears likely to win the series. Sigma Nu and Beta Theta Pi are also strong factors in the race.

Interclass field meets are being held this week, and will continue next week, in preparation for the P.A.A. meet, which will be held on the California oval November 2. Many California athletes will enter the various events. Capt. Stanton will enter the quarter; Crossfield and Donnell, the hundred; Dozier, the half, and Cowles, the hurdles, while a good representation of university men will be seen in the other events. Herman Johnson, who was the crack two-miler for Pomona last season, and is doing graduate work at the university this year, will enter the two-mile in the coming meet.

DARES DEATH FOR WIFE.

UTO BEATS OVERLAND IN WILD NIGHT RUN.

are many remarkable auto- bile runs that are made out in desert of which the public hears. Probably F. C. Fenner, mining man with a large mine th Baldy Peak, and interests re, has many of these runs to edit. His White runabout, built over two years ago by the factory for this desert cruising, ld many a wild tale, besides the winning the two races to North Peak, if it could talk.

week the old car was suddenly upon to race against a Santa passenger train, and to make it to do sixteen miles while the was covering eight miles. It wager or contest of pleasure, errand of mercy, and the dirty White made good.

where the road to Death branches off the motorists decided to try the railroad Arizona. They loaded the au- onto a flat car, which was right behind the locomotive in train. They traveled the re- miles to Yucca station beyond the Colorado River, where cars could again be used.

Beyond the Colorado River the Hualpi Mountains are followed by the railroad nearly all the way to Yucca, where the east-bound trains have to stop for water. The highway leading to Bill Williams Fork, down the valley of the Big Sandy, is up grade for nearly a score of miles, after leaving Yucca.

The motorists were comfortably settled at Casa Neda Springs, when the wife of Mr. Cummings was taken dangerously ill in Los Angeles, and Mr. Cummings was telegraphed to rush to this city. It is forty long miles from Yucca station to the springs, and Fenner and his companions were camped about two miles beyond.

The dispatch was received at about 8 o'clock Wednesday evening, and a messenger was started on horseback to find Cummings. It took twenty-four hours for the courier to reach the motorists.

Fenner is impulsive. In no time he had Cummings on board the old White runabout. Two hours remained to catch the Overland bound east, which must stop at Yucca for water, and that would meet the west-bound Overland twenty-six miles east at Kingman.

Could Fenner cover the forty miles that had taken a horse twenty-four hours in one-twelfth the time of the courier? Fenner said, "Never worry, my acetylene lights are all right, and the old car will hang together."

And the race was on. "If Cummings doesn't fall out on the way, it looks like a safe bet," said Fenner, as they shot away.

Sixteen miles from Yucca the Santa Fé Overland, east bound, was sighted, at a point only eight miles by rail from Yucca. Both motorists knew that for every mile made by the big puffing locomotives the little eighteen-horse-power steamer must do two miles of rocky trail, but Fenner was still confident, for he was now going downhill, and the train was pulling up the side of the Hualpi Mountains, and must also stop a few minutes to water both locomotives.

And Fenner was right, for he steamed into Yucca ahead of the Santa Fé Overland, having covered the forty miles of desert in fifteen minutes less than two hours. Still there was no time to lose. Cummings climbed under a train sidetracked, and had just time to get safely on the east bound. Soon he was at Kingman, where he caught the west bound, and thus saved a twenty-four-hour wait, for the west bound does not stop at Yucca as it flies down the mountain division on its way to California.

Cummings is a quiet man, but that ride of an hour and three-quarters excited him. His wife's health was improved yesterday, and he will return to the copper claim in a short time.

SPEEDY POWER BOAT.

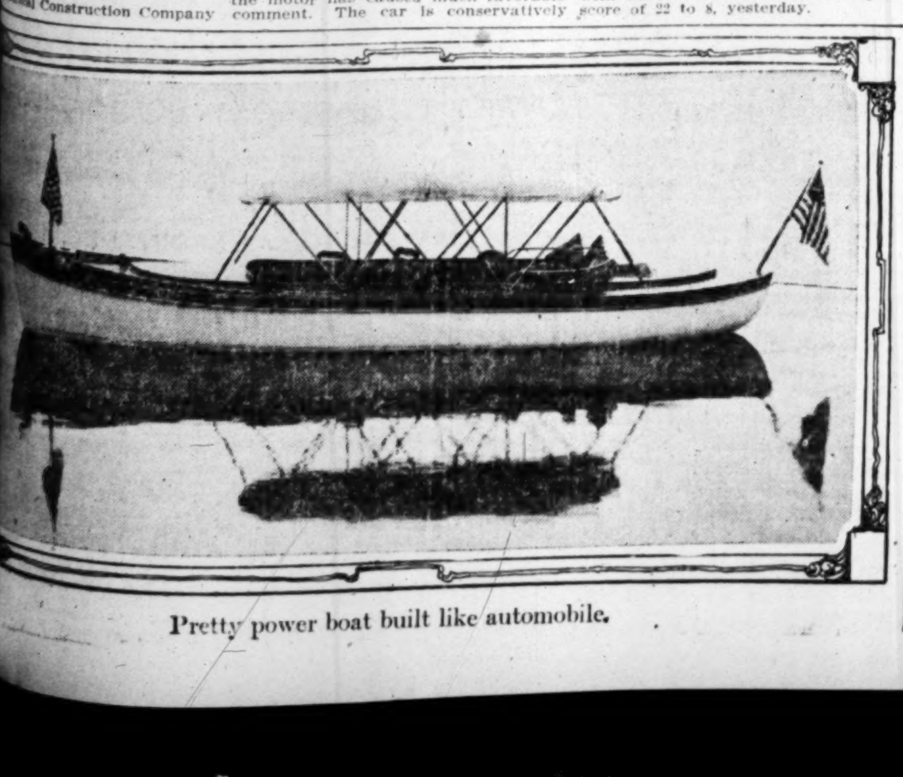
Pleasure Craft, Built Like Automobile, Will Skim Over the Water Like a Bird.

A new style of power boat, designed entirely as a pleasure craft, has been brought to the Pacific Coast by the Norton Engine and Power Company. The boat is built along the same lines as an automobile, and, in fact, is nothing more than a chug-wagon transferred to the water.

The name of the boat is the "Water Wagon," and it has all the equipment of an automobile, including the carburetter, sparker, levers, and gasoline tank. As it is built for pleasure and comfort, and not speed, this quality of the auto is not embodied in the "Water Wagon." The guaranteed speed of the boat is fifteen miles an hour.

Is Great Hill-Climber.

The first of the 1908 Imperial cars has just been tested at Williamsport, Pa., and has received its baptism as the "Second Imperial." It will be on exhibition, with four others of its kind, at the "Palace Show." The extreme quietness and even running of the motor has caused much favorable comment. The car is conservatively rated at thirty-five horse-power, and has developed great hill-climbing ability. One notable feature is the double-drop frame which permits of a "straight-line drive." The result of this construction is that when the car is loaded the drive causes no extra strain on the universal joints. In the opinion of technical men this gives a gain of considerable power at the wheels. As far as appearances go, the Imperial roadster is one of the most business-like road cars of the new season. Its lines are graceful. Visible control is reduced to a minimum, there being nothing on the dash but the switch. It is made in a rich coach red or a French gray, according to specifications.



Pretty power boat built like automobile.

DIAMOND CHIPS.

Southern California is becoming the Mecca of eastern baseball players, not only for those of the professional ranks, but the amateurs as well. At least a score of these amateurs or semi-professionals are in Los Angeles and in the surrounding towns for the winter, in the hope that they may get on with one of the many winter leagues here. Most of these men are good ball players, and with the winter's workout may blossom into professionals next spring.

Lee Fuller, a young catcher, who has been doing professional stunts about Grand Rapids, Mich., is in Los Angeles, attempting to connect with some good winter league team.

M. F. Porter, a recruit for the Toledo American Association team, is to be given a trial by Scotty Allen in one of the two teams under his control.

"Dummy" Taylor, the mute pitcher of McGraw's Giants, arrived from the East Friday, and is to pitch for San Diego against the Dyas-Cline team at San Diego today.

If Jimmy Toman keeps up his good work as an umpire, he ought to be given a chance in some good league.

Charley Hall has signed up with Santa Barbara as a pitcher.

Chandler, third baseman and captain of one of the teams in the Canadian League, has signed up with the Hoegees.

Adair, of the Kansas City team, has been signed by the Edisons to pitch.

Jack Encoe, of the T. Grand T. team has joined the Edisons and will play center field.

Roy Hitt, the National Leaguer, is pitching for Pasadena.

Pasadena has a fast team, and should make the rest of the clubs hurry.

Manager Ward of the Edison, has accepted the terms of Manager Chavez of the Santa Barbara team for the purchase of Kelley, third baseman of the Santa Barbara team. The deal will be closed this week, and thereafter Kelley will wear an Edison uniform. The Edison players asked Manager Ward to get Kelley back at any price as they remembered his good work in the Mercantile League, which helped win the pennant for the Edisons.

The League directors have an application on file from the Moran team, and if an outside team can be secured it will be taken in at the next meeting.

Bakersfield has guaranteed $75 and expenses to visiting teams, and will probably join the league.

Motor Boats Under Ban.

The motor boat has been started upon the downward course of disfavor by the old-school sportsmen. One of Delaware's laws of 1907 prohibits duck shooting in Indian River or Rehoboth Bay from boats not propelled by oars, and this agitation probably will extend into other States in the course of the months to follow. In Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, boats, guns and decoys used in hunting ducks in violation of law will be confiscated by the State.

New laws for the prevention of hunting accidents have also been passed and agitated this year. These are provoked by the increasing number of casualties resulting from the poor aim of unskilled hunters and the great range of the modern rifle. The rifle is hereafter forbidden deer hunters in New Hampshire, and game must be riddled by shotguns—thinks to those gunners who have been shooting their guides and the numerous non-combatants of the woods. Maine is agitating a bill excluding firearms of all kinds from its woods during the entire close season, and Minnesota has before its Legislature another prohibiting the use of firearms within three miles of cities of 50,000 population or more. One of Wisconsin's new laws prohibits the use of rifles in hunting waterfowl, except goose or brant.

THIS STORM HELPS.

BLUEBILLS ON BOLSA MARSH.

Southeaster Contributes to Clubmen's Sport.

More Northern Ducks Arrive and Fill the Ponds.

Sprigs Getting Their Colors. Yesterday's Bags.

Another southeaster came in off the ocean yesterday morning just in time to turn a prospective failure into a very satisfactory day for the Bolsa duck hunters.

Breaking of the previous storm resulted in a clear night with late, bright moon and promises of a calm, quiet forenoon which condemned the sport in the judgment of the experts long before the legal time to shoot. That they had the conditions figured out correctly enough was proved by a rather short first flight, notwithstanding the great plenty of ducks. The birds all had gone to sea by 6 o'clock.

Occasional stragglers high in air filled the time after a fashion until 9:30 o'clock, when the first damp puffs of a coming storm began to blow from the southeast, and in half an hour the ocean had become so rough that the fowl could stand it no longer, and broke away from the big rafts of sitting birds outside, rising high into the air and coming in to the fresh-water ponds on the clubs. Flying in great flocks that filled the heavens with skeins and irregular strings of "V" shaped dots, anxious to alight and seek a refuge from the gale that their instinct foretold, the birds behaved like different ducks from the droves that sped to sea at the first fire only three hours before. The need of sky-scraping stopped instantly; the clubmen began to burn less powder and to more purpose. Long walks after body-shot birds became less frequent, and the shooters began killing their birds clean. Bags of eight and ten were run up to near the limit in many instances between 11 and 1 o'clock, and all the good shots piled up twenty-odd, the manner in which the big northern sprigs came sailing down being a beautiful thing to see.

On the last storm a number of widgeon invaded the Bolsa country, and many of them were gathered in by the clubmen yesterday.

BLUEBILLS ON HAND.

A week ago yesterday the clubmen had redheads for fancy birds; yesterday another variety of deep-water duck made its appearance on the club marshes when the bluebills began to fly. They were fairly plentiful in the first flight, whizzing by the blinds unscathed, traveling at a headlong, bullet-like pace that baffled even the good shots, after practice on the slower traveling ducks.

Few cinnamon teal were seen yesterday, although they were plentiful enough in the mid-week shoot. Their green-winged relatives were present in rare force yesterday, and made up for any deficiency. Spoonbills steadily are becoming more plentiful, although the main body of the broad-faced mallard tribe has not put in its appearance locally as yet. Nor is it due until late in November.

Limits were not very numerous yesterday, the good shooting starting too late. Killings of from a dozen and a half to thirty were common enough, however, and a number of twenty-fives were reported.

On the Chico Land and Water Company's preserve only three guns were out, Eugene Koch killing the limit. Frank Huebsch visited the marsh for the first time in three weeks, and got together twenty-four. Ed Golter's boy killed ten. Sprigs and teal were the prevailing birds, with a sprinkling of widgeon and a few bluebills.

No one was out on the Green Wing Land and Water Company's grounds, the members being at their quail preserve in San Diego county for the first quail shoot of the season. Across the road, on the Olympic grounds, E. J. Brent, William Mackie and three guests, of whom Capt. J. D. Fredericks was one, held forth with good success, bags ranging from twenty to thirty.

Godfrey Fritz had the Christopher grounds all to himself, and took advantage of the opportunity to knock over the limit with his new 16-gauge gun, the birds being mostly widgeon, sprigs and spoonbills.

BLUE WING IN LUCK.

On the Blue Wing the usual Saturday squad of five guns, Drs. Steen, Jones, Schiffman, R. B. Stephens and George Adams, bagged 168 ducks between them, nearly the limit for everybody. They had good sport until noon, and could have killed more in the next hour.

The Saturday squad held down the Canvasback blinds, twenty-five being high on the day, Dr. A. H. Hedderly, W. F. Chandler and E. L. Hedderly having the best stands. The birds were mostly sprig, with a fair sprinkling of teal.

On the San Pedro club four guns bagged from eight to sixteen ducks each, the shooting being marred by skyscraping on the roads and adjacent ponds, gunners firing at birds that no gun yet bored would have even made uncomfortable, ranges at which a deaf duck never would know he had been shot at.

Messrs. Anderson and Wright shot on the Los Patos club and killed twenty and eighteen, respectively.

F. E. Robinson was high on the Westminster with the limit, a full turnout being present. Two bluebills were bagged. Adolf Swartz got 26, Karl Klokke, 20; Marshall Stimson, 18; Walter R. Leeds, 19; F. E. Browne and a guest, 15 each; C. C. Carpenter, 15. Sprig, teal and widgeon were the kinds in the order of frequency named.

On the Golden West, A. J. Hoffman bagged 20; E. A. Curtis, 30, and Percy Schumacher, 20. Curtis proudly displayed one greenhead mallard, which he wing-tipped, and gave to H. S. Hazeltine as a contribution for the duck pen.

Nobody shot on the Center Club. On the Sunset, A. T. Jergins and the rest of the Saturday squad were pegging away until late afternoon with very satisfactory results.

On the Lomita and Bolsa Chica clubs good-sized turnouts were the rule, but the sport was hardly better than fair. Most of the Bolsa Chica clubmen quit too early to get the benefit of the late flight.

TODAY'S SHOOTING.

Today the Newport, Surf, Pacific and neighboring clubs; Green Wing, Pasadena, Cerritos and all the Ballona clubs shoot.

Four members of the Sunset Club shot yesterday, with the following results: Dr. Stivers, 35; R. Mausard, 31; A. T. Jergins, 35, and D. V. Collins, 22. Most of the ducks shot were sprig, with a good number of widgeon and a few bluebills.

The arrest of a persistent poacher was reported yesterday on the reserve of the Golden West Club. A deputy made the arrest, and took the poacher, Charles Bennett, to the Santa Ana Jail.

Four hunters who returned yesterday from a shooting trip to the Thompson ranch in Coachella Valley report quail plentiful. They are William Wagner, Louis Simpson, Ed Winston and Tam Thompson, and all got the limit. Quail are reported to be so plentiful that they may be killed with clubs.

Two accidents occurred with the party. Wagner received a painful shot wound in the forehead from Thompson's gun, which afterward had one barrel blown out from being full of sand when discharged.

GETS CORBINA.

SOME SPORT AT MELROSE.

James Snyder tried his hand at corbina fishing at Melrose yesterday afternoon with good results, catching sixteen fish all told, including one perch and yellowfin. The fish bit freely and is worth trying today.

The largest corbina in Snyder's basket weighed about a pound and they averaged about half a pound.

A few other corbina catches have been reported during the week.

CARDINAL HOPES.

NEW FULLBACK FOR STANFORD.

BROWN DISPLACES FENTON, WHO GOES TO HALFBACK.

Cardinal Backfield Superior to California's, but Blue and Gold Has Better Set of Forwards—Winners of Big Game Invited to Play in British Columbia.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Oct. 24.—The Stanford football squad, always later in getting together than California's aggregation, seems to have "found itself" earlier in the season than usual, this year, and the showing made in its last two games has raised the hopes of the Cardinal's supporters.

Fullback Brown, star Rugby player developed at Stanford.

Both California and Stanford gave evidence of their scoring ability in their games with the University of Nevada fifteen, when Stanford made 31 points and Berkeley 25. The Nevada games seem to bear out the Stanford conclusions that Stanford outclasses California in the backfield, and is in turn outclassed in the front rank of forwards.

NEW FULLBACK.

The most important event of the season in regard to the make-up of the Stanford fifteen has been the development of Fullback Brown, whose work in the freshman game alone saved the Cardinal from being defeated by an overwhelming score. He should be a likely successor to Fenton, whose four years will be up at the close of the present season. Lanagan and Presley considered him too valuable a man to be left off the team, however, and in the week following the freshman game gave him a chance on the 'varsity, switching Fenton to half. Since then he has more than held his own, and as Fenton is apparently doing even more effective work at half, the present arrangement probably will be retained in the big game.

It was Fenton's kicking that won the game for Stanford last year, and his work in this line is phenomenal this season. In the Nevada game he kicked two goals from penalties from the forty-yard line, at an angle and in the face of a strong wind. None of the five tries did he fail to convert, and some of the attempts were from extremely difficult angles.

With Fenton at half, Mitchell and Ganong at five-eighths, Reed and Owen at wings, Vandervoort at center and Brown at full, the Cardinal has a speedy set of backs. Mayers and Heinley are fighting for the position of wing forward, with the former slightly in the lead at the present writing. Cook, who was a substitute on last year's 'varsity, and Heiman, who held down a place on the 'varsity, will keep Owen and Reed up to scratch, if the latter are to hold their positions for the rest of the season.

The Cardinal's chief danger seems to lie in the superior aggressiveness of the California scrum. In Crawford, the star guard of the 1905 team; John O. Miller, the famous distance runner, and Bill Pemberton, Stanford has three giants in her scrum, but the rest of the forwards, with the exception of Capt. Koerner, are not in a class with the fast California forwards, and if the latter succeed in keeping the ball out of the hands of the Stanford backfield, it will go hard with Stanford.

GREAT GAME.

short passes, however, the Presbyterians made several gains, but the referee was criticised from the bleachers for allowing the pass after the line of scrimmage had been passed, and once for allowing a pass after he had blown the whistle for a new down.

Cass, who succeeded Berryman as quarterback for High School in the second half, made two beautiful runs in the last ten minutes of play, but the ball was brought back by Referee Traeger after each of them. His first run was for 60 yards, after he had caught the ball on a return punt by Wieman of Occidental. He made some clever dodges and had good interference, but he was called back because of tripping by a L. A. High player.

OCCIDENTAL BUCKS.

Occidental tried several bucks and punted again to the L. A. High quarter, who made another brilliant run, this time for forty yards, but the ball was again called back by the referee on a technicality.

Capt. Mitchell's playing outshone that of all the others. His punts exceeded those of Wieman in distance and height and were much better judged. Wieman often kicked out of bounds for short gains, and twice kicked the ball against his own line. Mitchell also used a short kick to one side to great advantage. His line bucking and end running showed his cool, calculating judgment, and he used the straight-arm effectively several times.

Geissler played a star game at end, and the work of Brant and Decious was vastly superior to that of the Occidental ends. Geissler was always right on his man after every L. A. High punt, and Rush, Johnson and Thomson, in the Occidental back field, rarely moved out of their tracks when they received the ball on punts. Many times the Occidental men misjudged the kick, and allowed it to go over their heads.

Powers played a dashing game as right half for the High School, while for Occidental Thomson and Bruce Merrill at times made heavy inroads on the L. A. High line.

In the line, Watlington and Silent did great work for L. A. High in breaking up Occidental's plays, and Conrad, the Presbyterian center, was in evidence in almost every scrimmage.

FEW SUBSTITUTIONS.

Occidental made but two substitutions in the game, Highstreet replacing Petty at end in the first half, and Thomson going in as fullback in the second in Johnson's place. Coach Sorenson gave four substitutes a chance to get into the game and they all played well.

Both Berryman and Cass played a good game at quarterback, but the latter's thrilling runs brought him in evidence more than Berryman had been in the first half. Rush, Occidental's quarter, played well on the offensive, but his work in the back-field was not brilliant, partly for the reason that the High School ends were well down on every punt. Following was the line-up:

L. A. High.		Occidental.

HARVARD WINNER.

SCORES OVER PASADENA.

Harvard 6, Pasadena 4, was the score of the prep game played on the Harvard field yesterday afternoon. Both teams scored near the end of the first half, Harvard on a touchdown and goal, and Pasadena on a place kick.

Harvard scored after the ball had been advanced to Pasadena's 2-yard line by a long forward pass. Halfback Davids carried the ball over the line, and Brown kicked the goal. Pasadena scored soon after this with a place kick from the 25-yard line by Kern.

Thorpe, the Harvard quarterback, made two good runs, and Hill, the Pasadena end, was prominent for his tackling. Capt. Kern, the Pasadena fullback, outpunted Capt. Brown of Harvard, although Brown did some fine kicking.

Neither side was able to score in the second half, and the ball seesawed up and down the field; with both teams often forced to punt on the third down. Harvard was close to the Pasadena goal line when time was called.

Following is the line-up:

HOLLYWOOD WINS.

ROLLS UP LARGE SCORE.

Hollywood High School's eleven defeated the Southern California Military Academy of Santa Monica by a score of 25 to 0, yesterday afternoon, on the Hollywood campus.

The gridiron was in a very bad condition, and made the playing hard for both teams. Hollywood's team work and interference was excellent. The cadets played a good game, but their center was weak. The visitors tried the forward pass several times, but lost, while the foothill boys made two large gains on these plays.

J. Gower made the first touchdown, and Taylor and Knowles each made two. Eastman, Spencer and Priester of the Hollywood team did splendid line work, while Peters, Buchnall, Slaughter and Spencer's tackling was good. Lindsay and Borde of the beach boys made some of the best tackles during the game. Lockhart, Burch and Mann made several long runs around their opponents' ends.

The line-up was as follows:

DATE WITH INDIANS.

OCCIDENTAL TO PLAY BRAVES.

Sherman Indians and Occidental are to play football at Riverside, November 2. Manager Crane went to Riverside, yesterday, and arranged for the game. The Presbyterians were anxious to meet the braves in Los Angeles, but satisfactory terms for playing the match in this city could not be agreed upon, and the Indians would play only in their home town.

The Riverside town team may play the Presbyterians in Los Angeles on November 9. Occidental already has opened up negotiations with the San Diego Athletic Club for this date, and in case the San Diegans decide not to come to Los Angeles, the Riverside team will be played on the Occidental campus.

SAN DIEGO Y.M.C.A. WINS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Whittier College football team was defeated on the Russ High School grounds by the strong San Diego Y.M.C.A. team by the score of 4 to 0. The only score was made in the first half on a beautiful place kick by Littlefield from the 25-yard line.

The Quakers went into the game greatly crippled and were satisfied to hold the local team down to so low a score. The game was hotly contested throughout and was marked by some star playing on both sides. Never during the entire contest was the Quakers' goal in danger from a touchdown.

The line-up was:

HIGH SCHOOL DEFICIT.

PLAN FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Los Angeles High School Athletic Committee has announced that there is a deficit of $300 in the treasury, and has asked permision of Principal Housh to receive subscriptions of the pupils. The Athletic Committee is considering giving a play in the new auditorium soon, and they hope to get on their feet again.

Last year Principal Housh decided not to enforce the athletic dues, thinking that there was a sufficient fund in the treasury to cover the expenses, but several improvements in the gym, etc., have taken most of the money.

At the opening of the football year the team borrowed about $130, but this was paid back after the first game.

U.S.C. HUSTLING.

ARRANGES INDIAN GAME.

U.S.C. and the Sherman Indians are to meet on the gridiron at Bovard Field on Thanksgiving Day. The game was negotiated by Managers Hunt of the university and Hightlinger of the Indian School in a conference held yesterday afternoon, the Methodists securing the contest on a $500 bonus. The game between U.S.C. and the Indians last Thanksgiving Day resulted in a 0 to 0 score and was one of the best contests ever played in the south.

Two games have been secured with the Riverside city eleven, the first to be played at Bovard Field on Wednesday of this week, and the second to be pulled off probably on Friday of the coming week, unless High School should retract from her present position and decide to play the university a return game, in which event the second contest with the Riverside team will be postponed a week. On November 9 Whitier College will meet the 'varsity on Bovard Field.

For November 16 negotiations are said to be under way for an interstate game, while November 23 is open.

The season's work will culminate with the big Indian contest on Thanksgiving Day, so that all in all the 'varsity will fare betetr than expected.

Negotiations to bring the Utah Agricultural team to Los Angeles to play yesterday were declared off as U.S.C. could not see its way clear to guarantee the $1100 demanded for expenses.

SCRUMMAGES.

POLY WINS FIRST RUGBY CONTEST.

SAN BERNARDINO TEAM BEATEN IN A CLEVER GAME.

Los Angeles Boys Prove Better on Offensive Work While San Bernardino Is Best in Defense, but Not Good Enough to Prevent Locals Scoring Eight Points.

Polytechnic High School, 8 (one goal and one try;) San Bernardino High School, 0.

In one of the fastest and keenest Rugby games of the season, Polytechnic defeated the visitors from up the valley. The game was not really evenly contested, as the ball was out of San Bernardino's territory only once during the entire game, but the visitors' defense was good, and time and time again they stopped clever passing rushes made by the Polytechnic backs. Both sides played a very clean game, and also played Rugby all through. There were no attempts at bucking through, except in defense, and the ball was placed on the ground the instant it was held. The result was a very fast and open game, and the spectators had the ball in sight all the time.

No score was registered in the first half, although Polytechnic crossed their opponents' line three times. In each case the excellent defense of the visitors enabled them to make it doubtful as to whether the ball was held up or not. Referee Holmes decided against the local players, and was perfectly correct in his decisions, as, in each case, the ball was carried over the line by a mass rush of the forwards when, if playing properly, they should have heeled the ball back to their three-quarters and allowed them to score.

This was the one mistake made by the Polytechnic players, and they heard about it from their coach during the half-time interval. In the second half the forwards corrected their desire to rush the ball over the line, giving it to their backs instead, and the consequence was that two clean tries were scored. A sure try at the end of the first half was lost to Polyetchnic on account of the action of the timekeepers, who called half-time while the ball was still in play. There was a scrum on San Bernardino's goal line, and Robertson, the Poly halfback, took the ball from a clean heel-out and rushed over the line. Just as he was crossing the chalk mark and some of the visitors' forwards were trying to tackle him, there was a shout from the timekeepers, and Holmes blew the whistle. Two seconds later Robertson fell on the ball, but the try was not allowed.

PLAY GREAT BALL.

During the second half of play the local forwards played a splendid game. They heeled the ball out to their backs, and the latter did excellent passing work, but, although they were right on their opponents' line, they were unable to carry the spheroid across for some time. The San Bernardino three-quarters marked their men with wonderful precision and tackled them before they had a chance to pass.

Then Rowell took the ball from a scrum, passed back to O'Rourke, who ran forward and sent over neatly to Goodwin, the latter gained a few yards and passed to Manning, a forward. Manning plunged, and, just as he was thrown by Pace, passed to Smith, another forward, who ran over the line and scored after one of the prettiest and most unselfish plays of the game.

Rickershauser failed to convert, and San Bernardino dropped out from the 25-yard line. Maloney returned and Pace was downed before he could kick back into touch. The ball was kept near the visitors' goal line, with the San Bernardino backs working with all their strength to keep Poly from scoring again. The ball was held close to touch and heeled out by the Poly forwards, a San Bernardino man was jumped in and dribbled the ball down the field. The whistle was not blown, and the Polytechnic fellows, instead of playing to the whistle, stood still and allowed the clever man on the other side to rush the ball dangerously near to their line before he was stopped.

For some five minutes the home goal line was threatened, then Goodwin relieved the situation by a long punt into touch and the ball again found its place inside the visitors' twenty-five. Manning, the star dribbler for Polytechnic, woke up about this time and crashed through a scrimmage with the ball at his feet. Crane saw the opportunity and followed up. Atwood charged Manning off the ball but before Pace could drop on it, Crane scopped it up and ran over the line. Rickershauser converted and the score stood 8 to 0. There was still some time to play but the visiting team had to catch a train so time was called with seven minutes left to play.

At the finish of the game Polytechnic had just got

CHAOS.

FOOTBALL CONDITIONS ARE VERY UNSETTLED.

FOOTBALL is in a bad way in Southern California, and there seems to be no prospect of an improvement in the situation this season. The college squabble over conference rules has destroyed effectually the intercollegiate schedule, with the result that the college elevens are forced to fall back on high school teams, to a large extent, for games.

A revision of the local schedule reveals an extreme scarcity of good games. Among the colleges, Pomona, Occidental and Whittier will meet, but these games are of little importance.

St. Vincent's series of interstate games, one of which already has been played, are the only important contests to be conducted in Southern California, but as St. Vincent's does not meet any other local college team, little judgment between Southern California football and that of the outside teams can be had.

It is generally conceded that the St. Vincent's eleven is the best of the college teams, however, and that when this eleven plays an outside team the best football that Southern California is producing this year is being staked against the visiting team.

St. Vincent's has already defeated Denver University, but has yet to meet two outside elevens of much greater strength than the Colorado players. Utah's heavy aggregation will be seen at Fiesta Park next Saturday, and the strongest college eleven of Oregon, from the State Agricultural School, will play here on Thanksgiving Day.

BRIGHT STARS.

Bright individual stars in collegiate football are very few, and the public will have little opportunity to see these in action. Pomona has Metcalf, the star tackle, whose goal kicking was a feature of last season, and Halladay, another tackle who made the All-Southern California team last year. At Occidental, Bruce Merrill at left half is capable of thrilling end runs. Wieman, who plays a tackle position, is another Occidental wonder who shines particularly as a punter.

U.S.C. also has several men who can play a great game of football if given an opportunity to unlimber, but in the few games the Methodists have played this season they have shown themselves to be in poor condition. Burek, fullback, did some wonderful scattered field work and bucking last season, while Capt. Haigler and Shute also played football far above the average kind. Shute is a notable punter.

St. Vincent's stars have the best chance to show themselves to the bleachers of any in the South. Galt, the Indian fullback, is a line plunger and ground gainer without an equal on teams now playing, unless it be Burek. Dechman, who will play end, probably will be seen in the form that made him an All-Southern California end last fall. Lamer, who used to be one of Southern California's greatest halfbacks, has just joined Hempel's squad, and may get into good shape in time to do some star work.

Whether it is because of the few games to show up the good football traits of the players, or because there are fewer really good men on the teams this year than in former seasons, it is certain that the usual run of great players is not in evidence.

HIGH SCHOOLS EXCEL.

The high-school and preparatory-school teams show to better advantage than the college elevens. They are playing faster and more interesting ball, and their schedule is not broken up by quarrels as to the eligibility of players. The college teams still have a strong tendency to the old mass play, with a great deal of line bucking, while the prep school teams seem to have followed out the new idea of open play, with fast runs, plentiful use of the forward pass, and all sorts of trick plays, which make the game open and exciting.

Los Angeles High has a team far superior to that of any other southern prep school, and is giving the college elevens a close run. Stan Mitchell, captain and left halfback, is probably the best man in his position on the Southern California field, this year, in all branches of the game. The whole team is made up of natural athletes, and averages in weight to equal any of the college teams.

Harvard School, Pasadena and Santa Ana all have fast teams, which play good football. Close to them in ability is the Throop eleven, but as most of the players are new to the game, the school has made less progress than the others. Leaving Los Angeles High out of consideration, Pasadena and Harvard seem to be the schools who will fight out the championship of the prep school teams.

SANTA ANA IS OVERWHELMED.

U.S.C. SCORES HEAVILY OVER HIGH SCHOOL TEAM.

Los Angeles Coach Uses Many Players After Members of First Team Make Victory Sure—Good Interference and Sharp Play Mark Work of Capt. Haigler's Men.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA ANA, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In a game marked by good team work and very little fumbling, the U.S.C. football team and Santa Ana High School this afternoon demonstrated the old proposition that a light team with speed and science stands no show against a heavy team with an equal amount of speed and science. The local school was clearly outclassed and though they put up a game fight to the end, they were overwhelmed with a score of 51 to 0.

High School was crippled by the absence of two of her best men, Eaton and Tedford, who are both out on account of injuries. U.S.C. used her regular line-up in the first half and put in a few subs in the second.

The light High School line was unable to stop the swift rushes of the 'varsity backs, who went through tackle for gains of 10 yards at a time. The 'varsity tackles were run from their positions for good gains and a revolving buck worked well a couple of times, but was quickly solved.

U.S.C. relied on straight football and against a light line it was amply sufficient as the score shows. On the defense the 'varsity team was not remarkable, as High School repeatedly worked the forward pass for long gains. This play the 'varsity appeared powerless to stop, as it never failed except when the quarter was nailed before he could pass the ball.

The quarterback kick was also used to advantage by Santa Ana, but their inability to make consistent gains through the 'varsity line when distance was needed precluded any chance of a High School score. The U.S.C. team had their interference working in good shape, and showed an excellent spirit of helpfulness, often carrying their man several yards with two or three light High School tackles clinging to the runner's legs.

Shute was easily the star of the 'varsity team, getting up full speed on the first jump and several times dodging through half the High School team. Capt. Haigler used his weight to good advantage in carrying the ball, as the local men tackled high, and could not stop him.

For Santa Ana, Humphrey was noticeable on the defense, making numerous good stops of heavy runners. Vanderlip played a steady game at quarter, being especially accurate in his forward passes. The line-up:

PASADENA IMPROVES.

VETERAN AGGREGATION.

Pasadena High has one of the fastest teams in the high-school football field this year. Coach Parker has trained a veteran aggregation in every phase of the game, and has a speedy and clever team, averaging in weight about 155 pounds. Pasadena excels in using the forward pass, in quaretrback runs, and clever fake plays. Added to this line of work, the team has a strong backfield and is prepared to do some irresistible line bucking.

The game with Harvard Friday was the second in the Pasadena schedule. Next Saturday Santa Ana will be played, and L. A. High on November 16. The remaining Saturday before the final game with Throop has not been filled by Manager Card.

The first team at Pasadena now lines up as follows: Milsap, right end; Card, right tackle; Stimson, right guard; Loughery, center; Landreth, right guard; Ross, right tackle; Hill, right end; Rice, quarterback; Smith, right half; Wachob, left half; Kern (c.) fullback.

THROOP ERRATIC.

PLAYERS NEED DISCIPLINE.

Manager Bettanier of Throop Polytechnic has completed his schedule of football games for the season. Next Saturday Throop will play Harvard, at Pasadena. A return game with Santa Ana High, which won from Throop recently by the score of 6 to 5, is scheduled for November 9. Hollywood will be played November 16, and L.A. High on November 23, at Fiesta Park. Following this, on Thanksgiving Day, Throop will play its big game with Pasadena High, closing the season.

It was expected early in the season that Throop would get a trip to San Diego to meet the High School team there, but arrangements for this game fell through.

The Throop team, developed about a nucleus of three veterans, is now in fair shape. In weight it will average about the same as Pasadena, Hollywood or Harvard, but probably will be outplayed by all three of these schools. The difficulty at Throop is that there are too many coaches. All the players take a hand in telling the men on the team how to play the game, and the result is a lack of discipline, which seriously handicaps the work of Coach Leonard.

The team executes its plays with a good deal of speed, but is slow in getting them off. Quarterback Jones takes plenty of time giving signals, and the eleven may find itself swept off its feet when it plays Pasadena or Harvard.

Scrimmage practice is held three times a week with a team made up of the Throop College players, assisted by the heaviest of the second-team men.

INDIANS VICTORIOUS.

EASILY DEFEAT PENNSY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 26.—The University of Pennsylvania football eleven on Franklin field this afternoon tried to avenge the 24 to 6 defeat at the hands of the Carlisle Indians, last year, and the result was: Indians, 26; Pennsylvania, 6.

It was not so much Carlisle's strength that made the game so one-sided, as it was Pennsylvania's slow play. The Quakers were outclassed in every department. The Indians' exhibition of forward passing was perfect.

RHEINSCHILD A HERO.

PLAYS GREAT FOOTBALL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ANN ARBOR (Mich.) Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In the Michigan-Ohio State football game here today, in which Michigan defeated the Buckeye squad 22 to 0, Walter M. Rheinschild of Los Angeles clearly demonstrated that he is one of the fastest football men in the country. By spectacular runs, line smashing and clever tackling the California boy brought down the bleachers time and again.

Although fighting a crack team, strong on defense and tackling, Rheinschild alone gained for the Wolverine squad 163 yards. He scored two of the four touchdowns, the first by smashing through the opposing line for 9 yards, carrying three men on his back, the second by making a spectacular run of 40 yards through crowded field.

The first score of the game, made by Loell, was made possible by Rheinschild's run of 25 yards to the visitors' 12-yard line. The other touchdown, made by Capt. Magoffin, was scored after Rheinschild had carried the ball 20 yards to Ohio State's 12-yard line.

Five forward passes were successfully caught by the big tackle and time and again the backs made big gains through holes opened by him in the visitors' line. Twice he tackles behind the line, throwing the opposing backs for losses, and he made several clean and sure tackles in the open field.

To say that Ann Arbor is wild over Rheinschild tonight is expressing it mildly. The western boy was applauded wherever he appeared on the streets. Yost, who has trained famous football men and who is conservative, said after the game: "Over half of the victory belongs to Rheinschild. He is one of the fastest and headiest men wearing moleskin, East or West."

CORNELL'S VICTORY.

SURPRISES PRINCETON TIGERS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ITHACA (N. Y.) Oct. 26.—Cornell's victory over Princeton, today, by a score of 6 to 5, will go down in Cornell's football annals as the most remarkable gridiron struggle in the history of Percy field.

The first half, in which neither side scored, was a continual punting duel between Walter for Cornell and Harlem for Princeton, in which the Cornell man had the decided advantage.

At no time during the spectacular struggle in the first half did the ball approach near enough to either goal to endanger it. Walder was responsible for the only Cornell touchdown, and clinched the victory by kicking the goal.

The Princeton score was a fluke. Walder was blocked in a punt on the 20-yard line, and the ball rolled to the very corner of the field, where Booth pounced on it. To many of the spectators it appeared as though the ball had gone out of bounds. Phillips, however, failed to kick goal.

cleanly every minute of the time. The whole game was marked by an entire absence of squabbling or talking to the referee and the visitors showed the true spirit of sportsmen by playing up all the time, although outclassed.

Leon Atwood at three-quarters, Pace at fullback, Miller halfback and Sloan forward were the stars of the visiting fifteen. They all played cool and heady games and, had all the San Bernardino boys been as good, the result would have been different.

All the Polytechnic players did themselves justice. Manning and Smith were the best of an excellent forward line, Rowell and Robertson, the two halfbacks, played good Rugby and handled their backs to perfection. Rowell never fumbled a pass and started his backs running before he fed them, which is the ideal Rugby game. Guy Goodwin and Maloney, the two new men, both did very well, while Crane and O'Rourke, the two inside three-quarters, passed at the right time.

The Polytechnic board of control finds that their financial position will not allow them to retain the services of a coach, so Jack Densham will no longer look after the team. This should make little difference, however, as the boys understand the game thoroughly and will practice under the watchful eyes of Capt. Rickershauser and Robert Thompson, the intercollegiate expert.

STANFORD BEATEN.

BARBARIANS TURN TRICK.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Barbarians defeated the 'varsity today by the score of 16 to 6, in a slow exhibition of Rugby. The muddy, slippery condition of the turf made fast play impossible, but neither team was up to its form of last Saturday. Both sides were frequently penalized by Referee Moffitt for off-side plays and forward passing.

The Barbarians' scrum proved too strong for the Cardinal forwards, and generally got the ball out in good shape. Both backfields showed excellent team work, and each executed several clever passing rushes, which were in almost every case, however, broken up by the opposing forwards before any great gain was made.

The Barbarians made most of their gains by fierce dribbling rushes, which the Stanford players seemed powerless to stop. Stanford made the first try, after about three minutes of seesaw play, on a pretty 30-yard run by Holliman, assisted by Vandervort. The Barbarians worked down the field by kicks, in touch, and tied the score by a try on a 10-yard run by Capt. Elliott. Capt. Koerner was forced out of the game during the second half, with a blow on the head; it will not prove serious.

The Barbarians scored early in second half by dribbling rushes, and soon added 4 points to their score on a field goal by a beautiful drop kick by Elliott. A place kick on a penalty gave the visitors three more, making the score 13 to 3, just before the call of time.

Cadwalder scored for Stanford on a pretty 25-yard run, in which he was assisted by Vandervoort and Cook. Elliott and Pomery starred for the visitors while Fenton, Miller, Holliman and Reed did good work for the Cardinals.

Many New Deer Laws.

Deer hunters find themselves confronted by a veritable labyrinth of laws passed this year. In Vermont every one killing a deer must exhibit the head to the nearest deputy game warden, or be fined for his negligence. Wisconsin prohibits the hounding of deer, and the possession of dogs in hunting or lumber camps within the deer country. Maine limits each lumber camp to six deer per season and individual residents to one per season. Nebraska forbids deer hunting indefinitely on penalty of $100 fine, and Tennessee until 1911. North Carolina forbids hunting until 1910 in seventeen counties. Maine gives increased protection in certain localities, and Texas reduces the bag limit to three deer a season. Pennsylvania's new law, passed this summer, prohibits the shooting of any except male deer with horns that can be plainly seen. A doe, fawn or spike buck cannot be killed—only bucks whose horns are developed. This law is purposed to protect mankind as well as the deer, since statistics show that hundreds of men are killed in the woods by nervous hunters, who on seeing the brush move blaze away at it and thus increase the Coroner's business vastly. Greater care will be taken now that hunters must hold back their fire until certain that their target is a male deer with horns.

Mountain Sheep and Caribou.

The mountain sheep cannot be hunted until 1911 in Utah, and 1912 in Texas, according to this year's laws, while Colorado has extended its absolute protection for four more years, and Alberta has decided to keep up the bars until 1909, not only for mountain sheep, but for mountain goat. Caribou also receives increased protection from this year onward in the Canadian provinces. Newfoundland prohibits hunting on a certain region on Grand Lake, where many American gunners have lately gone, and Manitoba forbids the hunting of females. In Nova Scotia the sale of caribou is forbidden until 1910. The fast-vanishing buffalo cannot be hunted hereafter in Manitoba, one of the last hunting grounds left. In New York, an attempt to aid in preserving this noble creature failed this year when a bill carrying an appropriation of $20,000 for the establishment of a herd of buffalo in the Adirondack Park was vetoed by the Governor.

Non-Game Birds Protected.

One of the signs of the times is the increasing esteem for non-game birds. West Virginia, Alabama and South Dakota decree this year that none shall be hunted. One of the odd laws is a new one of Hawaii providing protection to birds beneficial to forests. An echo of the pure-food crusade is sounded in new laws in Indiana and Idaho restricting the cold storage of game, and a very wise one in Kansas forbidding the placing of undrawn game in cold storage. Other novel laws are one in Alabama providing that the game commission be elected directly by the people, and another by Idaho requiring the State Warden to investigate means of destroying noxious animals. South Carolina places the protection of its game into the hands of the State Audubon Society and gives it the powers of a game commission.

Many New Duck Laws.

Bird hunters find a plethora of new game laws. Ducks are the most favored class of feathery bipeds in the grist of this year's legislation. Colorado reduces from 100 to 50 the number allowed in possession at one time, and Connecticut forbids spring shooting of all water fowl. Maine will hereafter allow only ten ducks to be taken out of the State, and these or less can be exported only upon payment of a fee of $5. But duck hunters will this year find the bars let down somewhat by Pennsylvania, Maine and New Hampshire, which have lengthened their seasons, the first named going so far as to abolish the bag limit. Quail are given increased protection in Tennessee, Wisconsin, Colorado, Connecticut, Wisconsin and New Hampshire. In Washington and parts of Oregon they cannot be hunted until 1912; Connecticut, until 1911. Michigan and Kansas prohibit gunning for European partridges for five and six years, and Maine forbids any one taking more than six partridges out of the State in any season. Ontario, however, opens a three months' season, which will attract many American gunners.

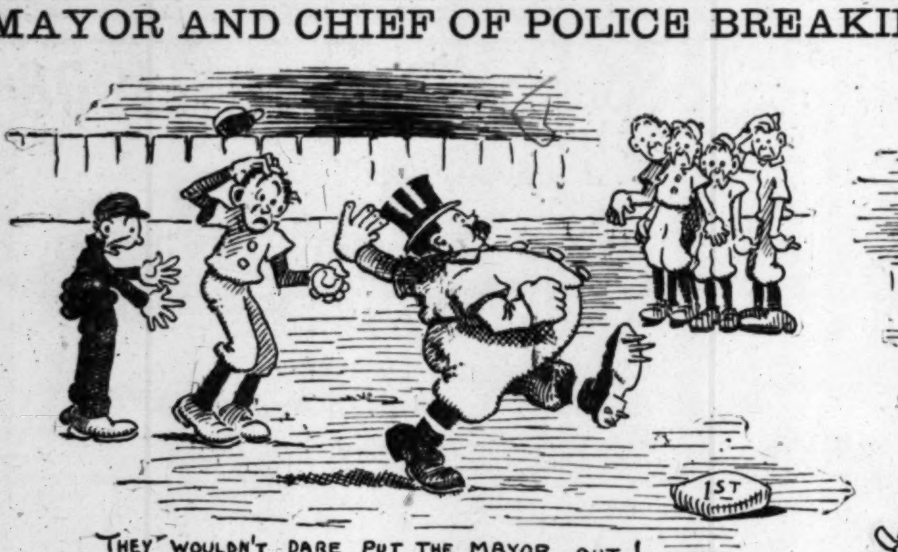
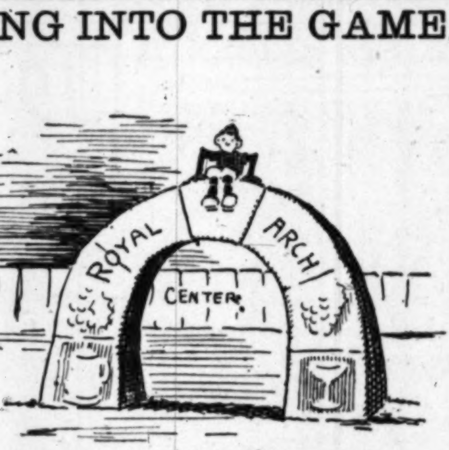
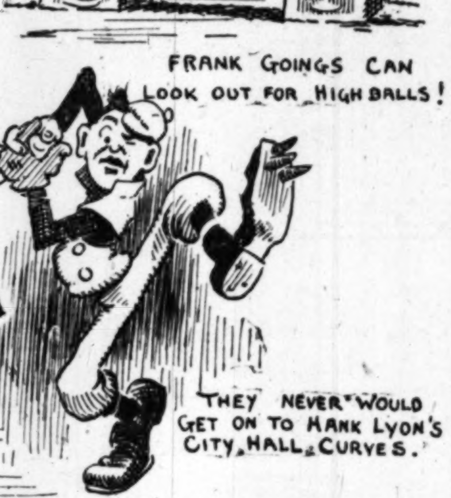
MAYOR AND CHIEF OF POLICE BREAKING INTO THE GAME.

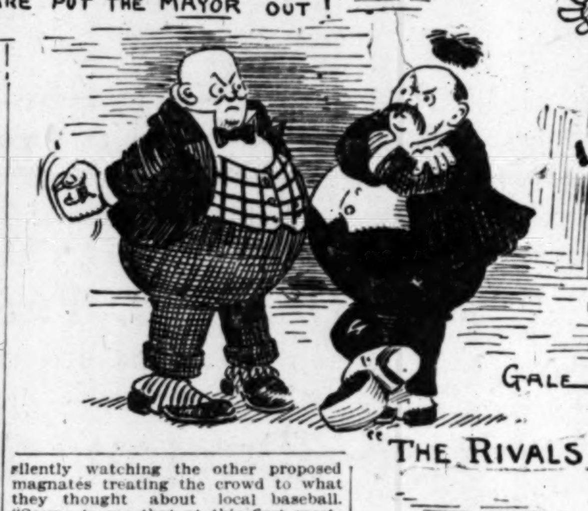


1ST
THEY WOULDN'T DARE PUT THE MAYOR OUT!

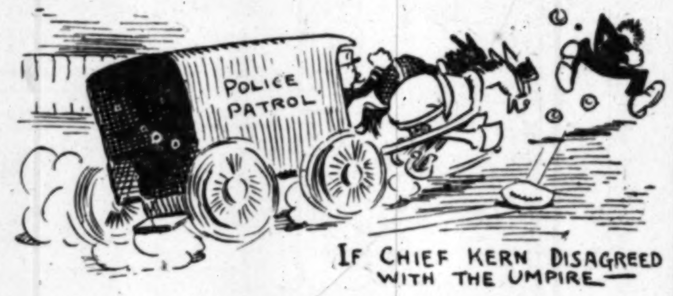




FRANK GOINGS CAN LOOK OUT FOR HIGH BALLS!
THEY NEVER WOULD GET ON TO HANK LYON'S CITY HALL CURVES.



"THE RIVALS."



IF CHIEF KERN DISAGREED WITH THE UMPIRE—

BALL PLAYERS KNUCKLE UNDER OFFICIAL THUMB.

"Say, what do ball players do when they ain't playing ball?" asked the Mayor, as he put his feet upon the desk and lit a new cigar. "Can they vote, if they happen to be away on a four weeks' trip North just before election? These are things you have got to show me when you talk about me runnin' a baseball club."

"Well," said Ed Kern, as he reached lovingly up to knock a fly off his gold star, "just leave that to me, and if things don't finish the way they start, I'll load the whole team into the patrol wagon and dump 'em into the Police Station."

"I don't think there is any ordinance covering that," put in Henry Lyon, "and I don't suppose this new Charter Commission knows the difference between a ball team and a horse and buggy. Of course, the real thing that interests me is how many members of our team live in the Seventh Ward."

"Of course, you know," added the Mayor, "that I'm borin' for oil out here in the desert, and when I ain't lookin' out for that, I've got to stay pretty close around the hall and listen to all the hard-luck stories of every one in town, and I guess I must spend about $1900 a month, buyin' tickets for amateur dramatic performances, books, dinky churches and a million other things that any man would throw out into the street if they didn't see him first. I can't give all my time to runnin' a ball team, and some of you other fellows have got to get in."

"That's me," added Charley Fox, "for low balls and high balls and bats are things I've heard of lots of times. I may help a little. One good thing about a ball game is that the license for it ain't $150 per month. I'm in on anything that don't make a noise like that."

"About the first thing we ought to do," declared Lyons, "is to appoint a steerin' committee to take care of Tom Stevens. He has been figurin' on getting a club at Venice himself."

"Let's get him appointed umpire," suggested Frank Goings, who had been silently watching the other proposed magnates treating the crowd to what they thought about local baseball. "Seems to me that at this first meeting we can't do much but talk about what we might do. You know Tom's a good fellow, and was in Jim Morley's club long enough to have some people call him names, and he wouldn't care."

"Speaking about who's going to do the work of looking after our team," said Kern, "when I get on the Board of Public Works I can't go out to the ball ground every day and see if those suits have been to the laundry. Fightin' the Civil Service Commission and looking after garbage and rat-killers and outfall sewers that bust and a hundred other things, will keep me guessin'. Don't count me in on the hard work."

"Nothing for me, either," asserted Goings, "for we are goin' to have another election pretty soon and I got to look around the Seventh Ward. Henry and me have got to get out and see the boys and that gas fight of his ain't done yet, either. Charley says he can't leave Third street except on Sunday. We've got to get a park and bats and balls and suits and a franchise and players and put up a deposit and pay rent and—"

Frank finally stopped for he couldn't hear anything but the noise of his own words. He looked around the room and the other proposed magnates were gazing up at the ceiling and caressing their chins where the whiskers ought to grow. Each man was thinking deeply about the amount of work required to run a ball club, and which one of them would stand for it.

Finally, Danny Shay, who had not spoken before, hit a home run into the death-like stillness by reciting a well-known little poem which begins like this:

"There was once a little hen who had a wooden leg,
She was the best little hen that ever
laid an egg,
She laid more eggs than any hen
upon the farm—"

When he had reached this point every man in the room got up and silently adjourned to Third street and another meeting of the new baseball magnates had passed into history.

FLAG IN LOS ANGELES.

er than second in the league race, except last year, when six of its best players left and went East during the early part of the year. This loss of players so broke up the team that it finished third.

Dillon was born at Normal, Ill., in 1873, and began playing professional ball when he was 19 years old, or in 1894, starting as a pitcher for the Peoria team. He pitched there about a month, near the end of the season. In 1896-97 he played the outfield for the Rockford team of the Western Association, and was out of the game in 1898. In 1899 he began the season on first base for the Scranton team, but on July 4, was sold to the Buffalo team. Several months later he was sold to Pittsburgh, and in the spring of the next year, 1900, was sold to Detroit. He remained with that team until the fall of 1902, when he came to Los Angeles, and has remained here ever since as captain of the local team, except in 1904, when he played first base for the Brooklyn team of the National League.

Dillon has played in all kinds of leagues and knows the tricks of all kinds of players. He has made the Los Angeles team what it is and has certainly produced one team in the league in which there are no rows and no petty jealousies. Besides being a fine captain, he is a great batsman and can play almost any position on the team. While not a hard batter he hits at the right time and plays "heady" baseball all the time. The fans can rest assured that as long as he remains at the head of the team, it will be in the front rank of any Coast League.

WALTER CARLISLE.

By long odds, the star of the champions is Walter Carlisle, the sensational left fielder, who has been sold to the Boston Americans for $2500. He was born in England in 1881 and came to American when he was two years old. He played amateur ball around Minneapolis for three years as a first baseman and then went into professional ball for the Miller team as a left fielder in 1902. He played left field for the Crookston, Minn., team in 1903-1904. This team went on the rocks in August, 1904, but a month before the crash, Carlisle left and joined the Rock Island team, where he played left field in 1904-5-6. After the season closed there September 22, he came to Los Angeles and finished the season, Manager Berry having bought him for $300. He has been with the Champions all this year and his work has been a marvel to the fans of the Coast. He is a fancy, sensational fielder, a fast man on the bases and when it comes to hitting home runs, he is a wonder, having made three in one day in San Francisco about six weeks ago. It is not necessary to attempt a description of his fielding for every one who has seen the league games this year knows what he has done. Boston certainly gets a jewel in him, for he can hit, field, run and play almost any place. The Champions will look a long time to find his equal.

WILLIAM DENTON GRAY.

William Denton Gray, the best pitcher of the team, and the best and most reliable in the league, was born in Houghton, Mich., in December, 1878. He played his first semi-professional ball in Arizona in 1896, and appeared in all parts of the Territory for the next five years. He came to the Los Angeles club in 1902, and played here until after ex-Manager Morley "released" the players, following the earthquake in San Francisco last year. Thinking he was free, Gray went to the Pennsylvania outlaw league, and pitched several months for the York and Johnstown teams, and also for the Cumberland team of the P-O-M League. He returned here the latter part of last season, and has pitched regularly every week this year. Why he was not drafted this year is as great a mystery as "Why is an umpire?" Early in his experience here he was nicknamed "Dolly," and the title has stuck to him ever since.

CURTIS BERNARD.

One of the stars of the team of stars is Curtis Bernard, who was born in Parkersburg, W. Va., in 1879. His first real appearance was on the college team of the Blackburn University at Carlinville, Ill., in 1895-1896. He began his professional career with the Fall River, Mass., team as a catcher in 1897. In 1898 he played center field for the Albany team, and in 1899 he held the same position for the Buffalo team. In 1900 and 1901 he was with the New York Nationals, and played every position except that of pitcher. He did not play in 1902, but in 1903 joined the Toledo team. He came to the Los Angeles club in 1904, and has been here since. Local fans know his work well. He leads the batting order, and is fast on his feet; a fair hitter, good at sacrificing, is a fine base runner, and can play any position acceptably. For several months he has been on second base, owing to Brashear being switched to third base. The only thing that keeps him out of the big leagues is that he is not thought to be a hard hitter.

CLIFFORD CRAVATH.

Clifford Cravath, who has been sold by the Los Angeles team to the Boston American, was born in San Diego in 1882, and began his semi-professional ball career in Santa Ana about six years ago as a catcher. Ex-Manager Morley of the local team dug him out of the bushes at Santa Ana and brought him here as a right fielder, and he has been here ever since. He has played as catcher, right fielder and first base with great credit to himself and hits home runs as easily as other people make two-baggers. He is a fast man on the bases, and under Dillon's coaching has developed into a fine ball player. The local fans will certainly miss him, but the pitchers that will be in the league next year will be glad to see him go, for he is a terror to them, and has made many twirlers regret his appearance at bat.

WALTER NAGLE.

Of all the players the champions have ever had, none has given more satisfaction than Pitcher Walter Nagle, who confesses under pressure that his middle name is Harold. He don't look or act like it, for he is not only one of the best pitchers the team has ever had, but can play many positions and bats like a wild man when he is not pitching. He was born in Santa Rosa, in this State, in 1880, and in 1900 began playing semi-professional ball with the Santa Rosa team as third baseman and left fielder. He plays ball because he likes the game, and not because he "has to," for he is a bank clerk by profession, and worked in a bank for several years before going into baseball. In the first part of 1905 he played with the Haywards team, and came here in October of that year to pitch for Los Angeles. He has always been considered by many fans as the best pitcher in the league, and plays almost all positions with equal ability, and is a good batsman and fielder.

GEORGE ELLIS.

George William Ellis, the young fielder of the Champions, was born in Rivera, near Los Angeles, in 1885 and about 1902 began to play regular semi-professional ball with the team of his town as a left fielder. He stayed there until the latter part of 1905, when he joined the Champions and has been here now two years. He has certainly made good with the fans and has had a regular place on the team, since Bernard was taken from center field and put on second base. He is a hard batter when he hits the ball, is a fast, sure fielder and has every chance to make a fine player, being what is called a national player.

WALLACE HOGAN.

Of course, when you speak about "Happy" Hogan, you are talking about one of the most popular ball players on the Pacific Coast. He is always there with the smile that don't come off, and he adds interest to a game by his coaching. "Happy," by the way, is only his stage name, for he was Wallace Bray a few days after he was born at Santa Clara, this State, in 1879. He began playing semi-professional ball in the San Bernardino team of the Southern California league in 1897 and five years later went to Mike Fisher's Sacramento team and stayed there until 1904. Then he was transferred with the team to Tacoma and then transferred again down to Fresno, where he played last year. He was to manage that team, if it had been in the league this year. When the team was kicked out of the league at the end of the season, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and Oakland each took a player, and Hogan fell to Los Angeles. No one has regretted the fall, for he is the goods.

FRANZ HOSP.

Pitcher Franz Hosp is one of the youngest members of the team, for he was born in Cincinnati in 1886. He played semi-professional ball in San Bernardino in 1902 and 1903 and then played in San Diego the three following years. Last spring Manager Berry of the Los Angeles team took his players to San Diego for a match game and they ran up against Hosp as the pitcher of the Griefer team. He did so wel that Berry engaged him and he joined the champions in May of the present year.

BERT DELMAS.

Bert Delmas, who is probably the best shortstop in the league, was born in San Francisco, December 4, 1882. He began playing semi-professional ball with the Healdsburg team in 1900. Two years later he was playing the professional kind with Henry Harris's San Francisco team as a right fielder. He played that position for three months, and then was moved to second base, and in 1903 played second base. In 1904 he played second for the Salt Lake team of the Northwest League, and the next year was at second for the Vancouver team, which was managed by McCloskey, now of the St. Louis Nationals. In 1906 he played third base and shortstop for the Fresno team of the Coast League, and came to the Los Angeles team this year. Talk about "wings!" Delmas has got the right arm for your life, and he has done the best shortstop work that Los Angeles ever saw. He is a single man, and it does seem that the ladies are overlooking something good here.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH.

One of the best that Los Angeles ever had is William Lyman Randolph, who was born in Alameda in 1886. He began playing professional ball with the Oakland team of the Coast League last year and after the earthquake in San Francisco in April and the almost complete disruption of the Los Angeles team, he was loaned to Los Angeles to fill out and finished the season here. He reverted back to Oakland at the end of the season and became so dissatisfied with being on that team this year, that he threatened to leave Oakland. About this time Manager Berry of the Champions became dissatisfied with Pitcher Carnes and a trade was very quickly made for Randolph. Randy does good work with a team that can back him up in fielding and he has given the best of satisfaction here. In 1906 he won twenty-two games and lost fourteen.

BURNS.

One of the artists that Los Angeles will lose this season is Pitcher Burns, who has been drafted by Washington. He was born in San Saba, Texas, in 1880, and after he was old enough to play ball, he was in the amateur ranks for six or eight years in Texas and Arizona. He pitched for two years for the New Mexico Military Institute at Roswell, and appeared in California with the Point Richmond team in 1905 and won thirty-five out of thirty-six games pitched. He began professional ball with the Los Angeles team on June 22, 1906, and has been with the team ever since. His work is away above par and strange to say, he is a good hitter for a pitcher.

ROBERT EAGER.

Robert Joseph Eager, the catcher, is a Native Son and evidently proud of it, having been born in San Francisco in 1879, according to his story. He began playing semi-professional ball in 1898 with the Koenig team of his native town, as a catcher. He was with that team the following year and in 1900 and 1901 played with Marysville as right fielder and change catcher. In 1902 he was captain of the Coquille City team in Oregon, which won the pennant of the Coos County League. He stayed with Coquille until July 4, when the league blew up with a bang and then Bobby came to the Los Angeles team, where he has been ever since. He is a good catcher, a fairly good pinch hitter, is full of ginger at all times and is a good man to have on any team, on account of his coaching alone.

NORMAN BRASHEAR.

One of the most valuable men on the team is Norman Cobb Brashear, who is known as "Kittie." He admits that he was born in Mansfield, O., in 1879, and just about looks it. He began to play the semi-professional kind of bush ball around Chicago in 1898 and commenced his real career in 1899 with one month's play as pitcher for the Cedar Rapids team and the same year went to pitch for the Louisville team. In 1900 he was with the Fort Wayne, Ind. team, on first base and in 1901 played first base for Kansas City, which won the Western League pennant that year. In 1902 Brash was with the St. Joe team on first and in 1903 he was on first for Oakland and later was traded for Schwartz, the dicker being with the Seattle team. In 1904 he came to Los Angeles and was used as a utility man that year and the next year he was placed at short. Last year he was with the team until after the earthquake in San Francisco, when the then manager Morley released a lot of the players and with others. Brashear went to the outlaw Pennsylvania League and played third base for the Altoona team until he returned here during the latter part of the season. For his 154 games last year his batting average was .290. This year he played second base until Third Baseman Jud Smith was injured and Brash has been on third for the past two months. He can play almost any position and is a very valuable man on any team.

MANAGER HENRY BERRY.

Henry Berry, manager of the champions, was born in Mendocino county, California, thirty-eight years ago. He engaged in various enterprises in his younger days, and has an idea that he was a real ball player. He lived near Fresno for a number of years in his salad days, and in 1896 went to the Klondyke gold country with his brother, Clarence, and there the two men made enough money out of their gold claims to break the backs of a dozen elephants, if they would try to carry it.

Henry came to this city six or seven years ago and bought a billiard room on Spring street, near Second street, and when the Los Angeles ball team needed a manager last year, Berry was there, and it is said that before he entered the game as an owner he had money enough to stand for even a losing team. He has looked out for the business end of the club, and, with Dillon's assistance, has won the pennant in his second year. He is a prince of sporting men, and will surely make the team win more pennants.

JUDSON SMITH.

Jud Smith, the regular third-baseman of the Champions, is a native of Brighton, Mich., where he was born in 1872. He began his professional career twenty years later as third-baseman for the Butte team of the Montana State League, and since then has been a member of no less than six pennant-winning teams, in Jacksonville, Ill., in 1894; Toronto in 1896; Syracuse in 1897; Providence in 1900; Portland in 1905 and, Los Angeles in 1907. He played with Cincinnati in 1893 and with Jacksonville in 1894 and 1895. He played the greater part of 1896 with Toronto and then finished the season with the Pittsburgh team. He started in 1897 with the Syracuse team and finished the season with Washington. In 1890 he was with Toronto; 1900 with Providence and 1901 with Syracuse, playing the last month of the season with Pittsburgh. The next year he went to the Toledo team and came here in 1903 and stayed until 1905. In the latter part of that year he was suspended with Tim Flood for assaulting Umpire "Slats" Davis and was traded to Portland, where he played third base last year. This season he came again to Los Angeles. After coming here in 1903, he studied dentistry and now has a good practice in this city. He is a fine third baseman, being especially good on bunts and his fielding and batting is good enough to keep him on the best team in the league. Several months ago he broke his shoulder blade in a game and had to retire for this year.

LESSON IN ARITHMETIC.

SPLACEMENT UNDER THE UNIVERSAL RULE.

RT E. CARSE, official meas- the South Coast Yacht herein explains how to cal- ement under the univer- rule. The rule says: "At the length of the load into five equal parts, find numbered cross-sections in from the areas in square and load water-line approximate displacement which will be D in for- ent in cubic feet and not required—and the cube root rule uses is the cube root of of volume of the sub- of the hull. In the ac- sketch the water-line is five equal parts. If it all of these points in a error has been made either the areas or in draught- dotted lines erected on the points midway between 1 5, etc., are next drawn in. they are not dotted lines, made here to distinguish them from the lines first constructed. Since the distances measured up from the base on the original lines were areas of the cross-sections 3, 5, 7, 9, we find by scaling the length of the dotted lines the areas at cross-sections 2, 4, 6, 8, 10.

With the areas of the ten cross-sections a table is formed for convenience in using Simpson's first rule, as follows, viz.: The vertical lines between the base line and displacement curve are called ordinates.

Numbers of ordinates—	Areas or lengths of ordinates.	Simpson's multipliers.	Functions of ordinates.
1	....	1	......
2	.77	4	3.08
3	2.1	2	4.20
4	3.5	4	14.00
5	5.4	2	10.80
6	8.2	4	32.80
7	8.3	2	16.60
8	6.2	4	24.80
9	3.5	2	7.00
10	1.2	4	4.80
11	....	1	......
Total			118.08

If the water-line on the drawing be thirty inches, the original division into five parts made the spacing six inches between ordinates 1, 3, 5, 7, 9, 11. The construction of the remaining ordinates divided this spacing again making it three inches, which is the figure used in completing the calculation.

The total obtained above, 118.08, is multiplied by one-third of three inches, the space between ordinates, which gives us the result 118.08, now called cubic feet of displacement for one-half of the hull, or 236.16 cubic feet, the entire displacement.

To assist in remembering what multipliers to use, note that the number of spaces (in this instance ten,) multiplied by three, equals the sum of the multipliers, which is thirty.

A much shorter, but not so accurate method is to use the four original areas, and not construct the curve of displacement at all; in which case the table would be made up as follows:

1	...	1	.....
3	5.4	4	21.6
4	8.3	2	16.6
5	3.5	4	14.0
6	...	1	...

Six equals interval one-third, equals two; 56.4x2 equals 112.8, which, when multiplied by two, to get both halves of the hull, gives a total of 225.6. This difference will only make a variation in the rating of .3 or .4 of a foot. This is a method for a rough estimate, but is useful up to the point where accuracy is essential.

It is understood that the outside line of the planking is needed for the bounding line in getting the area of the cross sections. The rudder is never included in displacement calculations. This area may be closely estimated by ruling the cross section into squares of one inch or smaller. The planimeter is in general use for this purpose. Its correctness depends upon the degree of accuracy of the operator in tracing over the bounding lines of the figure whose arc is required. When this line is traced round, the area is read direct from the dial and vernier of the instrument.

SAIN'S EARLY HISTORY.

Great Sire of Speedy Racers Was Sold by Jack Cronin for Very Small Feed Bill.

Referring to the telegram in yesterday's issue of The Times concerning the deal on for the sale of the great horse, Sain, by Schreiber, to the Keenes, for a price between $150,000 and $200,000, Richard H. Cole of this city tells an interesting story concerning the early history of Sain, in which the well-known secret-service man, Jack Cronin, plays a prominent part.

Dick Cole states that Sain was brought over from Australia to San Francisco in 1896, as a two-year-old, in company with the famous Foul Shot and Shotgun. They were consigned with the understanding that John D. Spreckels would have the privilege of buying them. All three were raced at the old Bay District track, and Jockey Burlingame, who rode here last winter, was the jockey for Sain. The horse did so poorly that Spreckels gave him the "overlook," and finally he was attached for a feed bill, and the Constable who served the papers was no other than Jack Cronin.

Burlingame was the supposed owner, but he got into a row with "Curly" Brown over some alleged crooked races, and it appears that the ownership of Sain became involved as a result of the fight. Sain was sold at auction, and Barney Schreiber bought him for $2400, and the racing world knows what Sain has been since then as a sire. Among others, he is the sire of the crack racers, Dr. Gardner, Horace E. and Nealon, and also Blumenthal, Tony Bonero, Sainrada and Otto Price, that won races here last winter at Ascot.

Foul Shot and Shotgun were sent back to Australia, with some others as cast-offs, and because they were not considered worth buying by Spreckels, and he certainly overlooked three ripe ones when he passed this famous trio by.

Fields for Deer Hunters.

Good news for the deer hunter comes from New Hampshire, where a season has been opened in the southern half of the State; from Montana, where the season has been lengthened fifteen days; from New York, where the season opened two weeks earlier, September 16; from Oregon, where male deer may be shot after July 15, instead of August 15, and from South Carolina, where the season has been lengthened in Dorchester county. Utah's new law permits residents to shoot two deer each in October, but non-residents are not permitted to shoot them at any time. Deer have become a nuisance to farmers in some States, where herds come out of the woods and destroy crops. Bucolic citizens who have thus suffered entertain small respect for the protection laws. For their relief special legislation has this year been passed in Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and New Brunswick, permitting them to be shot for the protection of crops. In Rhode Island crops can thus be protected only under permit of the Secretary of State, while Vermont provides for the payment by the State of damages done by deer. New Brunswick permits the use of shotguns in protecting crops therefrom.

Would Revive Lacrosse.

An effort is being made to revive interest in lacrosse. The game was played here successfully three years ago, and the public were begining to understand and enjoy the match contests when the sport was dropped. E. E. Caister, manager of the Success Automobile Company; A. C. Way, cashier of the First National Bank; Alfred Hayer, H. G. Mines and Dr. Brennan will organize a lacrosse team. Arrangements have been made for practice this afternoon at Fiesta Park. All those who are interested in the game are asked to come to the grounds at 2:30 o'clock.

Golf at Riverside.

A number of local women golfers expect to play in the handicap tournament of the California Women Golfers' Association, to be held at Riverside on Saturday, Nov. 2. An invitation has been extended to all the allied clubs of the association. The tournament will be played on the Victoria Club links, and is the first of the winter season.

To Male Readers of This Paper

DR. TAYLOR
The Leading Specialist.

About two months ago a man came to my offices and told a story of his experiences, which is so typical of what the average patient goes through before coming to me that I wish every man could read it.

In the first place, this man was strong and healthy in appearance and he began by telling me he was never sick in bed for a single day as far back as he could remember. His symptoms were lack of ambition, vim, energy and power to concentrate his mind. He felt conscious of a state of physical imperfection which embarrassed him and made him feel unfit to enjoy society, and, as he expressed it, he was "played out all over."

Questioning him as to what he thought caused his trouble, he admitted excesses in early life, and confessed to a slight disorder contracted some five years past. By advice of well-meaning friends he tried prescriptions which helped to a certain point, but failed to go beyond that. His next step was to consult a doctor, and he sought one with a large general practice and good reputation. The doctor cheered him with the assurance that he would undertake the treatment of his case, asked him a few questions and prescribed medicine, both for local and internal use. For the first few weeks he improved so much that he discontinued his visits to the doctor to stop the drain on his purse. A little later he had a relapse which was very discouraging, especially as he felt the weakness coming on which caused pains in the back, sleeplessness and general lassitude. He sought help from a specialist for disorders like his own, but soon realized that he was in incompetent hands. The specialist, who had been in business but a short time, closed his offices, and went away. Following that the sufferer was attracted by the claims of a doctor who told him that he must get next to Nature, and that Nature was sewed up just inside of his electric belt. It cost him about $100 to find out that electricity would not help a bit.

When All Others Fail

In a very skeptical and hopeless frame of mind this man came to me. I examined him in a manner that he admitted he was never examined before. I found the exact cause of the whole trouble, explained it fully to him, together with my plan of treatment, and guaranteed him a perfect and permanent cure, and offered to let him PAY WHEN CURED. Last week he said he felt as good, sound and healthy, as strong in vigor as he ever had in his life.

I proved to this man that the whole secret of my success in curing WEAKNESS, VARICOCELE, HYDROCELE, CONTRACTED DISEASES, CONTAGIOUS BLOOD POISON was knowing definitely what treatment was indicated and how to give it. There is no mystery about my methods or my medicines. My knowledge of Men's Ailments is superior because I have devoted all my time for the last twenty years to this one branch of human machinery.

Consultation Free

To men whose years are being lived in physical imperfection as a result of dissipation, whose lives are less than full and perfect lives, and who yearn to be the men that nature meant them to be, I extend an earnest and sympathetic offer of consultation and advice. My experience among men and in treating men's diseases places me in position to be helpful to you. In consulting me you will be asked no foolish and embarrassing questions. All information given you will have a direct and vital bearing. If your symptoms are of no consequence I will tell you so. If treatment is needed I will tell you its cost, and the time that will in all probability be required to effect a complete cure. If I feel any doubt as to my ability to cure you, I will not take your case at all. I will not urge my services upon you. If you see fit to place your case in my care, every promise I make shall be fulfilled. If you do not, you will be welcome to the information and suggestions given, and will be invited to call for further consultation absolutely free at any time.

Those finding it inconvenient or impossible to call in person are at liberty to write a full and complete description of their symptoms, and their letters will receive my prompt and careful attention. All consultations strictly confidential.

My best reference is:
Not a Dollar Need Be Paid Until Cured

No Stimulants for Weakness

My success in permanently curing that condition commonly known as "weakness" fully demonstrates the absolute correctness of my method of treatment, which is a method employed by myself alone. I do not stimulate the functions to temporary activity by the use of strong internal tonics. This is the course commonly pursued by both general practitioners and specialists, and is a treatment that cannot possibly result in a permanent cure. "Weakness" is merely a symptom of chronic inflammation in the prostate gland brought on by excesses, early dissipation or by the improper treatment of some contracted disease. A complete and radical cure is, therefore, a question of restoring the prostate gland to its normal state, and this I accomplish promptly and completely without the use of internal remedies. My treatment is a local one entirely. It is original and scientific, and has been proven absolutely effective by thousands of tests. I am convinced that by no other methods can full and permanent restoration of strength and vigor be accomplished.

No Surgery for Varicocele

Many men afflicted with varicocele are endangering their general health, their manly powers and even life itself by allowing the disorder to remain uncured. Varicocele results from partial paralysis of the delicate nerve fibers that have a part in controlling local circulation of the blood. The muscular coatings of the veins being deprived of nervous communication and control, become inactive, weaken and relax. The blood vessels expand from the pressure within, the circulation in the parts becomes sluggish, and frequently stagnant pools form in little nooks and pockets that constantly enlarge as the relaxation continues. The possibility exists that clots may form in these stagnant pools and then pass out into the general circulation. Should one find lodgment in a valve of the heart, the result might be instant death, or should it be carried to the brain, general paralysis would follow.
I guarantee to cure varicocele in one week by a method that involves no cutting. No other physician employs a like method, and so thorough is my work that there need not be the slightest fear of a relapse into the old condition.

No Cutting for Stricture

My method of curing Stricture is new and entirely original. No cutting or dilating. The stricture is dissolved and completely removed and all affected membranes thoroughly cleansed.

No Operation for Piles

I positively cure every case of Piles I treat. No operation whatever. The cure accomplished by mild and gentle measures, no matter how severe or how long standing the case may be.

Less Time in Curing Contracted Disorders

I have reduced the time required for curing contracted disorders about one-half. This is an important achievement. It replaces danger with safety. It forstalls chronic complications. It removes the infection and inflammation before that vital center, the prostate gland, can become involved. To many men it means the difference between perfect health and a lifetime of misery and functional weakness. My method is mine alone. My treatment is original. In some features it resembles the ordinary. In its chief essentials it is different. In results it is entirely different. It is safe, prompt and thorough.

No Minerals for Specific Blood Poison

Others dose the system with mineral poisons, scarcely less dangerous than the disease itself. The best they hope to do by this treatment is to keep the disease from manifesting its presence upon the surface of the body. Under my treatment the entire system is cleansed. The last taint of virus is destroyed. Every symptom vanishes to appear no more. I employ harmless blood-cleansing remedies. They are remedies heretofore unknown in the treatment of this disease. They cure by neutralizing and absolutely destroying the poison in the system. Such cures cannot be other than complete and permanent.

Consult Me When Others Fail

You will note my examination is different, my apparatus is new and up-to-date, and I always make it a point to explain every case exactly as I find it, so that the patient may understand his own condition and how I expect to cure him.

Consultation and Advice Free

I especially invite those who have deep-seated and chronic disorders, to call and be examined. CONSULTATION AND EXAMINATION ARE FREE, and do not obligate you to engage my services.

Suffering Men...
Let Me Ask You a Few Reasonable Questions And State a Few Simple Facts.

You know you should not be your own physician, and when you feel the need of help and advice, is it not your duty to choose a doctor as you do a grocer or a butcher, or any one who supplies what the law terms the necessities of life?

If you believe that "practice makes perfect"—that "experience is the best teacher," why should I not enjoy preference over others, in view of my many years' untiring and steadfast devotion to the diseases of men?

Give these facts careful and serious thought.

Call on me and I will gladly explain to you your trouble and my method of curing it. All this costs you nothing. Remember, my centrally located offices afford the strictest privacy. My terms are reasonable and can be arranged to your convenience. All medicines are furnished free from my splendid laboratory.

SPOILED SPORT.

CHANGE HABITS DO THE QUAIL.

Initial Cannonade Leaving Mark on Shooting

Disinclination of Birds to Lay Bothers Hunters.

Little to Be Hoped from the Near-By Resorts.

Quail hunters are unable to understand why the bags should be so light and sport as poor as it has been during the week in view of the admitted plenty of game, and favorable early rains, together with an abundance of cover.

Dozens of parties have scoured the country adjacent to town with surprisingly poor results. They say the birds are widely scattered; bands are hard to find, and harder still to do anything with when once located. The birds run before the dog's points much more than usual, and flush wild when found in bunches. They usually continue into the inaccessible hills where there is no use to follow.

The terrific bombardment given the quail on the first and second day and the heavy growth of brush everywhere are generally blamed by the hunters for the existing state of things. Before the season opened there was hardly an acre of the washes that did not have some quail in it.

The few hunters who report limit bags and good sport in nearly every instance either took long trips out of town, or struck some spot that was not frequented. They report the birds' behavior quite normal, which bears out the too much shooting theory.

Quail soon learn about a gun, and how to avoid it. Their natural tendency is to rise in large droves, after running until hard pressed, and unless a great commotion is made behind them, they will alight in a bunch and continue running away from what scared them. Realizing this, experienced quail hunters make it a point to shoot, yell, and generally terrorize a flock at the rise so as to cause them to split and scatter, knowing that the fowl will pitch headlong into the big bushes, and there stick like burrs until literally kicked out. The more they are shot over the better, generally, but this year it has been hard to get the birds to lay at all in some places, in others to get them up.

AUTOMOBILE IN PLAY.

The general use of the automobile has played havoc with the quail by making places fifty or more miles away almost as accessible as those within an hour's drive. Many hunters have driven their machines as far as Perris, Elsinore, Temecula, Escondido, and other remote points in San Diego county, while Saugus, Lang, Palmdale and Antelope Valley points until the last heavy rain, were visited nearly every day.

The plenty of birds is attested by their being found in places where for several seasons they had been almost unknown. The brush has grown up and given cover where it was sparse.

Users of dogs have found the cactus very bad this fall. Experienced dogs do not mind it because they know how to avoid it, but the puppies keep hunters busy extracting the spines from their faces and feet. Thus far no serious accidents to persons have been reported, which is remarkable considering the number of comparatively inexperienced men and boys who rented guns.

The best average sport has been reported from San Diego county. The brush about Elsinore has made bagging the limit difficult in many places, but on the other hand there are plenty of spots where a good shot can get all the law allows in an hour.

Wildomar is a favorite ground. About Hemet in Riverside county is another stretch of good quail country. Hemet and Perris have been the scenes of many a quail shooting match in days gone by when the winner had to down 300 or more to beat his competitor, who was only a few birds behind.

Many hunters from San Bernardino and Riverside find good shooting along the Cucamonga foothills, the birds being very fat from a plenty of grain and grapes for dessert every day.

NEWHALL POOR.

Shooting around Newhall has disappointed many, better sport being enjoyed farther on toward Santa Paula. When the roads become a little better the run up into Antelope Valley by motor car from here will become popular again. It assures the quail limit, and is about a five hours' run at reasonable speed into good shooting. Sometimes birds can be found this side.

Gunners after a good shoot will make no mistake going to Capistrano or Oceanside, both of which are accessible by automobile. The rolling hills which rise from the ocean backward into the country for miles, are well covered and alive with quail at present, none failing to get the limit there provided they can shoot.

Later on the Simi no doubt will afford better shooting than it did on the first when too much hunting played havoc with the birds, as many as thirty guns being out around Moorpark, mostly Los Angeles men, who had come in automobiles. Such things as stealing points over other men's dogs, and other unsportsmanlike acts were reported.

The park board has made a ruling, and there now is an ordinance forbidding shooting in Griffith Park. As a result, deputies are patrolling the hills, and those who offend are to be arrested. There are plenty of quail in the park, but it is hilly, the hunting is not easy, and the birds, therefore, are quite well protected by nature without the deputies' aid.

HIGH SCHOOL FIVE WINS.

San Fernando Loses Third Straight Game to Los Angeles Team by Large Score.

The Los Angeles High School boys basketball team defeated the San Fernando High boys, on the local High School's grounds, by a score of 45 to 20, yesterday afternoon.

The Fernando lads played a plucky game, but at no time was the result of the game in doubt. The Los Angeles boys were much larger than the country High School lads, and showed a better knowledge of the game.

Bristol, of the local team, played the star game and scored most of the points for his team. He made several long baskets in the first half.

Potter sprained his ankle in a recent practice game with Poly, which interfered with his running, but he played a good game.

The score at the end of the first half was 30 to 10 in favor of the local school.

The San Fernando five has not been very successful, this year, and lost three games played.

The teams played twenty minute halfs. V. Rogers acted as umpire, and L. Waite as referee.

BOWLING TOURNAMENT.

Series of Games to Last During the Week in Which Best Bowlers Are to Appear.

A bowling tournament, beginning Moday, October 28, and to last two weeks, for two-man teams, is to be played at Morley's Broadway alleys. Each team must play three games, and may play at any time after the opening of the tournament. The total pins count toward winning.

Two men who have played as a team in the tournament are barred from again entering as a team in competition, but each man may bowl as often as he choose with a new team-mate each time, and paying a new entrance fee each time.

The entrance fee will be 50 cents for each man in advance, and will be divided at the rate of 40, 30, 20 and 10 per cent. to the teams having the greatest number of pins.

HARD TO CATCH.

GOLD BUTTONS FOR ANGLERS.

ROD AND REEL COMMITTEEMEN FIX NEW WEIGHT SCALE.

Special Golden Star Trophy for Limit Catches—Ten Ounces Maximum for Rod Allowed by Rules. San Francisco Fishermen Barred from Competing for Prizes.

The Button Tournament Committee of the Southern California Rod and Reel Club has decided to adopt a new method of conducting the competition by dividing local fishing into only two classes, consisting of alongshore varieties, whose maximum weight is under fifteen pounds, and the "outside" kinds, scaling over that figure.

The committee has agreed upon three buttons as sufficient to cover all branches of local angling for this year, and has approved designs calling for two general types of button, with two variations of one. They will be known as the "alongshore" or "inside" button; the "trolling" or "outside" button, and the "gold star special" or "record" button.

The committee determined upon the formation of a subsidiary light tackle class, with an entrance fee of $1, so as to make the button competition self-supporting.

Four classes were made for the inside competition, and weights fixed as follows:

Corbina—Blue "alongshore" button for all of six pounds weight or over; "gold star special" for all of eight and one-half pounds or over.

Spotfin croaker—Alongshore, nine pounds; special, twelve pounds.

Yellowfin—Alongshore, four pounds; special, seven pounds.

Rock bass — Alongshore, seven pounds; special, twelve pounds.

Half a dozen classes are recognized in the trolling competition, any listed game fish of fifteen pounds weight or over being eligible, whether caught from a boat or a wharf.

For tuna of either variety, a red trolling-button will be awarded for all of forty pounds or over up to sixty, which will entitle the angler to the golden star special trophy. The same weights govern with white sea bass. On black sea bass the scale was set purposely high, minimum being 150 pounds and maximum for special, 400.

On albacore the special limit was put at fifty pounds, and the red trolling minimum at thirty-five. Weights on yellowtail are thirty pounds for the red, and forty for the special. Striped bass also were included in the list with a golden star limit of twenty-five and a red minimum of ten pounds.

TACKLE REGULATIONS.

Rod restrictions that would not shut out fair light-tackle rod of the present type and still would permit of a little extra weight in lengthening the tip were formed. The entire rod, butt and all, with all the butt caps, and appurtenances that go with it, were limited to ten ounces and a minimum of six feet. Any of the Catalina rods which are in general use will fit these specifications. They will allow of an ounce more weight being put into the butts.

A standard nine-thread line of from eighteen to twenty pounds breaking strain is required. A broken rod before or after gaffing the fish disqualifies.

The button competition will be open to all members of the light-tackle division, whether Southern California residents or not. The next tournament will be open only to members who are residents of Southern California, and only fish caught from Santa Barbara south to the Mexican line will be eligible to entry—no more San Francisco striped bass.

Alhambra Quits Ahead.

ALHAMBRA, Oct. 26.—The basketball game, scheduled to be played here today between teams of Alhambra High School and Polytechnic High School of Los Angeles, was interrupted by the rain. Only the first half was played. It resulted in a score of 18 to 7 in favor of Alhambra. Williams, forward for Alhambra, made ten out of eighteen points.

SQUID THE CAUSE.

YELLOWTAILS MAKE RECORD.

PREVALENCE OF SQUID ON THE COAST CAUSES BIG RUN.

Alongshore Anglers Find No Sport in Other Branches of Fishing—One Goodly Spotfin Reported from San Pedro, but Corbina Have Gone Off Watch.

Among alongshore anglers the chief topic of conversation during the week has been the phenomenal run of yellowtail at Redondo, breaking all records for one day at that point, which always has borne a good name among the handliners for being a good place to catch these fine game fish.

Encouraged by the glowing reports of sport Tuesday, many light-tackle artists hied themselves to the city of three wharves every succeeding day, but the big run ceased as suddenly as it began, the shifting of the squid school being chiefly responsible.

Stormy weather all week put an end to all fishing, but the yellowtail freak invasion, which sufficed to yield a few big fellows every day of the week. Many were pitched back dead into the sea. The yellowtail have been scarce all summer.

Trolling off Redondo promises to be so good that many local light-tackle enthusiasts have chartered launches for today and will chance rough weather outside in hope of locating the school. There will be no use for a rod-and-reel fisherman to go to the wharf, inasmuch as the handliners expect to hold that down in force.

In the track of the yellowtail are traveling bonita, albacore and other varieties of game fish. Rare sport awaits those fortunate enough to locate the squid school. Anglers in skiffs had great fun catching the yellowtail during the week, drifting about a hundred yards or so from the wharf head and letting the fish tow them about.

The corbina run which set in last week has played itself out and since the storm no sport in this line has been reported. Croaker angling in the bay has been considerably below grade also, about the only decent one reported for days being an eight-and-three-quarter-pounder landed opposite the cannery on the San Pedro side last Sunday by A. T. Tuttle. The fish was a spotfin and twenty-six inches in length.

Jack smelts are biting freely since the rains and another invasion of San Pedro Bay by kingfish has taken place. There is small chance of catching croakers now that these voracious little fellows are about.

Fishermen are having great fun with the halibut, which are plentiful at Redondo and other points near by. They usually bite well in winter.

YACHTING NOTES.

Robert MacIntyre says of the America cup races: "Sir Thomas Lipton has come to look upon himself as a life challenger for the cup. It may be urged that Lipton evidently was sick of the business after his experience of 1903; but he was not. It was the English yacht designers who had had enough. They looked upon the task of designing a winner as hopeless and it was their disinclination to attempt a design that deterred Sir Thomas from challenging."

Since Adele, a Canadian-designed boat, defeated the two English efforts, and later was so easily vanquished by Seneca, it is not supposed the British designers are any more reassured. Seneca is the first American racing machine to be designed under the universal rule, and a remarkable fact is that she came with a hundredth of a foot of her rating.

On the Atlantic Coast, Queen, a big schooner, was the sensation of the year. She defeated Ingomar so decisively as to leave no doubt which is the better boat. Ingomar was sailed by that veteran of professional skippers, Charley Barr, while Roger Maxwell, owner of Queen, and an amateur sailor, handled his own boat.

Considering the actual performances of the sonderclass fleet sent to Germany this year, Americans have reason to be proud of it. The defeat of the boats was due to a lack of knowledge of local conditions, rather than sailing power or seamanship, and a careful review of each of the three races reveals many good things for the American boats. For instance, in the second round of the first race, and on a windward leg, Spokane gained a minute on Wittlesbach. This on a three-mile run is remarkable, but not enough to win, for the German boat finished a winner by thirty-nine seconds. And there are plenty more such instances.

On the Pacific Coast, the Valkyrie-Discovery race at San Francisco was the biggest event of the year. Instead of being a series of three races, just one contest decided the fate of the challenge cup. Some yachtsmen believe it would have been better to have raced on three separate days over different courses to decide which was the better boat under all conditions. Valkyrie in a gale of wind and a mountainous sea, and Valkyrie in a comfortable breeze in smooth water might have fared differently.

On the Pacific Coast, Columbine undoubtedly is the fastest thing of her inches. Of course, she is a cheater on measurement, having a greater racing length than her water-line measures. Early in the season it was the opinion of experienced yachtsmen that she was merely a light-weather boat. She has very little under body and displaces considerably less than either Monsoon or Mischief II., against which she was raced most. No one thought for a moment that Mischief I. could do anything with her in a light air, but that gallant old craft managed to show Columbine the way to Vincente in the Santa Barbara ocean race, and the wind was so light that it was hard to find.

Canadians feel very badly over Seneca's easy victories in the cup races at Rochester. They insist the jib and mainsail boat has been over developed into a mere racing machine, and are demanding more stable boats. Cutters and schooners are mentioned, just about as they were in America's cup races thirty years ago. This is in contrast with the position in the Seawanhaka cup races a few years ago. The Yankee tars did not rave over changing the rig of the racing class then, simply sawed wood, until they got a better boat.

The trans-Pacific race to Honolulu next June is attracting a great deal of attention. Up at Seattle Ortona, a cruising auxiliary yawl, has been built for John Graham for the expressed purpose, it is said, of entering in this race. She is from designs by Mower of New York, and great things are expected of her. At Honolulu, $12,000 was raised by popular subscription for a craft to be built there. In Los Angeles there is lots of talk of building a new boat for the race, but nothing definite has yet been done.

H. C. ROYER, M.D.,
402 S. Spring, Los Angeles.

I have just had twenty-seven (27) teeth extracted by Dr. Schiffman. Some of them were badly ulcerated. The most delightful and pleasant sensation imaginable. Didn't hurt a bit. If you want your teeth extracted, I recommend his work and kind treatment to the public.
MRS. JAMES BAILEY,
1957 Santee Street.

Dr. Schiffman extracted two lower wisdom teeth for me without pain. It didn't hurt a bit. Dentists in San Francisco, Portland and San Pedro were afraid to extract them.
JAMES RUST,
Agent Pacific Steamship Co.

Couldn't imagine anything nicer than having a tooth extracted by Dr. Schiffman's method.

PERSONAL—
PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE,
305½ S. SPRING ST., near Third.
THE CELEBRATED RELIABLE PALMIST AND ASTROLOGER.
A resident of Los Angeles for 24 years, and whose work is known throughout this entire land, and who has made a life study of PALMISTRY AND ASTROLOGY, has convinced hundreds of the best intellects and persons in all walks of life that HIS REMARKABLE READINGS AND PREDICTIONS FOR FUTURE EVENTS IN THEIR LIVES ARE UNPARALLELED.
PROF. ALTHOUSE'S readings, which are thorough and scientific, have nothing in common whatever with the fictitious readings of illiterate, unreliable humbug palmists, astrologers, psychics, fortune tellers, and those who, THROUGH TRICK METHODS, CLAIM TO TELL YOUR NAME, etc., etc., after you yourself have written the information—who scarcely know one line or mount from the other, and who, by their disgraceful readings, drag these useful sciences into the mire of fortune telling and fraud. PROF. ALTHOUSE is not actuated by any feeling of ill-will toward any reader who may be GENUINE (for he believes all RELIABLE readers should be encouraged;) but he will—in the future, as in the past—denounce humbug work whenever and wherever he can.
A SATISFACTORY AND ABSOLUTELY CORRECT reading can only be had from one who has thoroughly mastered the laws of these wonderful sciences, through years of critical study of planetary influences on the lines of the hand and in the Horoscope, combined with large experiences, trained judgment, etc. The palm shows diseases, love, marriage, divorce, deaths, money, investments, changes, talents, travels, etc., etc., and many other things which cannot be mentioned here.
WITH EACH PALM READING THERE IS ALSO AN ASTROLOGICAL READING.
PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of the profession, having read—FROM LIFE—more celebrated people than any other reader. He does not deceive the public in this respect. HIS READINGS, TOO, MUST IN NO WISE BE CLASSED WITH THOSE OF ANY OTHER READER NOW OPERATING IN THIS PART OF THE COUNTRY, AND HIS SKILLED WORK HAS NO COMPARISON WITH THEIRS WHATSOEVER.
MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK, THE GREAT SINGER, WHOSE HANDS WERE READ AND HOROSCOPE CAST BY PROF. ALTHOUSE, writes and says: "I was greatly surprised to find HOW MANY OF YOUR WARNINGS WERE WELL FOUNDED, and having been prepared for the same, I was not taken unawares. YOUR WARNING regarding an oncoming illness also PROVED A FACT, as not more than ten days later I was at home with a severe attack of la grippe. YOUR READING WAS MOST MARVELOUS."
PAPINTA, actress, writes and says: "EVERYTHING has turned out just as you predicted when reading my hand and horoscope. I think YOU ARE WONDERFUL, and I cannot express myself of what I think about your WONDERFUL TRUE READINGS."
DR. ALEX. J. M'IVOR-TYNDALL, editor Swastika Magazine, writes and says: "Your work along the lines of Astrology and Palmistry is highly spoken of on all sides, and I feel certain that you are able, through your accurate and scientific knowledge of these sciences of human life and culture, to guide and direct to the best possible advantage, the lives of those who apply to you for advice. I wish you every success in your work."
FREDERICK WARDE says: "Your reading of my hands was most satisfactory. Your knowledge and skill in palmistry is REMARKABLE and gave me a much more exalted idea of that science than I have hitherto entertained." LOUIS JAMES, actor, says: "I wish to say that your reading was ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY." PAUL GILMORE, actor, says: "I want to express to you my keen appreciation of your reading. It is by far the most scientific I have ever had." JULIET CROSBY, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Prof. Althouse also read Admiral Schley, Senator Clark, ex-Gov. Pardee, Gen. Chaffee, Baron Rothschild, David Starr Jordan, Joaquin Miller, Ysaye, SOUSA, Edison, Capt. Hobson, Creatore, Caruso, Huntington, Susan B. Anthony, Nance O'Neil, Lillian Nordica, Calve, Julia Marlowe, Modjeska, MME. GADSKI, Sembrich, Jefferson, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Anna Held, Lillian Russell, William Desmond, Blanche Hall, and hundreds of others. These names of NOTED people are merely given because they are PUBLIC persons. It indicates the class of people being read by PROF. ALTHOUSE, together with hundreds of the very best people of Los Angeles—WITH WHOM ALL HIS BUSINESS IS STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL IN EVERY PARTICULAR.
Intelligent, HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED—those capable of appreciating the SUPERIOR QUALITIES OF A FINE READER.

ASTROLOGY AND THE HOROSCOPE.

PROF. ALTHOUSE has also given many years of critical study to, and is an experienced practitioner in, the science of MODERN ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The HOROSCOPE IS DECIDEDLY A GUIDE IN LIFE, showing remarkable things when properly cast for YOU INDIVIDUALLY, from the position of the planets at YOUR BIRTH. It indicates the condition of health, all kinds of diseases, the constitution, how best strengthened, when weak; tells all about love—whom to marry and when, describing the marriage partner, shows deaths, divorce; tells about children, speculation, the best time to invest or to push affairs, and when to hold on to what has been gained; your talents, what best adapted for; your environment; when and where to travel; what to seek and what to avoid; when one will be in danger of limbs, accidents, death, losses, troubles; also of your good periods coming—giving dates of these events for the future; IN FACT, TELLS EVERYTHING ABOUT ONE'S SELF WORTH KNOWING, being in truth one of the best investments the world offers. YOUR HOROSCOPE is also a key to the character of OTHERS, and in this respect can be of the utmost use to you.
SCIENTIFIC PREDICTIONS ON ALL QUESTIONS OF LIFE, for present and future events up to close of life—made by these sciences—with most complete primary and secondary directions (arcs, etc.)—through the trained judgment of PROF. ALTHOUSE—will stagger the senses. BEWARE, HOWEVER, OF UNRELIABLE READERS, and those giving supposed horoscopes of noted persons in the newspapers, but are no horoscopes.
PROF. ALTHOUSE'S wonderful proficiency in hand reading and casting of horoscopes has brought him a large and successful practice. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances.
Readings by mail; send for circular, etc.
Daily and evenings, Sunday 10 to 2.

He tells you what business you are best adapted to and what days and locations are lucky for you. He recognizes none as his superior. This remarkable psychic power has won for him a reputation that has been accorded to but few.

Many people visit a psychic when it is too late to reap the greatest benefits from his advice. It is more important that you have a reading of your present and future life now, and if indications are evil you are warned in time to counteract them. Knowledge of the future is the only safeguard of life, you should learn what is before you. If you are ambitious, if you wish to be a success, Henley, the master adept, will tell you just what the future holds in store for you; he reveals the future in a wonderful manner. He is a wonderful adviser in all affairs of life; he can put you in possession of the correct information you desire so much. MRS. MASSON, the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (Suite 17.)
by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.
The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.
PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in everyday life.
Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill-luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry. WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.
MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

WANTED—
This is the most important message that I have ever penned to ambitious men and women, who want to earn more, and to merchants and manufacturers who desire reliable and truthworthy employees.

Some time ago, at the urgent suggestion of prominent business men, who saw the crying need of desirable employees, and who were too busy to interview from a dozen to fifty applicants in order to secure the employee desired, I established this Employment Information Bureau.

Beginning with one modest room, the demand for my services increased so steadily that my present quarters and a large force of office assistants and outside solicitors became necessary.

Giving my entire personal time to assisting deserving men and women to secure permanent positions at good salaries and to employers who desire experienced, competent assistants in all lines of work, the fame of the Cash system soon spread. Now, we are relied upon by some of the largest and most responsible concerns on the Coast, to furnish them with trustworthy men and women.

BANTAMS READY.

BAKER WILL FIGHT WALSH.

Boys to Contest at Chelsea in Ten Days.

Young Donahue May Leave for West on Tuesday.

Tommy Burns Is Training on Board Ocean Liner.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Harry Baker of San Francisco agrees to box Jimmy Walsh at Chelsea, November 5, and will make 122 pounds, ringside, for the bantamweight championship.

Young Donahue, who had an easy victory over Fred Landers, the San Francisco fighter, at Philadelphia, last night, is due here tomorrow morning, according to a telegram received tonight. Intimate friends say that New York parties are attempting to represent themselves as Donahue's managers, and sending messages to that effect. These are plain, simple fourflushers, for Donahue is under contract with no manager. Club friends and sports here all believe he will leave for Los Angeles within two days, and go through with his Memsic match, as originally made.

Tommy Burns, heavyweight champion, is doing daily training for his fight with Gunner Moir on board the Deutchland, which has the finest gym of any of the ocean liners.

PREPS. DEFEATED.

U.S.C. Boys Beaten by Throop Team at Pasadena, the Score Being Very Lopsided.

U.S.C. preps met their first Waterloo yesterday in a game with the Throop Polytechnic team at Pasadena, the institute eleven defeating their opponents by the decisive score of 17 to 0. The Methodists displayed the fatal error of overconfidence and the mistake cost them the game. Throop started activities with a rush, and scored their first touchdown in six minutes of play. The visitors rubbed their eyes, but the effort was evidently a sham, for the technical lads repeated the dose before full consciousness came to the Methodists.

Taylor, Clay and Blount, who have essayed 'varsity honors since the opening of the season, failed miserably in their intentions toward the Throop defense, and doubtless ended their gridiron ascent yesterday. Wallace at guard and Reiche at quarter, with Ray Lorentzen at half, shared what glory there was for the Methodists.

For Throop Taylor and Bond showed up strong, with Williams making a strong bid for second honors. Coaching has effected wonderful change in the Throop playing, the men showing a deal of improvement over last week's performance against Santa Ana High.

Manager Hunt of U.S.C. has arranged a number of high-school contests for his second team, the schools who have signified their acquiescence being Hollywood, Santa Monica and Whittier High.

Line-up:

Throop.		U.S.C. Preps.
Taylor	R.E.L.	Halloway

PHOENIX WINS AGAIN.

Defeats Douglas Team by Very Close Score—Player Becomes Angry and Throws Bat at Umpire.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TUCSON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Douglas and Phoenix got together today. There was no pepper in the early part of the game, but it wound up with lots of ginger, and 3 to 1 in favor of Phoenix.

Douglas has a good team, and the pitcher, Oram, threw pretty ball, but lost his game in the sixth by making a wild throw. Phoenix scored one run the first inning, and Douglas tallied one in the third. Then it was the Phoenixs' turn in the sixth, when they scored twice, giving them three runs, to which they held throughout the game.

Becker made a two-base hit that gave Phoenix the two runs in the sixth. Barnett of Phoenix, an old Tucson boy, and known as the strongest badger fighter in this section, made some great catches.

"Cy" Young, the only man who made a home run during the tournament, did not pitch his best. Harper made a great hit in the ninth, when he sent the ball over the fence in the direction of third, making, as he thought, a home run. Umpire Wynkoop called foul, but he heard nothing. Harper was almost winded from his hard run when the umpire called him from his seat to bat again. He rebelled, but went, and was struck out. The crowd yelled, wanting the umpire to count the run, which he refused to do, and Harper, wild with rage, threw his bat at the umpire. Some of the rooters are inclined to question the decision, but it went with the majority. Douglas and Tucson will play Sunday. The Phoenix and Tucson game is off. Phoenix is to go home and play a local picked team, and will then play in Douglas Thursday and Friday, Bisbee Saturday and Sunday, and then return home.

HIS CAUSE FOR DIVORCE.

Seattle Man Alleges Wife Practiced Cruelty to Children to Prove Christian Science Theory.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SEATTLE, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Charles Wheeler of the Seattle Hardware Company today began suit for divorce, claiming his wife has neglected their children, sold off their furniture, and borrowed money to give to Christian Scientist leaders.

Wheeler alleges that his wife became a Scientist two years after their marriage, and from that time on became a convert to the theory.

He says in his divorce complaint that his wife allowed the children to go hungry, forbade them enough clothing, and kept them awake to prove that their wants were imaginary.

Wheeler, being hungry, cold and sleepy, took the part of the children, and insisted that Christian Science would not cure their wants. He could not convince his wife, so he asked the court today to give him a divorce and the custody of the children.

HARMONY.

CALL CONFERENCE, SAYS NEWLANDS.

SENATOR SUGGESTS PLAN TO RESTORE CONFIDENCE.

He Believes That Meeting Between Experts in Railroading and Governors of Various States and Members of Public Service Commissions Would Do Much Good.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A great national conference of experts in the financing operation and control of railways with the governors of States and the members of the public-service commissions, was urged as a vital necessity to restore the confidence of investors in the transportation system of the country by Senator Newlands, vice-chairman of the Inland Waterway Commission, in a speech before the University Club here tonight.

President Roosevelt was called upon by the Senator to at once summon such a conference, with the view of arriving at some plan for the harmonious cooperation of the railroads and the representatives of the public in order to assure the operation of all transportation systems for the benefit of the nations as a whole.

Senator Newlands also impressed upon his hearers the importance of a broad scheme for the improvement of the inland waterways, including not only the rivers, but looking to the establishment of a sheltered waterway along the Gulf and Atlantic coasts for the use of steamships of standard draft.

"Confidence in American corporations has been shaken, both here and abroad," said the Senator. "Investors are alarmed and improvements absolutely necessary to the transportation of the country are held up. Congress will never take up this question in any adequate way until instructed by public opinion.

"We should immediately have a conference at Washington devoted exclusively to the transportation question in its broadest aspects. After full debate and deliberation the country will be astonished to find how few the points of difference are between these transportation managers on the one side and the public on the other.

"The nation and the States have knocked together the heads of railroads in such fashion as to make them realize that they are simply public agents, and they will come to such a conference in a much more conciliatory mind than heretofore.

"I believe in constructive rather than in punitive or retaliatory action. We should look to the future and organize a transportation system, embracing both the railways and the waterways, which will enlist the harmonious action of the nation and the States.

"If a proper system were created most of the evils now complained of would disappear. A system of transportation could be easily devised which would enlist the best powers of the States—one which would protect the railway investors, the railway employés, the shippers and the public in their respective rights and the States in all their legitimate powers."

PROMISING.

BOOST BALBOA FOR HARBOR.

Three Counties Interested in Latest Project.

Newport Commerce Chamber Host at Celebration.

Speakers See Bright Future for Beautiful Bay.

A tri-county round-up of local statesmen and hustlers took place yesterday afternoon at Balboa Beach, under the head of a "Harbor Day Celebration." The invitation was handed to the public by the Chamber of Commerce of Newport Beach, but equally interested were the commercial bodies of the counties of Orange, Riverside and San Bernardino.

Notwithstanding the rain that was general over Southern California, keeping the larger part of the crowd away, it is a fact that no rain fell at Newport Beach and Balboa, and a goodly number of guests accepted the invitation.

The launch ride over Newport Bay was a revelation to those who had never taken it before. It is a landlocked harbor, irregular in width, varying from about 400 feet, at the entrance, to about a mile at its widest point, where a junction is formed with the Santa Ana River, and running almost five miles into the mesa. It is flanked on both sides by sightly cliffs, averaging perhaps fifty feet high, and at the upper end opens out into a splendid sheet of water, locally called "the lake," covering at least a square mile.

OLD LANDING AND HUT.

Where the junction is formed with the river, which is a mile or more from the entrance to the bay, is the old ship landing and the ancient hut of its watchman, where vessels unloaded lumber and other materials in the seventies, and took on cargoes of barley.

The whole is one of the most charming scenes conceivable; beautiful to the eye, and sheltered from the sae breezes by the bluffs. At places "the lake" has a depth of twenty-nine feet at low tide, and the average throughout its great length is seven feet. The change in the ocean currents that drove the sand inside within the past quarter of a century, is one of the things unexplainable, but that it can be remedied by the construction of two jetties at the mouth, each of about a half-mile in length, is the opinion of a United States government engineer.

At the dinner, which was elegantly served at Hotel Balboa, many good speeches were fired off, but there was none more pregnant with what the promoters want the public to know than that of aged Capt. A. Boschke, who is at present sojourning with this son in Los Angeles. For forty years Capt. Boschke was in the employ of the government, and he is now 84 years of age, but he has the vigor of a man much younger.

PATRIARCH'S PROPHECY.

It was he who had charge of the first notable improvements in New York Harbor, and it was he who gave to Boston, under government direction, the fine harbor famous everywhere. Coming to this Coast, Capt. Boschke directed the improvements at the Golden Gate, at Oakland and Sacramento. When the San Pedro project was begun he was sent to take charge, and with his own hands made the start for the building of the breakwater. This is the man who said last night:

"Nature has done more for this harbor than for any other I have ever known, and notwithstanding my age, I expect to live long enough to see 100,000 people living here ; just such people as have made Los Angeles a great city. This is the only logical harbor for a naval station on the Pacific Coast, and the time will surely come when the United States government will recognize this fact. In Golden Gate harbor there is not room for the naval fleet to swing at anchor with safety, but here, at the lowest possible cost, can be constructed solid docks to accommodate the entire fleet. It is perfectly marvelous that this nature's harbor had not been discovered many years ago, but the time will soon come when its value will be recognized."

BUSINESS CHIEFS UNITE.

W. W. Wilson, president of the Newport Beach Chamber of Commerce, presided, and at the beginning stated that the purpose of the gathering was to "consider ways and means of converting Newport Bay into Newport Harbor."

Mayor King of Newport Beach welcomed the guests, saying: "It is not for the purpose of showing you our bathing, fishing and shooting, that we invited you here, but for the more important one of considering ways of uniting the interests of the three counties for the development of this splendid harbor."

Col. Finley of Santa Ana said he expected in his day to see Santa Ana the most important suburb of the great harbor city, and the deep harbor dredged to the foot of the bluff at Huntington Beach.

William Scott, president of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce; Supervisor Smith of Orange county, Assemblyman Clyde Bishop of Santa Ana, President Tuttle of the Riverside Chamber of Commerce; E. L. Pearce, president of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce; E. J. Louis, president of the Balboa Beach Investment Company; C. L. Chamberlain, and others, made good speeches in favor of a united effort for accomplishing the purpose aimed at.

A committee was appointed to call a meeting at some future time, to be held at Santa Ana, where an organization will be formed. One of the moving spirits of last night's gathering was Everett E. Chace of this city, who represents the Balboa company.

SOUTH DENIED RELIEF.

Government Will Not Deposit Funds in Return for Warehouse Certificates for Cotton.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Acting Secretary of the Treasury Edwards has declined to deposit government funds in national banks in the South in return for warehouse certificates for cotton stored.

Representative Burleson of Texas made a request for deposits amounting to $10,000,000 to prevent the sacrifice of cotton by its present owners. He took the position that the government should render assistance to the southern planters to avoid the losses, as well as to the banks.

He made the request because the bankers have served notice on owners of cotton warehouses that they will no longer make advances.

Dr. Frederick Munz of Cincinnati was relected president of the National German Epworth League at St. Joseph, Mo., yesterday.

CROOKS EXPECT RICH HARVEST.

Flock to New York to Rob People Who Withdraw Money from Banks.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] New York's financial crisis has aroused the interest of burglars, strong-arm men and crooks in general all over the country.

The word has gone the length and breadth of the land that New York people are drawing their money out of the banks and hiding it under the carpets and back of the ice boxes, in the depths of the pianos, behind pictures, and in other supposedly-safe hiding places. Reports have reached Inspector McCafferty that there is a general movement of crooks in the direction of this city. He has put extra men on duty at the ferries and railroad stations.

The police authorities warn the people to be watchful and keep their money out of sight, and to be careful of window fastenings and locks on doors at night.

STRIKE RIOTS IN YONKERS.

Attempt to Run Cars There Ends in Three Officers and Citizen Receiving Mob Injuries.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

YONKERS (N. Y.) Oct. 26.—As a result of an attempt of the Yonkers City Railway Company to run cars this afternoon, three policemen and a strike-breaker are in the hospital.

Two cars that ran along Riverdale avenue were attacked by a mob and every pane of glass in them was smashed with stones. Two mounted policemen who tried to drive back the rioters were knocked off their horses and finally were rescued by other policemen, who charged into the mobs.

The motorman on one of the cars attacked was struck on the head by stones and knocked unconscious.

He and the two policemen were taken to the hospital. A similar scene was enacted in Warburton avenue. Policeman Kennedy, who tried to restore order, was hit on the head with a stone and severely cut.

After their attack on the cars, the mob tore up the switch poles in the tracks in Warburton and Ashburton and threw them into the water. It is expected that the White Plains Militia Company wil be brought here to restore order.

The attempt to run cars have been unsuccessful because the tracks were obstructed by strike sympathizers, and the car crews were stoned.

President Maher of the company has been arraigned in court on a charge by Health Officer McCormick, of violating the sanitary code in housing strike breakers. A strike breaker has been sentenced to the Westchester County Jail for six months for carrying concealed weapons. Other strike breakers have been fined for minor offenses.

MOUNTAIN PARTY SAFE.

Men Long Absent in Heights North of Lordsburg Return to Their Home.

LORDSBURG, Oct. 26.—Dr. V. W. Baker and his three companions, whose absence in the mountains north of here caused so much anxiety to their friends, have been found. They returned home this morning.

On Thursday morning the party left for Brown's Flats by way of Live Oak Cañon, taking with them only a light lunch. The flats were reached Thursday afternoon and after eating all their provisions, they attempted to descend into San Dimas Cañon. There is no trail, and the descent in some places was precipitous and dangerous, and after many hours spent in an endeavor to reach San Dimas Cañon, they found they were hemmed in by brush through which it was impossible to make any headway. They decided to retrace their steps. The ascent, however, was fraught with much more difficulty than the descent had been, especially as night had come on and very slow progress was made, so that Brown's Flats was not reached till 3:30 o'clock on Friday afternoon.

They had then been twenty-seven hours without food, and were too exhausted to attempt to reach home. Fortunately, some rice was found in the cabin, and this was cooked for supper. Just at midnight a party of seven searchers reached Brown's Flats and the night was spent around a camp fire, the whole party reaching home at 9 o'clock this morning—after an absence of fifty hours.

Many mountain climbers have been lost above here, but Dr. Baker and his party have broken previous records.

LORD TO WED SHOW GIRL.

Eldest Son of Earl of St. Germans Will Marry Miss Christy of Baltimore.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Lord Eliot, the eldest son of the Earl of St. Germans, fell in love with Miss Christy, one of the show-girls brought over by Charles Frohman for the "Nellie Hall" company, and after the objections by his parents, it is now said that a marriage has been arranged.

Miss Christy hails from Baltimore, and she is a remote connection of the St. Germans family. The young people met at a theater-supper party, and, despite the family's fierce opposition, Eliot remained true to her.

The St. Germans family is very exclusive and wealthy. Eliot was 22 years old last August. He has been known merely as a young man about town.

BATTLE IS IMMINENT.

Armies of Mulai Hafid and of Sultan's Tribesmen Are Drawing Near Each Other.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PARIS, Oct. 26.—The government has received advices from Morocco to the effect that a battle between the army of Mulai Hafid, which has reached a point eighteen miles from Mogadar, and the Sultan's tribesmen, supported by the imperial garrison, numbering about 1200 men, may be anticipated shortly.

There are two French warships in the harbor of Mogador, and all the steps necessary will be taken to protect the Europeans.

See that man at the right with his hands in his pockets—AND the prosperous look.

Just six months ago He was on a stool adding up columns of figures and getting cussed when the balance didn't come right.

He had a habit—the habit of reading the Classified Advertisements in The Times EVERY DAY.

One day he saw this:

FOR SALE—ONE OF THE FINEST DOUBLE store, grocery and market, in the Southwest; excellent location and high class trade. Sickness compels me to leave State. Big bargain for spot cash buyer. Address L, box 384, TIMES OFFICE.

The advertiser had consumption—needed money—only a little—for inattention through sickness had made a goo business run down.

The Man had that "little money"—He was well and abl to hustle—and in six months—

Well—look at Him—

There are just as good opportunities EVERY DAY i the Classified columns of The Times.

If you have an "air castle"—a little business of your own, a fertile little farm, a cozy home—you can make that "ai castle" a reality if you do as the Man did—

BLAZE OF TAR HARD TO STOP.

Tongues of overheated tar spouting from a huge kettle in the Barber asphalt plant at Lawrence and Atlanta streets, about 7 o'clock last night, set fire to and practically destroyed the building. The loss is estimated at $10,000. The company expects to recover $5000 worth of machinery from the ruins. There was no insurance. Andrew Johnson and John Saul, shotgun guards at the plant, narrowly escaped with their lives.

For nearly two hours the firemen fought the stubborn flames without avail. The tangle of live electric wires added to the pyrotechnic display, and made the work of the fire fighters even more dangerous.

When the tar ignited, the building was enveloped in a blue flame. The blazing stuff spread in every direction, and flared up to the roof of the plant. The water from three lines of hose scattered the tar. The kettle exploded with a dull thud that rocked the building. The water changed the dull blue flood of flames to a crimson fountain that spouted into the air. It illuminated the southeastern part of the city and attracted an immense crowd.

The electrical display ceased about an hour after the fire started, the current being cut off. Then the firemen entered the shattered building and did some effective work.

Johnson and Saul were in the building when the tar ignited. They were preparing to dump the large kettle, and had built a fire in the furnace, which was fired to a white heat. In an instant the tar spouted upward and threatened the building.

The men saw there was danger of an explosion, and attempted to shut down the furnace. The kettle was red hot, however, and they left the building hastily, after doing all they could.

Hardly had the men left the furnace-room when the flames burst forth. The timber in the building was soaked with tar, and in a moment it was a mass of blue flames. The fire burned slowly, despite the tar, with the soft effect of a tableau.

An alarm was turned in and two fire companies responded. As soon as the water was turned on, the flames flared up as if carried by the wind. Barrels of tar in the building soon caught fire and their contents spread over the floor. This added to the stubbornness of the blaze, and made it impossible to enter the building.

The Barber Asphalt Company will immediately rebuild the plant. They have four branches in Los Angeles and each is working to its full capacity, according to Superintendent Frank W. Cresswell, who was at the fire. In these plants is prepared the asphaltum for street paving.

Cresswell said last night that as near as he could tell, the damaged machinery could be overhauled and used again. The sand dryers were under water and so was the furnace. The kettle in which the tar was prepared, however, was destroyed. It is not believed the furnace was damaged.

On account of the amount of public improvement work the Barber Asphalt Company has on hand, the fire will handicap it considerably. Another building wil be erected as soon as possible on the same site.

ALLEGED "PETER" PLAYERS.

In the arrest of John Gough and George Alpeter, the latter claiming to be the son of the senior member of the contracting firm of Alpeter & Alpeter, on a charge of suspicion, last night, Patrolmen Botoroff and Cook believe they have captured two expert "peter" players. While standing in the rear of the Original Mug saloon on Main street, between First and Second, the officers say they heard the two men planning to rob a Mexican laborer. Donning disguises, the officers waited until the pair left the saloon, and followed them. The officers arrested the pair, and will hold them for investigation.

"TIMES" MAN IN THE WAR WITH MOORS.

Fighting Day at Casa Blanca—Our Correspondent on the Firing Line. War Balloon in Use—Gen. Drude and Picturesque French Army.

BY FREDERICK MOORE.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

CASA BLANCA, Oct. 2.—It was to see a war balloon go up that I planned with a tall, youthful Scot, who takes photographs for a London weekly, to rise at 5 o'clock and walk out to the French encampment before breakfast.

Passing the outer gate, the Bab-el-Sok, to the north of the town, we were surprised to see the balloon already high in the air, and on the straight road that divides the camps we noticed a thick, lifting cloud of brown dust. Lengthening our stride, we pushed on as fast as the heavy sand would allow, passing the camp and overtaking the trail of dust just as the last troop of Spahis twisted out through an intricate opening in the wire entanglements which guard Casa Blanca, and went down into the little gully beyond. Spread out in front, a broad, bare slope, with here and there the wrecked tomb of some Moorish saint, was a moving body of men, forming a more or less regular rectangle of which the front and the rear were the short ends, about half as long as the sides. The outer lines were marked by companies of infantry, bloomered Tirailleurs and the Foreign Legion, marching in open order, often single file, with parallel lines at the front and vital points. Within the rectangle traveled the field artillery, three sections of two guns each, a mountain battery carried dismantled on mules, a troop of Algerian cavalry, the general and his staff, and a brigade of the Red Cross. Outside the main body, flung a mile to the front and far off either wing, scattered detachments of Goumiers, in their flowing robes, served as scouts. Already three of them on the sky-line, by the position of their horses, signaled that the way was clear.

This little army, counting in its ranks Germans, Caucasian Arabs and negroes, as well as native Frenchmen, numbered, all told, less than 3000 men. It had got into fighting formation under shelter of a battery and two short flanking lines of infantry lodged on the first ridge, forming, without a halt, as the various detachments passed through the openings in the wire entanglements. The force, even though small, was well handled; and the men keen for the advance. It has been said of the French that they fight best when the enemy is weak.

A Moroccan outpost.

Oil and water in Casa Blanca; French sailors and Moors.

Finding ourselves at a rear corner of the block, we set our speed at about double that of the columns of troops, and took a general direction diagonally towards a section of the artillery, now kicking up a pretty dust as it dragged through the plowed fields. Overtaking the guns, we slogged on with them for a mile or more, asking the officers (who did not know) the object of the advance, and advising them not to waste their camera films, as they seemed inclined to do, before the morning clouds disappeared.

HIDDEN FACES.

The helmets of the artillery and the Foreign Legion hid their faces and made them look like British soldiers. It was indeed somewhat disappointing to find that the only French troops in Gen. Drude's army had left behind in camp the little red caps that give them, in appearance at least, the character of Napoleon's time and the Revolution.

Algerians of the French army gambling and shooting craps.

Though we carried no breakfast inside of us, neither were we laden with doughy bread and heavy water bottles, to say nothing of rifles, and after a short breathing spell and a ride on the guns, we were soon able to say "au revoir" to the battery and to press on ahead. Our eagerness to ascertain the object of the movement led us toward the general's staff; but we did not get there. The little man with the big moustache spied us at some distance, and sent an officer to say that correspondents should keep back with the Hospital Corps.

Thinking perhaps it would be best not to argue this point, we thanked the officer, sent our compliments to Monsieur le General, and dropped back till the artillery hid us from his view, grateful that he had not sent an orderly with us.

THE FIRING.

It was only four miles out from Casa Blanca, as the front line came to the crest of the second rise, that the firing began. About half a mile ahead of us we saw the forward guns go galloping up the slope and swing into position. A minute later two screeching shells went plunging into the distance.

A mountain battery to the left was going rapidly to the front, and, keeping an eye on the general, we made over to it, and passed to the far side, to be out of his view. It happened that by so doing, we also took the shelter of the battery from a feeble Moorish fire; and this brought down upon us the chaff of the French soldiers. But we did not attempt to explain. With this battery we went forward to the firing line; and as soon as the guns were in action, the Scot, forgetting the fight in the interest of his own mission, began dodging in and out among the busy artillerists, snapping pictures of the guns in action. Though the men kept to their work, several of the officers had time to pose for a picture, and one smart-looking young fellow on horseback rode over from the other battery to draw up before the camera. All went well till the general, stealing a march on us, came up behind on foot.

I do not know exactly what he said, as he spoke rather rapidly, but it was forcible language, and I shall not forget the picture he made. Standing with his legs far apart, his arms in the air, his cap on the back of his head, the little man in khaki not only frightened us with his rage, but made hypocrites of his officers. The same men who had posed for their pictures now turned upon us in a most outrageous manner. Some of them used "cuss" words—which, fortunately, we did not understand—several called us imbeciles in French, and threatened to put us under arrest, while one came rushing at us, gesticulating as if to "shoo" us off like a pair of chickens.

"There," said the Scot, as the general turned his attention to his officers, "that will make a splendid picture—'A critical moment on the battlefield; Gen. Drude in consultation with his staff.' Ask them to pose as they are just a moment."

We moved back a hundred yards, taking the shelter of a battered stone wall, and began to barter with some reserves for breakfast. For three cigarettes apiece, four of them were willing to part with a two-inch cube of stringy meat and a slab of soggy brown bread, with a cupful of water. As we sat with these Tirailleurs their officers got out Kodaks and photographed the group, perhaps desiring to show the contrast of civilians in panama hats, sparing not even the war correspondent's khaki, eating with their bloomered, fezzed Algerians.

With still a hunk of bread to masticate, we had to rise and go forward. All of the army ahead of us moved off, and the reserves took up a position on a ridge the cannon had just occupied. As soon as the general took his departure, we began to look about for some protecting line of men or mules; but there were none following him. The rectangle had divided into two squares, and we were with the second, which would remain where it was. The object—we understood later—was to entice the Moors "into the breech," to cut off the first square and to catch them between the two. But they, the Moors, had had their lesson at this game.

Realizing soon that we were with the passive force, we resolved to overtake the troops who were actively engaged, and set out across the valley after them for a two-mile chase. A caravan track led down through gullies and trailed in and out, around earth mounds and "Saint Houses," often cutting us off from the view of both forces at the same time, and once even hiding from us the balloon. Crossing a trodden grain field to shorten our distance, we came upon three dead Arabs and a horse and the scatterings of a shell. A lean old brown man with a thin, white beard and a shaven head, lay naked with eyes and mouth wide open to the sun, arms and legs flung apart, a gash in his stomach and a bullet wound with a powder stain between the eyes. His companions, still wearing their long, cotton shirts, and resting on their arms, might have been feigning sleep. As a matter of precaution, we walked round them at a distance, revolvers in hand.

FORWARD!

It came to me that this was fool business to have started after the general, and I said so.

"Human nature," said the Scot; "we have been trying to avoid the general all morning, now we wish we had him."

I suggested going back.

"It's as far back as it's forward," argued my companion; and we went on to a knoll, upon which four guns had taken up a position and were blazing away as fast as their gunners could load them.

A crack corps of the Moroccan army.

Of course, our independence of Gen. Drude revived as we got to a place of more or less security, and we swung away from him toward the right flank. Choosing a good point from which to watch the engagement, we saluted the captain of a line of Tirailleurs and lay down among the men. Below us, in plain view, not a quarter of a mile away, was the camp of the Moors, about 400 tents, ragged and black with dirt, some of them old, circular army tents, but mostly patched coverings of sacking, such as are to be seen all over Morocco. It was to destroy this camp, discovered by the balloon, that the French army had come out, and we managed to come over the knoll at the moment that the first flames were put to it. Just beyond the camp, the squalid village of Taddert, beneath a cluster of holy tombs, a place of pilgrimage, was already afire. We asked our officers if it was not unwise to destroy these "Saint Houses" and to defile mosques, as had been done at Casa Blanca; and he replied that, while some of the Moors had requested that these places be left untouched, they always got into them and used their stout walls as barricades from which to fire.

The Moors at Taddert had evidently been taken by surprise. They left most of their poor possessions behind them in the camp, getting away with only their horses and their guns. A soldier of the Foreign Legion came back driving three under-sized donkeys, with several short, pot-like Moorish drums. We spoke to him, and he told us that they had taken seven prisoners, and he said they had shot them.

The Arabs, as the Moors are usually designated, hung about the hills, keeping constantly on the move to avoid the shells. Organization among them was totally lacking and ammunition seemed very scarce. Once in a while a horseman or a group of two or three, would come furiously charging down to within a mile of the guns, and, turning to retire again, would send a wild shot or two in our direction.

Wherever a group of more than three appeared a shell burst over their heads and scattered their frightened horses, sometimes riderless. The fight was entirely one-sided, yet the French general seemed unwilling to risk a close engagement that might cost the lives of a number of his men. The fact is the French have a wholesome dread of being taken prisoners.

After an hour my companion, though under fire for the first time, became, as he put it, "exceedingly bored," and, lying down on the ground as if for a nap, asked me to wake him "if the Moors should come within photographing distance."

I told him he ought to have a good pair of glasses, that then he could see what was going on, and suggested that he borrow those of a young officer, who had just come up.

"Monsoor," he said, rising and saluting the officer, "permittez moi a user votre binoculaires, s'il vous plait?"

"You want to look through my glasses? Certainly," came the reply.

"There, you see that shot? It is meant for those Moroccans converging on the sky-line. There, it explodes. It got four of them. It was well aimed. These are splendid guns we have. No other country has such guns. I should say many of the Moors are killed today. Not less than 300. What is that! Give me my things! Pardon! It is only les Goumiers. They look like Moroccans, but we must not shoot them."

The energetic Scot interrupted: "Will you have your men fire a volley; so that I might get a picture. My paper wants scenes of the fighting about Casa Blanca."

"Perhaps I can do so in a few moments, if you stay by me."

The general passed within a few yards, and, ignoring us, went back to the ambulance brigade to see a wounded man of the Foreign Legion. We followed him and took his photograph as he shook hands with the man on the litter. "Good picture?" I said.

"Rotten," said the Scot. "They'll think in London that I got Drude to pose. The wounded chap hadn't a blood stain on him and he smoked a cigarette."

COVERED WITH BLOOD.

We had not long to wait, however, before an example of real misery came to our view. A Goumier, covered with blood, riding a staggering, wounded horse, brought in a Moor without a stitch of clothes, tied by a red sash to his saddle. Captor, captive and horse fell to the ground almost together.

The Goumier had been shot in the chest, and expired while his fellow horsemen relieved him of his purple "jebela" and his turban, and gave him water.

The Moor (who had been taken in the fire at Taddert) was a mass of burns from head to foot. On one hand nothing remained but stumps of fingers, and loose, charred flesh hung from his legs.

The French might well have shot this poor creature, but they bound up his wounds.

At 1 o'clock the Arab camp was a mass of smouldering rags, and Taddert blazed from every corner. The mission of the French was accomplished.

Long, parallel lines of men, marching single file in open order, trailed over the hills back toward the white-walled town, beyond which could be seen the black funnels of French and Spanish war vessels.

"Directment au balloon," were the instructions, and direct to the balloon we went as fast as our weary limbs would carry us.

FOOD OF THE NORWEGIANS.

A HEALTHY, LARGE-BONED, FAIR-HAIRED RACE OF PEOPLE.

Soups and Stews, Sausage and Fish Form a Large Portion of Their Diet and Indigestion Is Practically Unknown—Peculiarity of Their Cookery Scheme.

[Pall Mall Gazette:] The stranger in Norway is forcibly struck with the superior physique of the nation; he meets a race of large-boned, fair-haired men and women, and the chief wonder is the absence of ill-formed and under-developed people. When the rigor of the Norwegian winter is considered one is likely to ascribe this physical well-bearing to the survival of the fittest. But the splendid physique is also due not only to the wide-spread system of physical development in vogue, but to the peculiarly suitable food eaten. Hence, an inquiry into the Scandinavian dietary is valuable and interesting.

The customary food of the nation is of the soup-and-stew order. This results in a large quantity of nourishment being taken in a liquid form, and renders the diet one easy of digestion. Nations employing food in more solid shape require more liquid in the form of drink; but this, unfortunately, leads to a dilution of the digestive fluids and renders them unable to act on the solid food in the necessary concentrated state. It is thus a matter of no surprise that few Norwegians suffer from indigestion; indeed, it is easy to see that many of the dishes, as a result of their mode of preparation are to an extent predigested. In this connection it would be well to point to the effect upon the nation's teeth. Naturally, the possession of perfect teeth is a guarantee of satisfactory mastication, the first stage in the assimilation of food. But the nature of the food taken determines to a large extent the condition of the molars. There is no more fruitful source of dental decay than the retention of meat fibers between the teeth, in such a way that before chemical action has released them the opening pressure and acid reaction from the fiber has often induced injury to the dental enamel. This idea is borne out by the fact that in Norway, where roast meats are the exception, the condition of the teeth compares most favorably with that of our countrymen.

TAKE JUICES FROM FOOD.

The aim of Norwegian cookery would appear to be, not to retain the juices in the food material, but to abstract them, and, after the cellular formation of the food has been broken down, to return the juices to the dish. For this reason, Norwegians regard English cookery, which attempts to retain the natural juices in joints and poultry, as "one-sided." They regard England as the country of "one dinner and one sauce." But if joints are a thing unknown in Norwegian cookery it is rather a fact to be anticipated than wondered at; at least, if one has observed the quality of the meat exposed for sale. For, in spite of the fact that the beef and mutton are officially stamped with a triangular blue impression before sale at the Kjordkontrol, the meat is poor stuff, indeed—skinny, dark and dry, and sinewy as an Arab steed. As a set-off against the inferior meat, the Norwegian housewife has a supply of fish which can be bettered by no country in the world, and of which every advantage is taken.

In Norway, as in America, three meals are eaten per day—breakfast, "mid-daeg" and supper. "Kaffe," taken an hour after dinner, corresponds to our tea, though the beverage is coffee, and only fancy cakes are allowed to accompany it. At breakfast porridge is usually eaten, and the sausage (ubiquitous in Norway as in Germany) is always in evidence. The variety of sausage is notable, as well as the mode of eating. In this form only is horse-flesh employed; and every variety of sausage is sliced and eaten thus upon the bread, with or without butter. On Sundays and Thursdays the staple article of breakfast is "biff." This consists of pounded beef, which is seasoned and afterward shaped into a solid lump, and then fried with onions. It has much the flavor of good steak, and naturally offers no difficulties to mastication. The rich brown gravy, always served with this dish, is one of the many triumphs of gravy production which the nation enjoys.

DINNER BILL OF FARE.

Mid-daeg, as dinner is called, is the staple meal of the day. The most noteworthy thing about the meal is the great variety of soups. Not only are flesh and vegetable soups prepared, but sweet soups and porridge are common. Rice porridge, flavored to taste with butter and cinnamon, is much affected, besides raisin soup containing tapioca, apple porridge (consisting of apple slices stewed in oatmeal,) and fish soups. The Norwegians, above all things, understand the art of preparing fish. One of the most appetizing ways of eating this article of diet is as fish balls, for which the fish is boned and pounded and stewed after being rolled into balls. Meat balls are prepared the same way. When meat does appear as a joint it is usually under the guise of boiled mutton, and this dish is generally followed by prunes, stewed in tapioca. The national Saturday dinner will not appeal very appetizingly to our insular minds, for it consists of raw pickled herrings (pickled in brine,) with raw onions and boiled potatoes. The Norwegians claim for it that, in this form, none of th enutriment is lost. An imported dish, which bids fair also to become a national dinner, is a delicious Spanish dish, resembling olla podrida, which is made up of flaked cod, baked with sliced potatoes, tomatoes and rich gravy. Supper is a hearty meal, taken about 7 o'clock in the evening. Among the various dishes in customary use are meat balls, "sild" salad (herring salad, made of pickled herring, onion, sage and parsley, minced and eaten cold,) bruised fish and potatoes served hot, and steaming dried fish. During kaffe, the sort of informal meal which has already been mentioned, a great variety of fancy breads and cakes are eaten.

FRUIT SHIPMENTS.

GROWERS' CASE IS SUBMITTED.

EARLY DECISION REQUESTED BY COUNSEL.

Interstate Commerce Commission Is Told That Present Arrangement for Distribution of Cars Is Ruinous to Fruit Men and That Change Is Absolutely Necessary.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The arguments in the case of the California Fruit Growers' Association against the Southern Pacific, which were begun at the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday, were concluded today.

Judge Britt for the fruit growers closed the case. He said the present arrangement of distributing cars to the fruit dealers employed by the Southern Pacific was ruinous to the trade and would mean that the exchange would have to go out of business if it were continued.

Judge James for the Citrus Union spoke along the same lines. At the conclusion both gentlemen asked that the commission render a decision before the first of the year, as by that time another crop will be ready for shipment and it is necessary that some change in the present arrangement of supplying cars be made.

Judge Britt requested that he be given thirty days in which to file a brief answering certain allegations made by the Southern Pacific. This request was granted by the commission.

SECRET OUT.

OHIO POET WEL TO ANGELENO.

IDA E. LAWRENCE IS WIFE OF JAMES CONNER.

"Buckeyes" Discover That Well-Known Writer of Verse Has Been Married to Local Railway Man Since Last June—She Says Wedlock Will Bar Muse.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TOLEDO (O.) Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It became known today that Ida Eckert Lawrence, who has achieved some reputation as a writer of verse, has been since last June the wife of James R. Conner, connected with a railway company at Los Angeles.

Only a few were let into the secret of the wedding, and the announcement will come as a great surprise to the friends of "the Ohio poet."

Mrs. Lawrence—or, rather, Mrs. Conner—announced last spring that she would spend the summer on the Pacific Coast, and sent ahead her driving horse, "Red Cloud," in a special car.

Conner met Mrs. Lawrence on her arrival, and it was not long afterward that they were driving to the house of a minister.

Mrs. Conner and her husband were sweethearts long ago, but each married someone else.

Conner was for years connected with the Wabash and later with the Michigan Central at Detroit. His wife says that matrimony will cause her to desert the muse.

THREE ARRESTS FOR TWO.

Father and Son Mix With City Employee, Then Elder Has Saloon Quarrel.

Charles Miller, a contractor of No. 1637 West Fortieth street, was arrested twice last night on the charge of creating a disturbance, and William Miller, his son, was arrested once for battery. The Millers say they fought because they were insulted.

According to the police, William Miller became involved in a fight with William Roedel, an employé of the City Engineer, at Third and Spring streets, Friday afternoon. It is alleged that Charles Miller assisted his son vigorously in chastising Roedel. Roedel swore to a warrant against the Millers and they were arrested at their home and released on bail.

Charles Miller then went to the Louvre saloon on South Spring street, where he became involved in trouble. He is said to have cursed the proprietor and to have dared him to fight.

A patrolman ordered Miller to leave the saloon. Miller simply scolded the officer and kept on storming. Then he was taken to Central Station, where he again gave bonds.

William Miller said last night that he suffered many insults from Roedel and had warned him several times. "He insulted my father, and for that I gave him a black eye," said young Miller

DEVILISH SPORT.

EUROPE GOING "DIABOLO" MAD.

Revival of Ancient Sport Now a Great Fad.

London Takes Up Game Which Stormed Paris.

Press Warning Against Strange Juggling.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] This city, like Paris and the whole of France, like Rome and Brussels, has gone "Diabolo" mad.

"Diabolo" is seen in the public parks, in the streets, on the stage and in every house. "Diabolo" clubs are formed; "Diabolo" songs are the fashion; "Diabolo" champions are the heroes of the day, and the firms which supply "Diabolos" are making fortunes. "Diabolo" is a sportive bobbin. The newspapers devote daily whole columns to the latest craze, and doctors have already discovered new fashionable diseases — Diabolomania, Diabolo fever, Diabolocitis, Diabologia, not to speak of the Diabolo neck, the Diabolo waist, the Diabolo eye and the Diabolo language—which is used the minute the spinning bobbin lands on your nose or neck.

"Diabolo" comes from the Far East. It was known in China more than twenty centuries ago.

Long before the French Revolution missionaries returned from China with spools looking very much like the bobbins now used. The game became a favorite in France toward the end of the eighteenth century; it then was known as "Le Jeu Du Diable"—"The Game of the Devil"—which was written in 1812.

The chief occupation of the day is not the aeronome, which does not manage to fly—it is not the wars of the Emperor, but the one universal game—"Diable."

"Diabolos" were made centuries ago of precious wood or metals, carved or chiseled by artists; the "smart set" had "Diabolos" of crystal, which had a stronger humming and broke more easily. Hundreds of pictures, engravings and caricatures appeared at that period, representing society playing "Diabolo."

Politicians even used it as a symbol. There is a known caricature, which dates from the Restoration time, when it was fashionable to turn into ridicule the heroes of the empire and Napoleon himself.

The tragical duel between Napoleon and Wellington, which was to end in the victory of the English general, is represented in the drawing by a "Diabolo" duel. Wellington plays with his adversary and throws Napoleon up in the air on horseback on the spool. Napoleon is seen losing his imperial crown.

The game, a few years later, was entirely forgotten, only to be revived a few months ago.

SYSTEM OF GAME.

"Diabolo" is juggling applied to sport. Steady nerves, nimble limbs and quick eyes are all-important qualifications in the making of a first-class diabolist.

The champion, a fourteen-year-old French boy, Meunor—performs "diabolical" wonders. He throws up the bobbin to a tremendous height, then skips with the sticks and strings and catches the spool on the string as it comes toward the earth. He runs the reel backward and forward along the string, the sticks and his wrists; he spins it above his head, behind his back, in any position.

Meunor can play "Diabolo" with an old belt and an ordinary dumbbell. Regarding the new craze, Truth gives this warning:

"In a few weeks, if the medical profession does not discover any remedy for 'Diabolo,' it will probably be unsafe to walk about the streets of London by daylight or even to ride on the top of a 'bus, and all the ground-floor shops will have to keep their shutters up.

"Police regulations ought to be made in time to limit 'diaboling' to the parks and squares and the larger lunatic asylums; and it ought to be forbidden altogether in places like the Stock Exchange and Westminster Abbey."

TEA-TABLE TALK.

ANNA GOULD IS UNDER CLOUD.

PARISIAN "CLIQUES" AGITATED OVER ENGAGEMENT.

French Etiquette Demands Marriage to Prince Sagan, but Some Think She Will Wed an American. Divorce Causes Her to Be Discredited There, It Is Believed.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Oct. 28.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The question of the engagement of Mme. Anna Gould to Prince Sagan is still agitating Paris, although there appears to be nothing definite about it.

Some say that Mme. Gould finally will marry an American, but French etiquette would demand her marriage to Sagan, after so publicly appearing with him.

At present she is under a social cloud. As the wife of Count Boni de Castellane, she was received everywhere, her respectability even making amends for Boni's peccadillos, but since her divorce, she has been discredited except in the so-called "smart set."

When Mme. Gould found herself without standing of any sort, the fast set did not want her. The "superior set" said that the only reason it ever received her was that by her marriage she had become a member of the French aristocracy, but by her divorce she had lost her position.

Her projected marriage with Prince Sagan is believed by her friends to be due to a desire to reënter society, but Sagan is generally looked on as having Boni's defects without his good qualities.

President Tells Senator Flint He Will Use His Influence in Behalf of Arizona and New Mexico.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—President Roosevelt announced through Senator Flint of California today that he will use his influence for separate Statehood for Arizona and New Mexico.

The President, however, expressed the opinion that nothing in that direction can be accomplished at the next session of Congress.

Milady's Writing Desk—It proves its usefulness every day.

It keeps her correspondence private and systematic and when she wants to dispatch a hurried note or write a letter, the paper, the ink and the pens are always handy. It is indeed the most used piece of furniture in milady's boudoir.

So it must be good—well built and rigid, for a poor, rickety writing desk is worse than none at all.

And it should be more than good—it should be attractive, artistic, worthy of its purpose and its surroundings.

Where would you more naturally turn to find such a writing desk than to the "California?" Here is a collection of nearly 100 styles — every imaginable kind and in all popular woods—birdseye maple, early English, golden oak, fumed oak, Tuna mahogany, dark mahogany and Circassian walnut.

And the values are really surprising. The prices range as low as $6 for a simple but well-built desk; up as high as $165 for the elegant hand-made Colonial reproductions of genuine mahogany.

Some very attractive designs are shown in one of our windows this week

We want you to feel that you are always welcome here to look whether you wish to buy or not.

THE IRON LORD

"The Iron Lord" is easily the masterpiece of Crockett's long list of romances.

The description of characters in "The Iron Lord" faintly hints at the possibilities of the story. It's a tale of calculating evil and bitter remorse, of generous deeds and thrilling adventure.

Jacob Romer, when the story opens, is as despicable a man as one would care to keep away from. His wife he had cast aside. Tired of supporting her, he had put her in the pauper ward of an insane asylum. His daughter, Vida, hates her father. She secures her mother's release and he then plots the death of both. The mother dies. Vida is rescued and adopted by the lighthouse keeper.

Vida often sees her father, but remains unknown to him. He believes her dead. Kahn, his business manager, knows the truth and tries to marry Vida and obtain Romer's fortune. Phil and Ludovic both love Vida, quarrel fiercely over her, but become friends. Ludovic takes Phil into the mines "to make a man of him."

Kahn, jealous of Ludovic's favor in Vida's eyes and his quick advancement in the mines, has Ludovic discharged. Before leaving, Ludovic meets Janet and falls in love with her.

Phil, in loyalty to Ludovic, also leaves the mines and goes prospecting for other mining property.

Kahn proposes to Vida and is rejected. Phil comes to her to urge Ludovic's suit, but is told to speak for himsef, and Vida and Phil become engaged.

Kahn then plans the destruction of Vida. She and her friends are lured into a dangerous part of the mine. Kahn sets it afire.

Of course Vida is rescued—the story tells by whom; also how old Romer was punished by those he trusted; how the tangle of love affairs was straightened out, and how Vida repaid her father for his cruel treatment of her and her mother. It would be spoiling the pleasure of reading the tale itself to give more than a taste of the plot here.

The story is written in Crockett's inimitable, unusual style, and is a wonderful blend of local color, love and stirring adventure.

J. M. Barrie, author of "The Little Minister," says: "Happy is he who writes of adventure." None write of it more happily than Crockett.

ROYAL PIQUE.

KING DISAPPROVES ACT OF QUEEN.

ARD CRITICISES PURCHASE OF VILLA IN DENMARK.

Expresses Belief That His Subjects Will Regard Move of Alexandra as Expectation of Return from England in Event of Becoming a Widow.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Queen Alexandra's purchase of a home in her native Denmark, jointly with her sister, the Dowager Empress, has incurred King Edward's disapproval.

He argues that her buying of the villa Hivesdrop, just outside Copenhagen, is likely to convey the impression to his (and her) subjects that if she should become a widow she would leave England forever. Such an impression, even though only imagined, would be vigorously resented by the British people and might undermine the King's popularity. It would be interpreted to mean that, after she had spent all her life in England since her eighteenth year, and admiration had been lavished upon her throughout the intervening forty-four years, her heart was still in Denmark.

Despite the remonstrances of her husband, the King of England, and also her brother, the King of Denmark, whom King Edward enlisted on his side, Queen Alexandra insisted on having her own way, as she always does. She seems to think that if she overlooks her royal husband's "carryings on" she is entitled to have her own way in matters of her own personal French officials commented bitterly on this and subsequently the program was planned for the King and Queen of Spain to visit London and, meeting the German Emperor at both places.

King Alfonso was popular in France on account of his boyish enthusiasm and democratic manners. Now French hearts are chilled toward him. His coquetting with Germany, it is declared, may get him a reception similar to one his father got when he was hooted from the railway station to the Elysee Palace by a Paris

MILITARY MUSIC ON HORSES.

Animals Affected in Different Ways, but Bugle Is Their Favorite Instrument.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

[illegible], Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Regimental horses have been the subjects of musical tests, and all enjoyed the experience. Only a small per cent. of the animals were indifferent to sweet harmony, while equally few showed an active dislike.

The great majority were soothed, instead of excited by music. Most of the horses, like the war chargers one may suppose them to be, enjoyed the bugle more than any other instrument.

PAINTED BUTTONS A FAD.

Society Girl Makes an Odd Gift to a Friend and Starts Queer Craze in London.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Fashion's latest fad is a craze for buttons. It seems to appeal as much to the vanity of the "mere male" to adorn himself with buttons, as to the more volatile women kind.

Waistcoat buttons, each painted separately by well-known miniature painters, and framed in silver or gold, have cost as much as $100 apiece, making the garment on which they are worn a sort of picture gallery.

Women, too, have taken up the craze, which is said to have been started by a young society girl who, as a gift to a friend, sent a set of buttons she had painted.

ADAMS AGAIN ON TRIAL.

Originally Held for Complicity in Steunenberg Murder Charged with Killing Another Man.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

RATHDRUM (Idaho) Oct. 25.—The trial of Steve Adams, charged with the murder of Fred Tyler in St. Joe county, and incidentally involving the Western Federation of Miners, began today.

Adams was originally held for complicity with Harry Orchard in the murder of ex-Gov. Steunenberg, and he is said to have made a confession similar to that made by Orchard, which he subsequently repudiated.

He was then arrested on the charge of murdering Tyler, and was tried at Wallace, where a long-drawn trial ended in a hung jury. After a session examining jurymen, court went over until next Tuesday. The exhibits in the case were turned over to J. A. Foster, clerk of this county, by Clerk Fairley of Shoshone county. They include the skeleton alleged to be that of Tyler, letters addressed to him and his clothing, also the clothing, a box containing some canned goods and parts of other edibles, a picture, the hair of the dead man, and a box containing a number of the bones which was exhibited at the former trial.

THE NAVY.

WILL RETURN VIA EUROPE.

Atlantic Squadron's Home Trip Is Discussed.

Fleet to Remain at Bay City Two Months.

Important Conferences Held Regarding Navy.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] At an important conference on the battleship fleet held at the White House today, it was practically determined that the Atlantic squadron, which sails for the Pacific Coast on December 16, via Cape Horn, will return to the Atlantic Coast via the Mediterranean Sea and European ports.

It has been proposed that the fleet pay a friendly visit to the ports of several European nations, and this programme will be carried out, unless changes become necessary.

The question of sending the fleet to the Pacific one way and bringing it home another was settled by the President some months ago.

Rear-Admiral Brownson, chief of the Bureau of Navigation, favored sending the ships and bringing them home over the Magellan route, while Admiral Evans preferred the Suez route both ways.

The President then indicated the compromise, which was discussed today. Among those in conference with the President today were Rear-Admiral Evans, who will command the fleet on the trip; Secretary Metcalf and Rear-Admiral Brownson, who has supervisory charge of the preparations.

In addition, Senator Flint of California was with the President for some time, discussing the length of time the fleet will remain in California waters. It is understood that the ships will remain in San Francisco Bay about two months.

The battleships are due to rendezvous in Hampton Roads on December 6, although two or three of them, sent from Norfolk to other navy yards to have their repairs completed, may not reach the rendezvous until later.

FREEDOM.

CASUAL REMARK FREES PRISONER

INNOCENT MAN NEARLY CONVICTED OF MURDER.

Coroner's Physician Saves Bullet Which Caused Death of Italian, and When It Is Fitted in Defendant's Revolver It Is Found to Be of Different Caliber.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—A casual remark of a witness in Judge Chetlain's court yesterday saved a man from conviction of murder on circumstantial evidence.

Indeed, the State had presented such seemingly conclusive proof that Angelo Serpico had killed Salvatore Serpico that conviction and a death penalty were almost certainly expected. This strong structure of proof built up by the State collapsed like a bubble when the case was about to go to the jury.

A casual question asked of Dr. Warren Hunter, Coroner's physician, on cross-examination, developed that Salvatore Serpico was killed by a bullet from a 32-caliber revolver. The defendant's revolver was 38 caliber.

Prior to that important testimony, Assistant State's Attorney Fleming had presented a chain of evidence apparently complete. Against this array of evidence, the defendant was able to present only a feeble defense. He took the stand and denied the shooting. He admitted having drawn a revolver, but was unable to explain the exploded cartridges. On cross-examination by Mr. Fleming, when asked to account for Salvatore Serpico's death, he said: "Louis did it." He could not tell who Louis was except that he was an Italian who had been present in the saloon and who had since fled.

Dr. Hunter was the last witness called. He said his opinion was that death was due to shock and hemorrhage caused by the bullet wound.

"By the way, Dr. Hunter," Attorney Hanlon for the defense asked, "have you the bullet that you found in the body?"

"Certainly," Dr. Hunter replied, and he handed the bullet to the lawyer.

"Why, this is a 32-caliber bullet!" Attorney Hanlon exclaimed.

The bullet was then placed in the revolver owned by the defendant and it rattled in its empty cartridge. After a short deliberation the jury returned a verdict of not guilty.

EGGS CAUSE OF CRISIS.

Too Many of Them in Chicago Brings Trouble to Four Wholesalers.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Too many eggs developed a crisis today. Four South Water-street firms are declared to be in trouble and creditors are said to be holding meetings.

There are 350,000,000 idle eggs in the cold-storage warehouses of Chicago, which is 100,000,000 more than were in the freezers here last year.

The trouble is attributed by common report of the street to certain egg houses, and is indirectly due to the money difficulties in the East.

Banks here are making demands that the commission houses deposit with them more margins upon the eggs on which the bank funds have been loaned.

MINERS VOTE AGAINST STRIKE.

Goldfield Union Decides Not to Go on "Sympathetic" Walk-Out for Bishop Men.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

GOLDFIELD, Oct. 26.—The local union of the Western Federation of Miners has decided to take no action on the proposition to call a sympathetic strike on account of the walk-out of the laborers employed by the Nevada-California Mining Company, at Bishop, Cal.

The walk-out followed the refusal of the company to accept the demand for increased wages. The meeting of the miners' union in this city today was for the purpose of deciding whether to take a refendum vote on the proposition.

Two-thirds' vote is required to call a sympathetic strike, and the sentiment of the miners was strongly against it. Today's vote was 224 against and 165 for the referendum vote.

Even if a vote were taken it requires a two-thirds vote to call the miners out. The power company supplies power to all of the mines in Goldfield and Tonopah.

DEMAND MORE PAY.

Switchmen Employed on All Northwestern Roads Will Ask for Increase in Wages.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. PAUL (Minn.) Oct. 26.—Eighty delegates, representing the 3000 switchmen employed on all the Northwestern railroads in the territory from the Twin Cities to the Coast and northeast to Duluth, gathered in St. Paul today for a conference preliminary to their meeting the representatives of the railroads on Monday, when they will present demands for an increase in wages.

F. T. Hawley of Buffalo, president of the Switchmen's Union of America, and S. E. Kebberling, vice-president, are participating in the conference.

Similar conferences were held today in Chicago, Cincinnati and several other large cities.

MACKOWN CONVICTED.

Jury Declares Him Guilty of Burning Shoe Factory at Webster City, Iowa.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WEBSTER CITY (Iowa) Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The jury in the case of George Mackown, charged with burning Webster City's $100,000 felt-shoe factory June 15, 1903, today returned a verdict of guilty. A motion for an arrest of judgment and a new trial will be argued next Saturday. The offense is punishable by confinement in the penitentiary of from one to ten years.

The verdict created a big sensation here and the prisoner was stunned when the clerk announced the finding of the jury.

TO INCREASE TRADE.

Chambers of Commerce of Leading Cities Are Asked to Send Delegates to Conference.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—With a view to rendering practical aid to the commercial and industrial interests of the United States and to the promoting of the foreign commerce of this country, Secretary Straus of the Department of Commerce and Labor, has caused to be prepared a pamphlet by N. I. Stone, the tariff expert of the bureau of manufactures.

The pamphlet contains a study of the commercial union and condtions, together with a statement of the results already achieved by the Department of Commerce and Labor in promoting America's foreign commissioners. It urges that "Congress be brought to a realization of the magnitude, and the importance of this task," and give it support with funds commensurate with the work to be done.

With a view of developing the most practical plan for rendering the department of great service to the commercial interests of the country and at the same time to enable the department to enlist the coöperation of such interests, Secretary Strauss has invited the Chamber of Commerce and boards of trade of twenty of the leading cities of the country to appoint committees to meet here December 5 to consider with him ways and means of accomplishing these objects.

ODD POLICIES.

SINGER INSURES HER LARYNX.

CAVALIERI VALUES THROAT AT FIFTY THOUSAND.

Paderewski Also Has Insurance on His Hands for $45,000, Otero Values Her Toes at $15,000 Each. Kubelick Has $50,000 Policy on Fingers.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Oct. 26.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Lina Cavalieri, the grand-opera singer, whose popularity at the New York Metropolitan Operahouse last season demanded her return, has insured her larynx for $50,000.

Mlle. Cavalieri's move in this direction is only one of the endeavors of artists to insure their best-paying physical endowments against accident.

Praderewski has taken out a policy of $45,000 on his hands—a small consideration when measured by the receipts of the famous pianist.

Another equally well-known artist, though in a different line of professional work, is "La Belle" Otero, who has placed the feet with which she has danced to fame and fortune at the modest figure of $150,000—$15,000 for each toe.

Jan Kubelick, the famous violinist, estimates in his insurance policy the money-compelling power of his fingers at $50,000.

Kubelick's fingers, Cavalieri's throat, Otero's feet, and the eye of an artist like Carolus Duran, which he conservatively considers worth $50,000, brings the total to $345,000.

WORKMEN DROWN.

Train of Flat Cars on Which Were Many Italian Laborers, Drops Into Artificial Lake.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MILLINOCKET (Me.) Oct 26.—A work train of flat cars on which were forty or fifty Italian laborers engaged in the construction of an artificial lake for the Great Northern Paper Company at East Millinocket, tumbled into the lake today through the sinking of the track, and a messenger, who claimed to have seen the accident, reported that nearly all the workmen had been drowned.

The company officials, however, while admitting the accident, denied that there had been great loss of life.

The lake is five miles long and a mile wide. The railroad is on the side of the lake, and, according to the messenger, the track settled, throwing every one on the train into the water. The messenger said that he drove to the scene and saw the trainmen reach a place of asfety, but few of the workmen escaped.

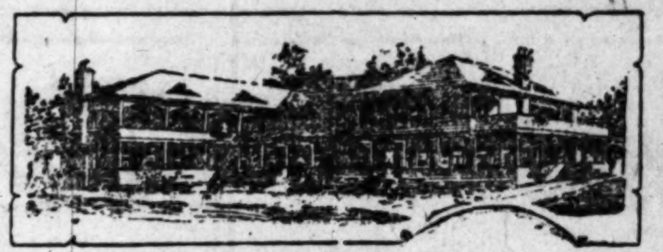
STRICKLIN MEMORIAL HOME

(INCORPORATED)



STRICKLIN MEMORIAL HOME

The Directors of this institution are meeting with unusual and continued success. A much needed and worthy institution, the only one of its kind on the Pacific Coast. Now being heartily endorsed and liberally contributed to by business men, bankers and city officials.

Hilliard Stricklin, an enterprising colored business man, is working to establish an institution where old colored people will have a suitable home and orphan colored children can be properly cared for and educated. The institution is incorporated under the laws of California, and will be under the management of a Board of five directors. It's the intention of the incorporators to erect suitable buildings on Santa Fe avenue that will be a credit to our city, as it will be the only institution of the kind on the Pacific Coast. Mayor A. C. Harper and D. E. Luther, secretary Y.M.C.A., being thoroughly familiar with the work of establishing this institution through the efforts of Mr. Stricklin, have consented to act on the subscription committee and lend their aid in every way to make the institution a success, the Mayor having generously contributed $500 as a starter in helping to raise $100,000 to properly endow and maintain the institution. Mr. H. Stricklin, the other member of the subscription committee, and for whom the home is named, needs no introduction to Los Angeles business people, as he has resided here for 15 years, and has always been public-spirited and lent his services and money to elevate and benefit the people of his race in every particular, and is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

The board of directors, who are reliable and competent men, will provide and maintain an institution similar to the Hollenbeck Home, and every public-spirited citizen should help the work along and contribute liberally, as the cause is a worthy one and justifies your hearty approval and cordial support, in providing a home for aged negroes, and affording discipline, industrial and educational training for the colored orphan children. Mr. Stricklin is meeting with most satisfactory results, as the citizens are becoming acquainted with his philanthropic efforts in behalf of the colored people, and are sending in their contributions so liberally that the board of directors expect to close a contract for one of the larger buildings with the F. O. Engstrum Co., contractors, which will be sufficient guarantee that the building will be of good and permanent construction. The following gentlemen constitute the board of directors: H. Stricklin, J. E. Asbury, E. W. Rohnes, D. Marks, and E. W. Yonjz, with Mayor A. C. Harper, and D. E. Luther as the advisory board. All names of contributors will be published later.

Address all communications and contributions to Stricklin Memorial Home, Box 126, Station C, Los Angeles, Cal.

FUEL ECONOMY

The "Air-Tight" is the most economical of heaters. The daily newspaper is about all the fuel needed in this climate. It heats quickly with little fuel, and will hold a smoldering fire for hours when tightly closed.

We supply a good "Air-Tight" heater with high steel lining, cast iron feet, include one joint of pipe, and set it up for $1.75. This is a thoroughly good heater and must not be confounded with light weight stoves offered at a cheaper price.

Other air-tight heaters with nickel plated fenders and trimmings, cast tops, etc., at higher prices.

We have also a complete line of asbestos back gas heaters, round gas heaters and gas radiators. All have been thoroughly tested. They are good heaters and economical in the use of fuel.

OY HAS THE FINEST HAREM IN THE WORLD.

Youthful Sultan of Zanzibar, Now Touring Europe, Is on Lookout for Possible Additions to His Ravishing Seraglio—Received in Best Society.

'Ali Bin Hamoud,

uthful Sultan of Zanzibar, who is touring Europe and is said to be oking out for possible additions to his harem. The inmates of the tter include some of the most beautiful women in the Orient.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

ONDON, Oct. 5.—Ali Ben Hamoud, e youthful Sultan of Zanzibar, ho is now touring Europe, is said on the lookout for possible addi- to his harem. The dusky ruler s the distinction of having the t collection of female beauties in Orient.

val harems, such as those of the n of Turkey and the Shah of Per- may be more extensive, but Ali credited with exquisite taste, and does not leave the duty of selection subordinate. Each candidate for sion to his seraglio receives the onal and critical attention of the ful Sultan. Such care has had inevitable result. Turkish, Ara- Circassian and European beau- combine to make the royal harem ibar the most superb institu- f its kind the world over.

eports be true, the keeper of the harem is pestered with an al- endless stream of candidates. French and English beauties known to be inmates. And a star he Paris music halls, who mysteri- disappeared a few years ago, raced to the door of this luxurious . There the trail and the pursuit e Sultan's own knowledge of west- life has made his harem very dif- indeed from the ordinary orien- seraglio. The luxurious splendor stern decoration has been toned with occidental good taste. The es of the harem themselves are every privilege, and it is said they are eminently contented with their lot. At times weeks pass without a royal visit, and whenever one is intended formal announcement is made and the Sultan begs permission to present himself.

The Sultan is almost as much a European as an African. He was brought up in England and educated at Harrow and Oxford. Although he is only 22 years old, his great idea in life is to develop his own country and to bring it well to the front. At Harrow School Sultan Ali was immensely popular and was a great success at cricket. His skill as a horseman even in those days was extraordinary.

In 1902, the year of King Edward's coronation, the young Sultan first became generally known to London society. He went out frequently and was to be met in nearly every well-known house in London. There is a story of a famous African traveler being invited to bring Prince Ali with him to the dinner table of a prominent society hostess one night, "if he was presentable at table."

When the night arrived and her ladyship had presented to her a well-groomed and set-up young fellow, but little darker than many of her guests, in faultless evening dress and the diamond star of his country gleaming on his breast and was told that this was Prince Ali of Zanzibar, her confusion may well be imagined.

Since then the young Sultan has been a familiar figure in all the courts of Europe—and many other places besides the courts. But although he appreciates the good things of the earth, he is a man of large ideas and his mind is devoted to the industrial development of Zanzibar.

Mr. Parmenter was a past grand officer of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, and was also a member of Magnolia Encampment. He was an active member of the Massachusetts Society.

While it was known that he was in a serious condition, Mr. Parmenter was able only the day before his death to go downtown and he visited several of his old-time friends. He was inclined to treat his physical troubles lightly, and was in good spirits upon retiring on Friday night.

He was a man of wide acquaintance in Los Angeles, and especially in fraternal circles.

METHODIST CAMPAIGN.

First Group of Churches Will Close Two-Week Meetings Tonight. Many Conversions.

The first two weeks of the Methodist revival campaign closed Friday night in the group of churches which have been meeting in Haven Methodist Church, at Twenty-seventh and Paloma streets. The churches in this group were Haven, Hamilton, Vincent, South Main, St. Mark's and Vernon.

The services have been conducted by Dr. J. W. Mahood, and have been largely attended. Last night's meeting was especially large and deep interest was manifested. Dr. Mahood preached on the topic of amusements, his subject being announced as "Cutting the Anchors."

He was especially vigorous in the denunciation of the theater, and declared that it is the devil's church and a menace to all spirituality.

A large chorus choir led the singing, and Miss Miller, daughter of the pastor of Haven Church, sang a solo. Many persons announced their intention of beginning a Christian life.

More than 100 conversions are reported for the two weeks, and all the Methodist churches which joined in the meetings will likely receive large accessions to their membership.

Each of the churches will hold its regular Sunday morning services today in its usual meeting place. In the afternoon at 3 o'clock there will be a union meeting for men in the Haven Church, at which Dr. Mahood will speak on "Drifters." The closing meeting of the group will be held tonight in Haven Church, and tomorrow night Dr. Mahood will begin services with a new group of Methodist churches in the Boyle Heights Methodist Church, on North St. Louis street.

The campaign is to continue throughout the city for eight weeks.

Western Union Removes Delay Restrictions and Local Operators Apply for Reinstatement.

Although the strike of telegraph operators long since ceased to be felt in Los Angeles, the Western Union Company waited until yesterday to remove all delay restrictions on messages, making an exception of only a few unimportant points in the southern States.

Striking operators all over the country are asking to be reinstated, and in the last three days nine applications for reinstatement have been received at the Los Angeles office. Four of these applicants have been given work, two will go back tomorrow, and three applications have been declined.

ved lumber, but by placing the time cutting fifteen years from the time planting, we are warranted by ex- rience and observation in saying that first sixteen feet of each tree will 150 feet of inch boards. As we are king a very conservative estimate, will place the cut at only 100 feet, h the supposition that it will take f of that to cut and saw it, which l leave but fifty feet to each tree, or 00 feet to the acre.

As to its future value we will make prediction—it may be worth 10, 20 or n 30 cents per foot, but we will es- mate it at the present price of com- n pine lumber—3 cents per foot, or 50 per tree. As the trees would obably be over 100 feet in height at time of cutting, the balance of the e would easily bring $1 for poles and od. This would place each tree at e low price of $2.50, or $1250 per re, or $125,000 for a 100-acre grove sting less than $10,000.

Now this looks like an enormous per- ntage on a fifteen-year investment, t every indication points to three or ur times that amount. Why will cap- l permit a timber famine?

While waiting for the train and nursing a throbbing tooth, thought of the half-page ad. that I had often seen in the Los Angeles Times, "Dr. Schiffman extracts teeth without pain," etc., etc. To think was to act. I was soon in the chair and that tooth was out; yes, and "without pain," and for half a dollar. I never got more satisfactory results from a small investment.

There's Unlimited Capital in Belle Vernon Water

A Belle Vernon acre pays for itself in free water alone. Figure it out for yourself what it would cost you for water for one acre of ground as well as domestic purposes for the rest of your natural life, and you will realize that when you secure an acre of finest soil at Belle Vernon, and water piped free to your door, you have an independent capital in the water alone.

A Fertile Soil Producing An Income Sufficient to Meet the Small Monthly Payments, and More

There is no other offer to home builders so liberal as this. It is just like getting six lots in the city for the price of one. Belle Vernon is only 20 minutes' distant, on the way to the sea. The stately Long Beach Boulevard intersects it. It is reached by five car lines, with cars every five minutes. The shopping and business section is reached more quickly than from many portions of the city itself. The land is level, the view pleasing and the surroundings excellent. Churches, schools, stores, postoffice, banks, public library, telephones, electric light and all city conveniences are available, making it the most desirable suburb on the market.

BLEW HER UP, QUIT CHURCH.

Bells No Longer Charm Tar Now Ranching Here.

Mix of Prayers and Curiosity Arouses Disgust.

How Jed Wilson Sent Boat to Bottom Long Ago.

"Capt." Jed Wilson, who lives in East Los Angeles, and raises garden truck and chickens, has raised other things in the long years of his life. One of these things was a war vessel, which went up and then went down to stay. "Captain Jed" lives in a shack, alone with the memories of other days, and by habit is uncommunicative. A reporter found him deep in the mysteries of green onions and what to do with a hen that insisted on sitting.

It was Sunday morning and scores of well-dressed people, old and young, passed by on the other side of the road, going to the several churches. Many had a cheery word or kindly nod for the old man.

"Yes, I used to go to church once," he said, reminiscently, "but since the winter of 1878 I have never been inside of one."

"In 1878, I shipped on the whaler Arcturus at Honolulu and we put to sea with 400 barrels of oil and some bone, to meet the Brutus, another ship of the same company, at Callao, and send our oil and bone home in her. We had a thorough seaman for captain but he was a heavy drinker, and hard to work for when he was under the influence. It was no place for me, and I was glad when we made the land off Callao, for I determined to leave her at the first opportunity.

"The Chile-Peruvian war was on then and we found Callao blockaded by the Chilean ironclads. We were hailed and boarded by the Amajonas, the Pilcomayo and the Loa in turn, and had no trouble till the Loa's boat came alongside. The boarding officer of the Loa hailed us in good English and cursed us volubly. Finding all things right, he was about to go over the side and I had thrown the end of a line to his men to hold the stern of the boat in. A heavy swell was on and the line caught under the boat's quarter pull as he reached her gunwale and he was pitched head-foremost overboard. They pushed off the boat and got him with some difficulty, and we filled [illegible] topsail and stood in for the anch[illegible]

KNOCKS OFFICER DOWN.

"Our skipper had to board the flagship and explain the matter to Admiral Lynch before whom this boarding officer had gone with the tale that we did the thing on purpose. I went aboard and assured the admiral, who was most gentlemanly, that it was purely accidental and he was satisfied. Not so the boarding officer. He was in his boat at the flagship's gangway and when I came down he called me all sorts of names and I jumped to the bow and struck him with an oar, knocking him senseless.

"This all meant trouble for me, and as I did not like the ship I asked the captain to put me ashore that night, and he did. I landed on the beach some three miles north of the mole, and spent all that night in the iron hull of the U.S.S. Wateree, that had been driven far ashore in the great tidal wave of some years previous, and which lies in abandonment there to this day.

"I had a bag of clothing and $300 in gold coin, and felt I could make out if I got any sort of a chance. It was about midnight and I had scraped the dry sand out to form a bunk and was lying in a dozing state when I heard voices. I distinguished a word now and again in good United States and jumped up, calling out to the newcomers, but instead of waiting till I could get to them they broke for the high beach like quarter horses. I called to them, and after some parley I could see them returning and soon reassured them that I was no ghost or spy. They proved to be two San Francisco men who had been hired by the Peruvians to trap and sink the Chilean cruisers. I had no difficulty in proving who and what I was, and when I told them of my experience with the officer of the Loa they were pleased, for that was the ship they were after, as she had been very troublesome in overhauling several blockade runners and sinking them.

DIRE PLOT IS HATCHED.

"We went to a hut up the beach and in the morning were up early. I found several Americans, all sailor men, engaged by the Peruvian authorities to help the landing and departing of such as came to or went from the blockaded port. The Chileans kept the open roadstead well covered by their cruisers in the daytime, and two wicked-looking torpedo boats steamed close in shore all night long, and it was difficult to get past them.

"That morning a representative of a New York firearms house wanted to go to Paita to catch the regular P. & O. mail boat for Panama, and I volunteered to help. Fifty miles up the coast at Huaco was a small schooner awaiting his arrival, and we succeeded in rowing him safely to that point. This made me square with the crowd and they opened up to me their plan to trap the Loa.

"There were several difficulties in the plan, and I suggested a wholly different one, which pleased them mightily. We procured an old launch that could carry ten tons of freight. I sought the services of a good machinist in the party, and in four days she was ready to receive her freight. We towed her six miles north of the mouth of the Rimac, and there loaded her with all sorts of green stuff and vegetables, so dear to the sailor when he has been on salt grub for a long time.

"We had noted the regularity of the Loa's passages up and down the Coast, and knew her well from her peculiar rig. When our launch was ready we started out from the beach at early dawn. The Loa saw us, and made for us. She fired several times, but did not come anywhere near hitting us, and it was not till we saw two armed boats' crews pulling for us that we got into a small boat and made for the beach, leaving our launch a prize for the Loa's boats. They at once began the slow and heavy task of towing her out to the Loa.

AT THE LITTLE CHURCH.

"At the point where we landed was a settlement of the poorer population of Callao water front, the people having been driven from their accustomed haunts by the long-range shells thrown at them by the cruisers. They had made a Roman Catholic church of an old storehouse, and, as it was Sunday, all hands were going to mass. For appearance's sake we followed the crowd, and took a stand just inside the door, where we could see the tow on its slow way out to the Loa.

"The padre was dressed in the beautiful vestments of his office, and it was awe-inspiring to us who knew what that launch contained to hear him pray and watch his movements as he went through the mass. There is a part of the service where he lifts up a monstrance, and all the people bow to the ground, and it was when this was being done that we saw the launch go alongside the Loa. One of the men had a pair of good binoculars, and with them I could see the hurry in making her fast, and could note the white dress of the men who jumped aboard her to unload the real treasures (real indeed to hungry sailors who had not had green things for months,) and we counted every passing second, forgetting all about the padre and the services in our great anxiety for the success of the plan.

"They had a bell at the church, which they struck with a wooden hammer, and it gave out a musical sound, and every time it sounded the people would bow and cross themselves, and the padre would say: 'Agnus Dei, qui tollis pecata mundi!' And the people would respond, 'Miserari nobis!'

"It was solemn and reverent, to a degree, but to us it was torture.

"Just after this exercise, and just as the boys who served the padre were about to execute some part of the service, the dead stillness was broken by an explosion. I looked to see the Loa, enveloped in a cloud of steam and smoke, settle by the stern and go instantly out of sight.

CROWD RUSHES OUT.

"The crowd in the church rushed frantically out to see her as she sank, and every one of them regarded it as a special act of providence in behalf of Peru. They set up a howl of delight, punctuated with prayers, dancing with delight and acting so devilish in their glee at the awful fate of the men on the Loa, that I, who had compassed that awful carnage, felt disgusted, and I have sidestepped churches ever since. There was apparently so much of worship in the service, and so much of hell in the people, that it broke my faith in both, and I have never regained it.

"What sunk the Loa? Well, I had rigged a spring and trigger in the bottom of the launch, and loaded the center with fifteen sticks of dynamite. I set the trigger on a spring held down by a sack of potatoes, and on top of that had loaded all sorts of garden truck, to make a tempting display. They set at work to transfer the stuff to the ship, piece by piece, and, as I learned after, they were in high glee at the prize they had captured, till a man got hold of the last sack of potatoes, and the spring was released, and 123 men never knew what hit them.

"English, American, Italian and German men-of-war lying near the city all lower boats and raced with the boats of the Chilean warships to save life, and succeeded in picking up some thirty men, but no officer, and I knew the officer who boarded us was gone with the crowd.

I was paid well for my work, and after[illegible] a hand in helping Capt. Paul Boynton in his attempt to blow up the Blanco Encalada—but that's another story.

"When Fighting Bob Evans had his trouble in Valparaiso, some years after, and put the screws on the 'dons,' it was all caused by the enmity against Americans, engendered by several tricks played on the Chielans in that war."

ALL "DO POLITICS."

That's What State Senator Belshaw Suggests as Means of Getting Better Government.

State Senator C. M. Belshaw of Contra Costa county was the guest of honor yesterday at the weekly luncheon of the members of the City Club in the dining-room of the Westminster Hotel.

Fully three hundred and fifty guests were present when Chairman Lee C. Gates introduced Senator Belshaw as the speaker of the day. "Good Citizens in Politics," was his subject. He urged that good citizens—those who perform the usual functions of father, husband, etc., and who pay their bills promptly, but, who, for some reason, refrain from entering actively into politics—awaken to present conditions and do their duty by taking an active interest in political affairs.

"The people are responsible for whatever government we have," said Senator Belshaw. "We will never get rid of graft in politics until we get rid of graft in business. Education and our point of view are largely responsible for our opinion as to what is graft and what is not graft. For instance, those men who have taken rebates from transportation companies for many years have come to believe that there is nothing wrong in accepting them, and that, as a matter of fact, they are entitled to them.

"Those public officials who are constantly being importuned to grant special privileges to those who are willing to pay for things they ought not to have after a while see nothing wrong in granting privileges to those people who want to get something they know they are not entitled to.

"I believe that those who are elected to public office desire to do what is right when they are first elected. However, they are often led astray by friends who are constantly asking some little favor which could not be granted with propriety to every one.

"Just as the stability of anything depends upon its foundation, so the permanency of good government depends upon the foundation. I think the citizen should, above all, vote at primary elections, thus assisting in the election of proper delegates to the conventions.

"If you want good government you must interest yourself in politics. In other words, you must 'do politics'—do straight politics and see that others do politics."

Do You Care More For The Income Than The Principal?

Some Speculative Investments Pay Abnormal Incomes, But How About The Principal?

"Few pieces of good business property change hands. The reason is that very few parcels are on the market. It is probably no exaggeration to say that there are ten buyers for such property for one seller. Any piece on the market is snapped up at once at the full price. Sometimes a buyer is so persistent in his desire to acquire a good piece of such property that he offers a new record price to get what he wishes. Rents are high in the business center and vacant premises almost unknown. Dear as money is, it does not at 5 to 7 per cent. in large sums bring the income paid by well-improved property in the business center of Los Angeles. Men of means and experience know that when business is generally slower in the United States, interest rates will be lower. The real property will be higher. Besides, in seven years the population of Los Angeles has increased nearly 200 per cent. and is still growing rapidly. More population means higher rent and higher prices for property."—Fact and Comment, Los Angeles Times, Oct. 20, 1907.

¶ For five years units of business property have been paying regular quarterly dividends as promptly as the 10th of March, June, September and December rolls around.

¶ These annual dividends range from 6 to 8 per cent. and the increase in value of each property developed by the Associated Trustee Companies has been as much more, thereby increasing the value of each unit.

¶ Others are getting these results and you can get them.

¶ Business property is the safest and best paying kind of property, and, therefore, the best investment is

UNITS OF BUSINESS PROPERTY Unencumbered

They convey a clear unencumbered title;
They never pass a dividend day;
They steadily grow in value;
They constantly increase in earning power;
They are non-taxable;
They are unaffected by the speculative world.

¶ To receive these benefits you must make a start, and the sooner you start the greater will be the increase in the value of each Unit for you. The Trustee Company offers (subject to previous sale and advance in price) the remaining limited number of Units of Trustee Property No. 2 at $1000 each, and fractional tenths at proportionate price.

¶ Look at the property, located on Broadway, between Fourth and Fifth streets. There are 525 Units. If all the property (ground and building) is worth $525,000, then each Unit is worth $1000. As a matter of fact, this property could not be duplicated today for this amount and Units of this property will not long continue on the market at this price. When this company says Property No. 2 will pay 8 per cent. net to Unit Owners in rental dividends, plus the increased value, we mean it. The building is 75 per cent. completed and 60 per cent. leased, and based on these leases, still allowing 10 per cent. for possible vacancies, this property will pay 8 per cent. to investors. Until the building is completed investors are guaranteed 6 per cent.

¶ There is nothing about this investment you cannot know.

Louis Gets Control of Smoke Nuisance.

Angeles Told How to Do the Same Thing.

System Saves Fuel, Labor and Annoyance.

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LOUIS, Oct. 22.—The St. Louis inspector has received a letter the secretary of the Los Angeles of Health relative to a smoke ordinance in that city. The officials explain that it is to prohibit by legislation for more than five minutes at from the same stack, but according to Smoke Inspector Jones of St. this means nothing. He says foundry or factory stack could forth great clouds of smoke for minutes, and then cease for a minute and begin over if no more restrictions were placed on the stacks than mentioned.

regulations in St. Louis do not any time, and the smoke inspector and his five or six deputies are to bring cases against almost any manufacturer or other smoke maker stacks issue black smoke for than a minute. Discretion, however, is used, and if stacks do not more than a minute or two each two or three times an hour no are preferred. If the inspector of his assistants notices too smoke from any particular stack is made, and the actual time of nuisance taken. If the same stack reported two or three days in succession the chief orders evidence for a and the inspector goes to the to determine if there are any by which the smoke could be prevented. If it is found that a careless fireman has been employed, or the are not equipped with the proper prevention appliances, an information is sworn out, and the manager company called into court.

of probably 300 cases in the past almost every one was assessed minimum fine of $25, while some fined larger amounts. So general been the charges and convictions almost every steam boiler is with smoke-prevention appliances and smoke has been almost entirely eliminated, except in the railroad yards. A committee of East St. business men were to see Smoke Inspector Jones a few days ago relative to similar legislation for that city, saying there was no smoke from city visible from the east side of river.

owners of factories, who have bitterly fighting the smoke regulation, have now become reconciled to new condition of things, and many them have openly expressed themselves as glad the city has taken action against smoke, as they had financially benefited through the installation better equipment and a saving of and labor. Mr. Jones said the saving in coal through proper equipment and proper firing had been almost per cent. in some of the factories, big factory saving as much as $9000. There is now little opposition the smoke regulation, and no cases been filed in court for two or months.

smoke abatement is in the hands regular department, created by an of the municipal assembly. The inspector and his deputies are appointed by the Mayor, and the department is operated in conjunction the police department. Patrolmen authorized to assist the smoke inspectors, and to report to the Chief of all violations of the smoke regulations which they may notice. The Chief of Police is required to report violations learned by him through patrolmen to the chief smoke inspector. In that way the smoke abatement department has six regular men, is indirectly served by the 2000 men the police department, making violations of the smoke regulations exceedingly dangerous. In addition to the provided for violations of the anti-smoke ordinances the same ordinance provides a penalty of from $25 to $100 any interference with an inspector attempts to enter a boiler-room to the required inspection.

inspectors are employed to regular inspections, and each is assigned to a certain district. These the different factories and make reports of their findings, this re-

EUCALYPTUS VALUES MANY.

Lumber Is Susceptible of Fine Finish and Bids Fair to Find Place in Furniture Manufacture—Conservative Estimate of Its Worth Is Flattering.

BY D. C. BURSON.

My article on growing the eucalyptus, published in The Times a few weeks ago, brought numerous inquiries from all over Southern California, Arizona and New Mexico. One question in almost every letter was: "Where can I procure the young eycalyptus trees for forest planting?"

Not being in the propagating business or even a nursery agent, I would suggest that those who are in the business place their card in some of our leading journals.

Another question: "What kind of soil, and how should it be prepared for the successful growing of the eucalyptus?"

Any good land free from alkali or hardpan. In fact, it is a tree adapted to a great variety of soils, yet the better the land the greater the growth. The preparation of the land depends largely upon the condition of the soil, but in all cases I would advise deep plowing. And should there be a clay or tough subsoil, I would use a subsoil plow. Work the surface until it is perfectly pliable.

"How often and how long should the young trees be irrigated?"

That also depends upon conditions. High, dry land, where water is a long way from the surface, requires pretty thorough irrigating, sufficient, at least, to keep the root moist through the hot dry season, for at least two summers. Low moist land would not require more than one season of irrigation.

"Is 6x6 feet far enough apart to plant the eucalyptus for all practical purposes?"

I would say if your object is poles or spares, it is, but if the object is saw timber (which is doubtless the most profitable part of eucalyptus growing) I would give more room on account of having it grow several years longer before cutting; 8x8 will give sufficient space for growing large trees.

"What other values, except for poles, spares, ties and wood, does the eucalyptus possess?"

In answer to this question I am led to believe from recent investigations that these should be classed among its minor values, for it has been discovered that epcalyptus lumber is susceptible of a very fine finish and as the different varieties possess various shades and colors, it has an untold value for furniture, office work or inside of cars, or fine houses. Numerous samples of this wood, polished, can be seen in Los Angeles. It requires an expert to see the difference between the E. Rostsata (red gum) and San Domingo mahogany. And it is well known that mahogany commands an enormous price in our eastern markets.

It would, therefore, (from present investigations and discoveries) be impossible to place a future value upon the lumber of this important tree. And yet from our experience of over thirty years in growing other timber trees we are inclined to make a conservative estimate of possible profits to be derived in growing the eucalyptus as a combination of saw timber and poles. Saw the butt and use the top for poles and wood.

With this object in view, and by planting less than 700 trees to the acre with a probable future stand of 500, the expense would naturally be greater per tree than when planting exclusively for poles, but, supposing it would double that amount, say 10 cents per tree all told, there is no other expense except the land, which may be almost any price, but we are convinced that good eucalyptus land can be bought in Southern California at prices ranging from $20 to $50 an acre, according to location.

We can, therefore, safely place the cost of a eucalyptus grove with 500 trees to the acre at $100 per acre. That would include first-class land, well located. The results would, of course, be governed by the length of time the trees are left standing and the price of lumber at that time, which doubtless would be much higher than at present, as fifteen or twenty years hence we shall be close on the heels of a timber famine.

The older the tree the better the sawed lumber, but by placing the time of cutting fifteen years from the time of planting, we are warranted by experience and observation in saying that the first sixteen feet of each tree will cut 150 feet of inch boards. As we are making a very conservative estimate, we will place the cut at only 100 feet, with the supposition that it will take half of that to cut and saw it, which will leave but fifty feet to each tree, or 25,000 feet to the acre.

As to its future value we will make no prediction—it may be worth 10, 20 or even 30 cents per foot, but we will estimate it at the present price of common pine lumber—3 cents per foot, or $1.50 per tree. As the trees would probably be over 100 feet in height at the time of cutting, the balance of the tree would easily bring $1 for poles and wood. This would place each tree at the low price of $2.50, or $1250 per acre, or $125,000 for a 100-acre grove costing less than $10,000.

Now this looks like an enormous percentage on a fifteen-year investment, yet every indication points to three or four times that amount. Why will capital permit a timber famine?

RAILROAD NOTES.

THE Illinois Central has established 277 new industries during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, representing a capitalization of $16,915,300, with 12,640 employés. With the exception of a few manufacturing plants located on joint tracks at competitive points, these concerns were all located along Illinois Central roads, thereby making them large feeders of traffic to the railroads.

There are 49,572 individual holders of the 6,241,238 shares of Pennsylvania Railroad stock, the outstanding value of which is $312,061,900. Other interesting features of these holdings are that 19.27 per cent. of them are held abroad and 46.92 per cent. of the entire number of stockholders are women, an increase of 296 over the number in August. The average number of shares held by each person is 126 of a par value of $6300, and while during September the number of holders increased 674, the average number of shares held by each decreased by two.

The aggregate track mileage in Texas is 15,482.01. The total main line sidings and spurs is 12,575.56. Of the mileage constructed last year, 363.66 miles was built by the old roads and 168.10 miles by new roads.

The Japanese narrow-gauge railroads have been able to increase their speed from twenty-four to thirty-five miles an hour by means of a small machine carried on a locomotive. The contrivance is not unlike a seismograph, which records the length and severity of earthquakes. When used on the locomotive it makes a record of the place where the jolt takes place and of its size, whether due to bad joints in the track or other uneven conditions. The Japanese have even been able to locate soft ties along the track which the inspector did not find. These instruments are very expensive, though in size they are only 10x12x18 inches and weigh thirty-three pounds. They are so sensitive that on being drawn across an apparently smooth floor they record the nailheads and knots in the wood. The record is made on a sheet of paper which unwinds from a roll, and is written with ink by a sapphire-pointed pen.

Details of a marvelous electric railroad now projected from Milan to Genoa, Italy, are given by L. B. Ward in the October World Today. Although only eighty-five miles long, the road will encounter such a mass of tunnels and bridges that the cost will average over $500,000 a mile. To avoid all grade crossings 372 bridges and 19 tunnels are to be constructed, one tunnel being twelve miles long. It will take six years to complete the line. Electric locomotives of 1000-horse-power will be used, with a 72,000-horse-power current generated by water power, giving a speed of eighty miles an hour. The road is to carry freight as well as passengers and will link the two cities into one community.

The railroads of the United States are owned by about 450,000 stockholders. The last accurate count was made three years ago by the Interstate Commerce Commission, when the number was 327,000. Since that time the growth in capital stock has been very heavy, so that a corresponding large increase in the number of shareholders has likely occurred. The Pennsylvania has many more than double as many owners as any other railroad in America, having fully one-tenth of the total number.

CARING FOR ORPHANS.

Members of Camp Roosevelt, No. 9, United Spanish War Veterans, have assumed the care temporarily of the two young children of Mrs. Ella Hensey, the widow who was fatally injured about ten days ago, while crossing a trestle near the Bimini Baths. In addition to caring for the orphans, the members of the camp paid the funeral expenses of Mrs. Hensey and made payments on a lot which she had contracted to purchase, and which now will go to the little ones.

PASADENA.

BUSINESS GOOD IN CROWN CITY.

INCLEMENT WEATHER IS DELAYING MANY TRANSACTIONS.

Arrival of Winter Tourists Will Result in Realty Activity, Prediction—Much Money in Plumbing and Electric Wiring—Building Report Small.

Wet weather during the past week has affected the real estate market in Pasadena seriously. There is no falling off in the volume of inquiry from the East, but local sales have dropped because, during the almost constant downpour, investors were loathe to turn out and examine property. Still there is a healthy movement of property deals, although the building permits show a very dull condition of affairs. Only $11,700 are shown by the books of the building inspector as the total of permits for the week. Twenty-five new jobs have been opened, none of them of importance. As against this showing electrical and plumbing business shows healthy activity. During the past week more than $50,000 has been expended on electrical fittings and $25,000 has been spent for plumbing connections. All the east wing of the Hotel Greene has been rewired, and the new fixtures are now being installed. This is the largest item in the weekly report of business. In the Sunset district along Fair Oaks avenue, the residents are making connections with the sewer, and scores of houses in other portions of the city have begun to provide new sanitation. The movement in this direction is noticeable and shows healthy growth.

A. S. Gaylord has projected a fine residence on San Rafael Heights. The land has cost him $10,000, and he proposes to erect a $13,000 home on the site. The permit will likely be asked for during next week as all of the plans of the owner are completed.

Lindley & Co. report that they have $115,000 pending in sales of lots, which will be completed during the coming week. This situation is typical. J. H. Woodworth has two sales pending that will total more than $40,000. P. J. McNally says that realty in Altadena shows up well. Curbing and paving of streets is progressing rapidly, and with the opening of improvements in sections, inquiries are being received from investors and home seekers.

From the office of J. C. Brainerd comes the most important news of the week. In Prospect Park, William Davies has purchased a lot for $4000 and has already begun work on a $6000 dwelling. Mr. Davies is the vice-president of the Ganahl-Davies Lumber Co. Another sale reported by J. C. Brainerd is that of the property at No. 245 South Lake avenue, the Kaufman residence, which was bought by two Pomona women for $9000. In acreage property the same agent has sold for J. B. Bonnallie five acres on San Pasqual street for $12,000. The buyer is Theodore Hegeman.

C. T. James, during last week, has sold the residence at No. 825 East Walnut street for J. B. Snider, to a Pasadena investor. The same agent also sold the property at No. 365 Park street for J. S. Hoeffler to Peter Deidrich for $2300. Two lots on Allen avenue, near Colorado street, were bought by Mrs. Elizabeth Randall for the purpose of erecting a home. The lots are 100 feet front, and will be used as building site.

From inquiries received from the East the winter will be one of the busiest known for Pasadena. Scores of eastern people have planned to locate in this city. The transactions are delayed pending the arrival of the tourists and no information can be given out concerning the details, but it is safe to say that with this week's inquiries added there is application for fully $500,000 worth of property.

The inquiry for fine cottages and choice apartments for the winter was never so numerous, and indicates that a wealthy class of people is on the way to Pasadena, many of whom say it is their intention to settle here permanently or at least to build winter homes here.

—o—

Care of Street Trees.

In many eastern cities the trees aligning the streets are the pride of the citizens. Scores of residence streets in St. Louis and other eastern cities have a magnificent growth of trees which spread their boughs across the driveway until they interlace overhead, giving the effect of some "long-drawn aisle and fretted vault" of a Gothic cathedral. The tops of these magnificent trees tower far above the houses all along these streets. Now, it is the opinion of the people of St. Louis, and they have impressed this opinion upon the authorities, that these trees are not private property. A tree, once planted in a city street, becomes the property of the city; that is, of the whole public. It is recognized that the owner of the property abutting on this portion of the street has no right to mutilate, much less to remove, one of these street trees. The St. Louis people and those of other eastern cities have carried this idea of public ownership in trees to a point beyond this. They have impressed upon electric and street-car corporations that the trees along the streets do not belong to these corporations. The myrmidons of these utility organizations have no more right to mutilate in any way a tree in any street than the owner of the property adjoining has. That is as true here as in St. Louis, but the city authorities there hold the corporations to a strict account for mutilating any of the street trees. It is different here.

—o—

The Beauty of Our Trees.

It must be acknowledged that the beeches and birches, the maples and other shade trees which are used to adorn the streets of many eastern cities are possessed of both beauty and dignity in a very high degree. But the possible variety is very narrow, compared with what obtains here in Southern California. The acacias, Grevilleas, eucalypti, palms and pepper trees which flourish in this mild climate afford material for endless variety in the decoration of streets. The maples and beeches, towering as the heights are to which they reach, are Lilliputian, compared with the lordly grace of our eucalypti when well developed. The Grevillea is another magnificent tree for street purposes, and there are several varieties of acacia which afford material for lending great beauty to a street scene. After all, many are of the opinion that the pepper, with the graceful droop of its lace-like foliage, is the most beautiful street tree known, even here in Southern California. The number of these trees of striking beauty which have been destroyed in and about Los Angeles in the last few years constitutes something very much akin to a crime. The admiration that eastern people bestow upon this beautiful tree is marvelous. Many of these visitors think the pepper tree as strong an attraction in the landscape as orange groves.

—o—

Property Owners' Duty.

He is an undesirable citizen, whether a property owner or a tenant, who will not "sweep in front of his own front door." Time was when individual care was the only provision for keeping a street in proper order. Every man then had "to sweep before his own front door." In many of the subdivisions laid out within recent years in Los Angeles very proper building restrictions attach to the ownership of the property, compelling the buyers to build their houses back from the inner line of the sidewalk a sufficient number of feet to permit of beautiful parking effect along the street sides. This space is nearly always devoted to lawn with flowering shrubs and borders of flowering plants along the edges. In paving streets the gutters are a very important feature. Where these are paved with cobblestones or even with squared granite blocks, it is impossible to keep them properly cleaned. The propper gutter is a cement one, nearly as smooth as the sidewalk. Where such a gutter is provided and the occupant of the house is of a proper frame of mind, the gutter is at all times kept quite as clean as the sidewalk. Of course these shade trees shed a great deal of foliage. The eucalyptus is a very "dirty" tree, especially the species which sheds its bark as well as its leaves. There is a species which do not shed their bark and some of them bear clusters of beautiful flowers. Of course, like all other desirable things, these trees entail a good deal of trouble upon the occupants of the premises. The leaves must be swept up or raked off and burned and the gutter must be flushed with a hose provided with a nozzle to give proper force to the water about once a day. But all this trouble is ten times paid for in the beauty of the well kept street, with beautiful lawns and graceful shade trees along the sidewalk. It might not be out of the way to suggest neighborhood meetings from time to time and the voting of John Smith or Jim Jones as undesirable citizens in cases where the sidewalks and gutters are not properly taken care of

470 ACRES OF
CHOICE ORANGE LAND
WITH AN ABUNDANCE OF FREE WATER
$45 AN ACRE

This tract is admirably located for Valencia as well as navel oranges, being frostless and protected on all sides. It is twelve miles from Porterville, and surrounded by groves from which they are picking ripe fruit at this time, samples of which we have in our office. Water is free and in abundance, the property having a constant flow of 100 inches. Packing houses only half a mile. This locality is in a class by itself, as the fruit ripens fully six weeks ahead of any other section in the State. Under these conditions, it is hard to say what this property will be worth in a few years, for its earning capacity is ahead of any other section, and the available orange land in this locality is all taken up. There is about 210 acres of this tract ideal orange land, and located as it is, having free water, would be cheap at $200 an acre. There are 100 acres of rich sub-irrigated bottom land, that would cut 10 tons of alfalfa hay per acre, and would be a bargain at $150 per acre, and 170 acres producing an abundance of feed would make a good cattle ranch. We have personally inspected this property, and do not hesitate to recommend it as a real bargain. The place would be cheap as a whole at $150 an acre. The owner needs money, and we can deliver the property for $45 an acre.

Record Price for Whittier Orange and Lemon Grove—Easterner Pays Fifteen Thousand for Five Acres.

Three thousand dollars an acre, or $15,000 for a five-acre lemon and orange ranch is the biggest sensation reported in Whittier realty circles for several months. This is the reported consideration paid by William Bush of Milwaukee, for a ranch of that size just north of Whittier. The grantor is Fred L. Wilson of Whittier.

Included in the ranch are two and nine-eleventh acres of full-bearing lemons. The balance os tfe acreage is in two-year-old Valencia orange trees.

This price is said to be the highest on record from the local Quaker City. The ranch is conceded to be one of the best in the section, although not lying within the limits of the well-known East Whittier section, being just inside the northern limits of this city.

The ranch has been owned by Wilson for the past year and a half, and has given him an income of $2800 this past season. The high price paid is the direct result of the fine condition of the trees, none of which are diseased. The new owner is a stranger in California, having been here since the first of October.

QUICK INCREASE IN VALUE.

Five Thousand Advance in Six Months on Upland Ranch—Sold to Pomonan.

The Paulin ranch on Monte Vista avenue, in Upland, which was recently sold to Mr. Temple for $25,000, has now been transferred to P. W. Nisbet of Pomona, the consideration being $30,000. Mr. Temple had the property less than six months. The ranch consists of twenty acres of oranges. The location and improvements are especially good.

PASTOR BUYS PARSONAGE.

Nine-Room Dwelling on West Thirty-third Street Sold to Rev. Henry of First Baptist.

Ingram & Briggs report the sale to Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Los Angeles, of the large nine-room dwelling at No. 405 West Thirty-third street, for a consideration of $6500. The grantor is Mrs. Luella M. Dowling. The property is on a large lot, finely improved, and will make an admirable parsonage residence. R. L. Hubbard & Co., acted as agents for Rev. Henry.

Ingram & Briggs have also sold for Robert B. Mills, a lot on Cambridge street, near Oxford avenue, to Retta E. Dunseth, for a consideration of $2100. The purchaser bought to build.

TEN THOUSAND FOR CORNER.

C. C. Tatum has sold to J. Frank Bowen for Arthur J. and Emma Little, the northeast corner of West Adams street and Arlington avenue for $10,000. The lot is 150x145 feet in size, and is one of the choicest residence sites in the section. There are several handsome and imposing homes close by, and as the lot is on high ground a magnificent view of the city may be had. It is vacant.

TEN TIMES AS MUCH.

Two weeks ago an article was published in this department, mentioning that J. A. Fitch & Co. of Pomona had sold $10,000 worth of country and suburban property within the preceding week. The agent has since sent in a correction, stating that the firm name is J. A. Fitch, and the amount of property handled was $100,000.

PRETTY SUBURB.

SOUTH PASADENA HOMES HANDSOME.

CROWDING PARENT TOWN FOR LEADING RANK.

Rapidly Building Up, With Many Magnificent Dwellings and Will Soon Rank With Crown City—Fine Place Near Arroyo, Another on Garfield Avenue.

It is said that there are more magnificent homes in the beautifully located suburb of South Pasadena than are to be found in any similar section of Southern California. The growing city is fact crowding Pasadena for first place, in the ranks of handsome Los Angeles suburbs, at least. The home sites on the banks of the Arroyo Seco, and among the oaks of the Oneonta Park section, are among the prettiest found anywhere, and are being improved with handsome dwellings, and, in many cases, with veritable mansions. Two of these larger homes are illustrated in this section today. There are many more of similar size and magnificence.

Occupying the crest of a hill near the Monterey Road, South Pasadena, overlooking the Arroyo Seco, and with an imposing view of the entire San Gabriel Valley and the mountains to the north, the home of Fred R. Salter of the H. Raphael Company, recently completed at a cost of $25,000, is among the show places of the country.

A photo of the imposing colonial-style house appears in a group with another of South Pasadena's beautiful homes, and shows a comfortable-looking mansion of the modern type. Within a few hundred feet of this house are the homes of A. C. Bilicke and the two Gates's homes, and several other prominent people.

The building is two-stories high and contains sixteen large rooms. The ground area is 60x62 feet, and the house is surrounded by two acres of land. The foundation is of reinforced concrete, and there is a cement-floored porch on two sides of the house, twelve feet wide and 120 feet long. There are two fronts similar to each other, with an iron balcony at the second-floor level, sixteen feet long. The living-room is 22x30 feet in size, and is finished in oak, as is the remainder of the house, with plate-glass windows, and other modern finishings.

The grounds, on the Monterey Road side, are faced with a cobble-stone wall, 237 feet in length. Two hundred feet of this wall is ten feet high. High entrance columns rise above this height. The lands are now being improved by a landscape gardener. The architects are Garret & Bixby.

The home of C. W. Dobbins on Garfield avenue, near Monterey Road, illustrated in the group on this page, is one of the handsomest in South Pasadena. As the photograph shows, it is of typical English Elizabethan architecture. The building is set in grounds of ten acres extent, with a smooth lawn in front, and the beautiful Arroyo Seco in the rear. The ground plan is somewhat like an irregular "U" in shape, with the opening to the east, while the main facade of the house fronts on Garfield avenue.

The exterior finish is of hard-burned brick to the second-story level, with hard plaster and typical exposed timber work of the old English style above. There is a large porte cochere facing the street, back of which is the main enarance into a magnificent reception hall. Large rooms open to the right and left. The ceilings of the first-floor rooms have been made exceptionally high in order to accommodate a complete set of furniture and furnishings, which were in the eastern home of Mrs. Dobbins. In all there are twenty-five rooms in the house.

CITRUS ORCHARDS SOLD.

Colton Groves Bring Good Prices. Three Places Change Hands Last Week.

C. B. Hamilton has sold his home place on the terrace, at Colton, consisting of three acres of oranges and a seven-room house, to Mrs. Claude Bailey; consideration, $3000.

Charles B. Fuller has purchased of Dan Sunba nine acres of oranges and a seven-room cottage, located on the terrace; consideration, $10,000.

J. E. Matot has exchanged his property on the corner of Seventh and H streets of that place for the residence property on A street belonging to M. E. Johnson. Numerous lots are being sold in the new tracts in East Colton, and many new homes are being erected on the property.

VENTURA LAND VALUABLE.

Mrs. George W. Phillips of Santa Barbara, who recently sold her Las Posas tract in Ventura to Simon Cohn of this county for $25,000, has purchased fifty acres of the Dixie Thompson Rancho near that city, paying $16,250 for the property.

EARTHY.

BIG POMONA ACREAGE DEAL

PRICE IS QUARTER MILLION DOLLARS CASH.

Thousand Acres Between Pomona and Ontario Sold to Emil Firth. Adjoins Rich Citrus Orchards. Plenty of Water from Pumping Plant—Will Be Subdivided.

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is the reported consideration paid by Emil Firth for one thousand acres of citrus land between Pomona and Ontario. The grantors in this large transaction are W. A. Boynge, Charles N. Flint, George E. Hart and M. N. Newmark.

Part of the land is in the Ontario city limits. The Southern Pacific Railroad and the Salt Lake line have stations on the property. Holt avenue, lined with beautiful homes, and the main thoroughfare between Ontario and Pomona, is one block to the north. The land adjoins some of the best citrus orchards in the valley, such as the famed groves of the Crawford Brothers, with their large packing-house and other well-known properties. Central avenue intersects the land north and south and Fifth avenue east and west. It is expected that the extension of the Covina electric line to Riverside will run through the tract.

A pumping plant operated by a powerful electric motor supplies a large quantity of water. The purchaser will at once develop more water and build two, or more, large reservoirs of sufficient size to abundantly supply the entire tract. He will place the land under cultivation, plant part of it to orange and lemon trees and place it on the market in five and ten-acre lots to meet the demand for such properties.

$1000 cash buys the most complete bungalow in Los Angeles. This bungalow is different in plan and details from any house you have ever seen. Very wide across the front, it gives more porch room than most houses twice its size. Artistic living-room, reception-room and dining-room run across the house and can be opened up in a manner to make entertaining very convenient. Hardwood floors of the finest quality with stained woodwork, many little things being built in, such as bookcases and window seats make it take little money to furnish it. The two bedrooms which communicate through a bathroom fitted with the most up-to-date plumbing, are prettily tinted and painted in white enamel. Large closets and many places to put things make this an easy bungalow to keep house in.

The price only $3500. Seems very low when you consider it is built on a 50-foot lot on a wide street in a rapidly-growing neighborhood in the southwest.

The popularity of the bungalow as a home seems to be greatly on the increase in this city, and we find the demand for this class of residences to be almost in excess of the supply. When we have a good one like the one offered below, it's been our experience that it does not stay on the market long.

Here's a description of it: It is situated on a lot 60x165 to an alley, in the Westlake district; was built but a short time ago; it has six large rooms; quartered-oak polished floors; attic and cellar. It's only a short distance from the business center (close in) and among some of the finest homes in the city.

The house cost $3000 to build; we estimate the lot worth $4000; the property is cheap at $6500. For a short time we can offer it at $5750, which is a Bargain-Day price.

The floors are of highly-polished quarter-sawed white oak, the entrance of handsome oak and bevel-plate glass, approached over a fine cement driveway.

The reception hall is large and has art glass windows on the landing of the elegant winding staircase. The living-room is spacious with 5-foot paneling in oak, above which the finish is imported Spanish leather. Here is a built-in bookcase 12 feet long; also writing desk in the same treatment. The walls of the dining-room are paneled in leather and silk tapestries; there is also a built-in buffet with bevel-plate glass and hard-metal doors, and opalescent rear windows, while the woodwork of the room is finished in antique oak. At the price—$525 up—there are no other lots in the city so well located and with such high-class improvements as those now being sold in

PECKHAM'S

MONETA-AVE. SQUARE.

This tract is located down in the Moneta-ave. section, the liveliest spot on the city map, and right in the Pathway of Progress. It's not all speculation down here. People are buying lots and BUILDING HOMES—hundreds of 'em, and a good class of homes they are. Everything's here to make life enjoyable; bracing atmosphere, beautiful view, good car service and agreeable surroundings.

The approach to MONETA AVE. SQUARE from the business district is pleasing and conducive to peace of mind and body; no factories to pass, no clouds of smoke, no bridges, no dangerous crossings, no Shacktown. You'll like it out here; when you see the lots you'll see the wisdom of investing in just such property as this. High-class improvements are all COMPLETED. New short line to Redondo passes through center of tract on Moneta ave. You can buy these lots on easy terms. Let us take you out or call for free tickets and go alone. Come any day.

With plenty of free water.
$45 an acre.

The place contains 500 acres, 150 of which is as good orange land as there is; 100 acres more is rich bottom land suitable for alfalfa, and the balance produced a wonderful growth of feed, and is a very attractive cattle proposition. The improvements consist of a good home of 8 rooms, with water piped through it, having modern conveniences, good barn with corrals, outbuildings, good fences and a water power plant that puts the water on the highest point of the land. The property has a constant flow of 500 inches of water that is free. There is also 1000 navel stock 3 years old that goes with the place. The place has a good many large live oak trees which would cut 500 cords of wood. This property can be had for what the water alone is worth, and for one wanting a good ranch they cannot beat this in the State. We have examined the property and with the water and improvements, we consider it worth double what we can deliver it for. Price $45 per acre.

FOR SALE—
SAN PEDRO HARBOR.
THE PACIFIC WHARF AND STORAGE COMPANY.

The value of property on the inner harbor of San Pedro and its value for dockage, manufacturing and warehouse purposes has been apparent in connection with the development by the government during several years past.

This company is now extending and filling in some eighty-three acres on the left hand side of the harbor going out, immediately adjacent to Dead Man's Island on the south and the Salt Lake's improvements to the north.

Its property extends along and faces the inner harbor some 2500 feet, and over 5000 feet on the east and south front. It holds title by virtue of U. S. government permits authorizing the occupation of the space enclosed by the building of the outer bulkhead and allows the removal of the inner jetty for the purpose of building projected slips and docks for vessels.

The work of improvement has now reached the point of partial or near completion of outer bulkhead for about 4000 feet, and considerable of the inner space is filled or reclaimed to varying depths. The work of filling is now in progress by the U. S. dredger. The company's title has been confirmed by act of the Legislature covering this grant.

The Salt Lake Railroad, with whom very friendly relations exist, has entered into contract with the Pacific Wharf and Storage Company to extend its tracks upon the property wherever required, and guarantees rates and charges as low as granted to anyone, on through and local freight to and from the property of the Pacific Wharf and Storage Co.

The project when completed contemplates on the property of the company some 10,000 feet of dock frontage, one-half of it on the protected inner harbor, and the other on the outer side available during the most of the year. Also private and public warehouses, bonded and free, dock cranes and machinery, coal chutes, oil tanks, ship and boat yards, dry docks, machine shops, lumber, marble and stone yards, planing mills, fish shipping, drying and canning factories, electric light, power, water and gas works, shipping supply houses and factories, hotels and residences—all accessible to docks, railway sidings, avenues and streets, on a broad and comprehensive plan.

When available, and this should be within a year from this time, the land will be leased, and it is estimated should easily provide a fund of a million dollars or the income of the same. In addition to this source will be the income derived from the docking and unloading of vessels, charges for storage and warehousing, with many other incidental and profitable sources of income which will pay large legitimate dividends and provide ample sinking fund or reserve.

The authorized capital is one million dollars, with shares of par value of one hundred dollars each. This stock has all been issued but the undersigned has a block for sale of a few hundred shares at a price only justified by the present financial conditions.

The authorized issue of bonds is $300,000, of which $150,000 have been sold, the proceeds being used for the building of the outer bulkhead, and the balance to be applied absolutely to the continuation of work that may be desirable to complete the projects of the company, provide slips and docks, warehouses, lighting and water development, etc.

Among the directors and stockholders are:
J. C. Wickham, President, Treasurer Merchants' Trust Co.
L. Blankenhorn, Secy., Bonds and Stocks.
Thos. Hughes, Hughes Mfg. Co., and Manager Western Union Oil Co.
Hon. R. N. Bulla, Director Central Bank and Treasurer Central Oil Co.
Geo. A. Parkyns, Presdt. Imperial City Bank.
W. C. Petchner, Secy. and Treas. Pacific Sugar Co.
John T. Gaffey, Capitalist, San Pedro.
P. M. Gaffey, Capitalist, San Pedro, and others.

A visit to the property of the Pacific Wharf and Storage Co. will give assurance that the plans above outlined are proceeding to completion with energy and economical administration, and it appeals to us as an investment and speculation having more possibilities of great profit and income than any other proposition offered at this time.

Song Birds on Homeward Wing.
Signor Lambardi's lyric stars are returning from San Diego today, where they have been playing for several days, and will inaugurate the second half of the local season tomorrow night.

TOPICS OF THE STAGE.

The opera season is only half over, but in facing the second half—it begins tomorrow night—the musical public is in an exact position to weigh and temper its expectations; the singers are all known; there is no longer any portentous human mystery.

Lambardi's company is a remarkably peaceful one. No organization of its caliber visiting Los Angeles in years has evinced so much good-fellowship. Of course, the management issues stealthily, from time to time, the shop-worn sensation about the fights of the prima donna, but the sight of Bertozzi and Ferrabini arm in arm all day long, or of Padovani applauding from the wings, rapidly discounts this trouble tale.

Off stage, Parola and Wulman are the chief comedians.

By vigorous stretching, Parola can manage to reach Wulman's broad face. Using the huge basso's ears and nose as mimic keys, Parola makes a cuckoo-clock out of his elephantine friend, and—for the edification of visitors—makes the deep voice strike the hours in the cheeriest soprano "Peep," imaginable.

Parola's care of his own crystalline voice, or rather his lack of care, is a matter of comment. There is none of the stay-in-bed, dark-room and hot towels business in it for him on the day he sings. Far from it. In the morning he is romping with the rest, in the afternoon off on a sight-seeing trip, and at night—he sings. And the same thing the next day. That's one advantage of being young, of having a fine constitution, and of possessing a steel-plated Italian voice.

If Parola and Wulman are the intentional comedians of the opera, then M. Ferren, husband of Mme. Padovani, is the unconscious humorist.

Ferren is truly Italian in everything save his name. And as to that, he confesses that his grandfather was English Consul to Malta, or some other spot adjacent to high C's and raviola as a daily fare. Grandpa has left the name, just as Englishmen have a habit of doing, but all the other Anglo-Saxon traits have disappeared.

Yet I wonder if this ancestral ghost is manifesting itself in Ferren's quick and remarkable mastery of English? He has been in America only two months, yet he carries a conversation easily, and is able to transact matters of business importance with placid wooden nutmeg fellows who couldn't tell Neapolitanese from Yiddish. Ferren is a self-defamer, however. After telling a soda fountain man with great earnestness that he was "thirty, thirty," he suddenly discovered that he was enunciating a number instead of describing a physical condition. His mortification has not permitted him near a fizz-water stand since. Ferren gets some consolation by looking at Lambardi. The gray-haired impresario now entering his seventh year in this country can't get his bashful tongue beyond "Good day," and even at that you know he'd far rather say it his own language.

Ferren's frequent appearances make up for Mme. Padovani's absences. The gossips of the foyer have yet to record her arrival there on any occasion. She ventures into the wings, and occasionally graces a box, but seldom comes any nearer intimacy.

Elsie Esmond.
Artistic new Mojonier study of Morosco's versatile ingenue, who will be seen in an important role today in the revival of "Held by the Enemy."

Pimazzoni is also conspicuous by absence from the daily gathering. There is a horrible rumor abroad that Pimazzoni has fallen into the clutches of an estate shark. At any rate, his only visits are for actual performance.

Jacchia fights with the management for the privilege of wearing his nice new straw hat. He even sports it glaringly to the somber accompaniment of evening clothes. Impresario Lambardi who is a stickler for appearances, is shocked, but Jacchia points to the thermometer and continues his promenade.

Arcangeli and his lemon-colored gloves are a frequent bright spot in the throng. Arcangeli's preference for these yellow hand-coverings is as unshakable as Jacchia's love [illegible] his sailor.

Ferrabini, in some stunning new gowns, graes the company by her presence at occasional intervals. Bertozzi flits in and out like a little bird.

And in the background of the stage entrance the chorus rumbles and mutters and buzzes from morning till night.

For this week a very interesting programme is offered. "Mignon" will celebrate the return of the company tomorrow night. On Tuesday night the "Cavalleria"-"Pagliacci" double bill will be seen. Wednesday night "Faust" offers some rare promises.

The members of the company itself say that "Mignon" is the best presentation they have effected. Bertozzi is cast for the title role—a role in which I should judge her to be even more at home than as Mimi—the lyric part goes to Padovani, Wulman will have the bass role, Parola, the tenor, and the small baritone part is accorded Pacini.

"Mignon" is practically unfamiliar to the younger generation of opera goers here. It has not been done in Southern California for many years, and, in fact, is seldom given outside New York City, and the direct extensions of its operatic facilities. Some of the numbers are very familiar in concert form, notably the overture, the beautiful "Knowst Thou the Land?" and Titania's brilliant air. There remain, however, many other things of equal excellence, notably the splendid music given to the bass. This is Wulman's one big role with this company.

The cast for "Cavalleria" includes Gonzales, Pacini, and the young tenor, Balestri. Picini's excellent rendition of the baritone part last year will be remembered.

"Pagliacci" is divided up between Signorini, Pimazzoni and Bertozzi. Signorini made his strong individual hit in San Francisco as Canio. He was accorded the warmest praise, and in dramatic effectiveness his "Vesti la guibba" was compared to Caruso's. It is to be hoped that he will rise to the opportunity here, for he has been distinctly off the level of artistic effectiveness for a week past. His voice in "Trovatore" was constrained and even squeaky, in marked distinction to his even and vocally delightful production in the opening "Aida" performances.

"Faust" gives us not only Lombardi as Mephisto, but Arcangeli as Valentine, Ferrabini as Marguerite, and Parola as Faust. The brilliant impersonation by Lombardi in the bass role last year was, saving Adaberto's vocal creations, the large success of the season. Arcangelli has asked for one lyric role, and has been granted it, which will doubtless please his many admirers. Ferrabini should give a more than acceptable Marguerite, and Parola's methods have constantly called to mind his "Faust" possibilities.

On the whole, the week is fraught with great possibilities. The only doubt in sight is the condition of Signorini's voice, but as to that matter we have to reassure us an exactly similar condition in San Francisco. He had been singing badly for days, and suddenly, as Canio, returned to brilliant form and scored a sensational triumph.

THE DRAMATIC WEEK.

A great deal of interest centers in the Burbank undertakings for the coming week. "Held by the Enemy" will be presented this afternoon by a remarkably strong cast, and the Ibsen productions, under Mr. Mestayer's direction, are looming up.

The cast for the Gillette play includes William Desmond as Capt. Prescott, Harry Mestayer as Sergt. Fielding, Byron Beasley as the Spy, John Burton as Uncle Rufus, and Mace Greenleaf—his return to the local stage—as the Leslie's correspondent.

"The Crisis" will be seen at the Belasco for the week beginning tomorrow night. Both novel and play are familiar to local audiences.

Harry Glazier will make his reappearance in this play. Blanche Stoddard will play Virginia Carvel, John Daly Murphy has been assigned to Col. Carvel, and Lewis Stone will be seen as Stephen Brice.

"The Royal Chef" is to fill the current week at the Los Angeles Theater. William J. McCarthy, said to be a capable comedian, fills the name part, and will be surrounded with breezy music, pretty girls and fascinating costumes.

George M. Cohen's "Little Johnny Jones" is to occupy the Mason Operahouse for the week commencing tomorrow night.

Its familiar song hits, "Yankee Doodle Dandy," "Give My Regards to Broadway," and others, have long since been made common vaudeville property, and hence are well-known to theater goers.

The company is said to be one of the largest on the road, comprising seventy-five people, with a good scenic production.

Mme. Bartholdi, a famous bird trainer, will present her cockatoos as the headline feature in the week's entertainment at the Orpheum. With their associates, the scarlet macaws and brilliantly tinted parrots, this group of birds is said to be unusually interesting.

Ladell and Crouch are a duo of youngsters who will make their first local appearance. They are just above the Humane Officer's pet age, and are said to be remarkably skillful performers.

Charlene and Charlene, juggler and musician, are also newcomers. The Teddy trio is a German acrobatic troupe, making its first appearance here. The Royal Hawaiian Quintette will offer characteristic music.

Belleclaire brothers, Les Aubin Leonel and Murphy and Francis remain.

Again western melodrama has an inning at the Grand. This time it is "The Little Prospector," a new play, said to be capably cast, well staged and interesting.

Dramagraphs.

William Gillette will be launched in a new play early in January.

Henry Arthur Jones' agents are remitting his royalties from "The Evangelist" in the postage stamps.

Last week David Belasco passed the twenty-fifth anniversary of his arrival in New York. He made no special observance of the occasion.

"The Lancers," which Lawrence D'Orsay and Cecilia Loftus produced a few days ago, seemed to go well with the audience. Its comedy is said to be particularly well adapted to both.

Annie Russel, who has been spending the summer in Maine, returned to New York last week, to confer with her manager concerning her new play, "Paid in Full."

Charles Frohman announces the early production of a play by Clyde Fitch entitled "The Bluff." "The Captain," by Broadhurst and Dazey, is another Frohman production to be seen this season.

Louis Mann, after an unsuccessful season in "The White Hen" in Chicago, has severed his connection with his managers, the Schuberts, and will appear at Klaw & Erlanger's "advanced vaudeville" theaters, under the management of William G. Brady.

Bioto's "Mefistofele," which will be given at both the Metropolitan and the Manhattan this season, has not been heard in New York since the later years of the Grau régime at the Metropolitan, when Margaret McIntyre, the Scotch soprano, was the Marguerite and Hélène.

The first school for ushers ever founded in New York will hold its first session at the Hippodrome. Andrew J. Canavan, the chief usher of the Hippodrome, will hold weekly sessions of the school in order to drill young men who wish positions at the Hippodrome or at any of the Shubert theaters in New York. There are forty-five ushers at the Hippodrome and all will be required to attend the first lesson.

It is an old story, but it is a Barrymore one, at the expense of John Drew, the uncle of the Barrymore trio of children, Ethel, Lionel and Jack. And it is told by John Drew himself. The scene was the Lamb's Club. The characters were Mr. Drew and a gentleman whose name is not incidental to the story. Drew was asked by the gentleman to what he owed his success in his chosen profession. He replied: "To Maurice Barrymore's children." "How so?" queried the individual referred to above. "Well, you see, at the end of their nightly prayers each of the children has been taught by their father to say: 'Please God, bless papa and mama, and make Uncle John a good actor.'"

It became known in New York this week that the Board of Directors of the Conried Metropolitan Opera Company will hereafter include a number of men prominent in the European operatic world, who will keep the New York office in close touch with the operatic situation abroad. It is probable that, as one result, an interchange of singers will be effected between the Metropolitan and some of the foreign institutions, a move that is expected to reduce the present high salaries singers can command.

Those who have read "Artie" will be interested to know something of George Ade's dramatic version of the story. The play is divided into four acts. The first shows a lively ball, given under the auspices of the Woodworkers' Union, where Artie first meets Mamie Carroll, a saleslady in a big department store. The second act shows the front of a row of houses where reside the Connollys, the Carrolls and others of Artie's friends. The time is the occasion of one of Artie's nocturnal calls on the object of his affection. The third act is laid in a real estate office, where Artie is employed, and the fourth introduces all the characters to a sort of Lonesomehurst during the progress of a sale of town lots.

Next week will see the two hundredth performance in London of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and Mrs. Madge Carr Cooke is going to celebrate the occasion by inviting some fifteen hundred of the poor working women of London to a special matinée performance at the Adelphi Theater. The entire house will be free, except the stalls, the receipts from which will be devoted to defraying the expense of carrying some of the "Mrs. Wiggses" from the more remote parts of London. It is the cheery, hard-working poor woman of the Mrs. Wiggs type, who rarely gets a treat, that Mrs. Cooke wishes to entertain.

O. R. Henkle, advance agent of "The Time, the Place and the Girl," arrived in Burlington, Vt., Thursday night, only to find that hotel accommodations were as scarce as modest actors, owing to the session of the Vermont Teachers' State Convention. With several commercial travelers he made his way to the leading hotel and was informed that every room and every cot was gone. They wearily made the rounds of the smaller hotels and boarding-houses and found the S.R.O. sign in front of each of them. In the City Hall Park the tired travelers then held a consultation. In desperation they decided to apply for lodgings at the County Jail. Henkle was appointed spokesman of the party. He made known the woes of the party to the Sheriff, and the latter gave the strangers the finest suite of rooms on the Tramps' Tier. The party was formally discharged in the morning.

Walter Damrosch has sent to the management of the New York Symphony Society the complete twenty programmes for the season, showing that the interesting things promised were not by any means exhausted in the announcement of a Beethoven cycle of six concerts, the first performance in concert form of Tschaikowsky's opera "Eugen Onegin" and the various other novelties. There will be a Dvorak programme and one devoted to Liszt, in which his "Faust" Symphony will be the distinctive feature, and at which Josef Hofmann will perform several compositions infrequently heard here. But perhaps the most original programme will be that of December 1, which will be devoted to "The Family," as it has been illustrated by various composers. At this unique concert, Mr. Damrosch will give Richard Strauss's "Sinfonia Domestica," descriptive of the composer, his wife and child, and Wagner's charming tribute to his wife on the birth of their son, Siegfried, entitled "Siegfried Idyl." For the performance of "Eugen Onegin" and for the concluding concert of the Beethoven cycle, which will contain the "Benedictus" from the great Mass in D, Mr. Damrosch will have the assistance of the chorus from the Oratorio Society.

There are very few amusing anecdotes told of Grieg. He was so serious minded, so devoted to his music, that he failed to see humor in anything. He went to the opera at Covent Garden in London last year and was much astonished when some of the spectators recognized him. While waiting outside the house for his brougham a man came up to him and asked him to write his autograph on the programme. "I vill, if you bring my carriage here," was Grieg's reply. Grieg had little esteem for the orders the sovereigns desired to confer on him. "Much better for me that they should buy my music than give me a little gilt souvenirs," was one of his native remarks to a friend to whom he was showing his decorations. Whenever, besides, an American visited him at his hermitage near Bergen, the beginning, middle and end of his conversation was usually the failure of publishers of music in America to pay him royalties. Say what the visitor might of American appreciation of the composer, Grieg returned again and again to the lacking royalties.

"Sweet Kitty Bellairs," a comedy in four acts, by David Belasco, founded on Egerton Castle's novel, "The Bath Comedy," was produced recently by Frederick Harrison in conjunction with Louis Calvert, at the Haymarket Theater of London, and met with a favorable reception. The Times says that from a point of view of the critic there is little worth discussing in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." From the point of view of the public there is excitement, humor, charming scenery, resplendent uniforms and intermittent brogue. Miss Eva Moore, as Kitty, was very sweet, very human, and in the third act powerful. Owen Roughwood as Kitty's faithful sweetheart and hero of the play at once revealed himself as a coming "jeune premier." If Roughwood will but remain true to his method of unaffectedness, of quiet yet convincing sincerity of expressiveness, without vociferation he will go far and will be in request when after a probable success of "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" there may be a deluge of pictorial comedy. It is said that "Sweet Kitty Bellairs" belongs to an order of play to which no classification might be applied, so redolent is it of other and many favorites, both old and new. Yet, for all that, it will probably draw to the Haymarket Theater the theater lovers who love what is familiar to them so long as it is flavored with something fresh. It is well acted and is served up with picturesque costumes of the period of 1780, when Bath was the rendezvous of rank and beauty. Although Mr. Belasco has founded the comedy on Egerton Castle's novel, he has taken care to exercise the dramatist's prerogative by adding to the novelist's imagination.

In "Lola from Berlin," in which Lulu Glaser is appearing this year, there are fewer songs than there have been in any place in which that comedienne has appeared since she leaped from the chorus of Francis Wilson's company to become Wilson's leading woman. In "Wildfire," in which racing play Lillian Russell is appearing this year, there are no songs at all. This piece is written by George V. Hobart and George H. Broadhurst, both of whom in their time have written many songs, but for the Russell play they have decided to have no songs at all. On the other side of the ocean Marie Tempest, who used to sing the tuneful "The Fencing Master," in this country, now appears in Clyde Fitch's "Truth," in which, of course, there are no melodies. So it goes. It is Shakespeare who says that many a person who climbs a ladder turns his back when he gets to the top and scorns the means by which he did ascend. Billie Burke, John Drew's new leading woman, might be one of these. She established her vogue upon her ability to sing songs in extravaganzas in London. Now that she is acting with Mr. Drew in "My Wife," she sings no songs. Neither does Marie Doro, who is William Gillette's leading woman, lift her voice in song. Yet it was only a few seasons ago that she was one of the features of musical comedy. She has not completely forgotten her old ways, because she writes songs, even though she does not sing them.

It would be almost worth while to run across the Atlantic for a fortnight's holiday, just to see Oscar Asche's production of "As You Like It" at His Majesty's Theater. It has no one feature of sensational merit, but for general all-round enjoyableness it probably reached about as high a level as it is possible to go. Perhaps the finest edge of Shakespeare's poetry is blunted now and then and perhaps Lily Brayton's little artificialities prevent her from giving us a Rosalind so nearly ideal as Julia Marlowe, for instance; but the average intelligence of the company is more than ordinarily high, and each apparently plays for the common good. Asche takes the part of the melancholy Jaques, whose name he pronounces Jay-kwees, and to whom he gives a cynical, played-out, baldheaded old libertine effect. He gives the lines of "All the world's a stage" casually and conversationally between bites at an apple. The Orlando of Henry Ainley is especially notable. Ainley rather threatened earlier in his career to be merely a pretty matinée idol. Hard work and earnestness of purpose are rapidly developing him into a sound, manly, thoughtful actor.

Maud Powell,

distinguished young American violiniste, who will be heard in Los Angeles this week.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Local concert patronage will doubtless be very much interested in the forthcoming appearance of Miss Maud Powell, violin virtuoso, who is a decidedly new star in the musical firmament.

She will play at Simpson Auditorium Friday night.

Miss Powell has gained a celebrity generally described as just. She has been acclaimed an extremely finished interpreter of the classics, and an apt translator of modern compositions.

A consensus of reviews of her playing indicates that she is the possessor of magnificently-finished technique, an easy, flexible tone of abundant warmth and almost masculine strength, and much schooling in the best traditions of violinistic art.

She will be assisted by Morris Eisner, pianist.

Her programme includes the Grieg Op. 13 Sonata, the Vieuxtemps Concerto Op. 31, D Minor, Mozart's "Minuet," Couperin's "The Flowerette," Le Claire's "Tambourin," Rameau's "Regadon," a Chopin "Nocturne," an arrangement from the Fourth Liszt Rhapsody, Hubay's "The Zephyr," Schumann's "Traumerei" and the Russian airs of Wieniawski.

Symphony Progression.

Symphonic work is now going ahead rapidly. All of the music purchased abroad by Director Hamilton for the use of the orchestra has arrived, has been assorted, and the selections for the first concert turned into the hands of the orchestra membership.

The first rehearsal was held last Tuesday afternoon, in Blanchard Hall. Mr. Hamilton is very pleased with the quiet practice work which has been kept up by the older members during the summer season, and the added membership promises to do much in rounding out and strengthening the ensembles.

The first concert will take place at the Auditorium Friday afternoon, November 15. Mrs. Otie Chew Becker will be the soloist, offering Mozart's A Major Concerto, which she asserts has not yet been produced by any soloist in America. Joachim wrote the cadenzas, and at his death left them in manuscript. They have been lately printed, but Mrs. Becker still retains a manuscript copy from Joachim's own pen.

—o—

Operatic "Boxers."

American concert artists are prone to regard somewhat grudgingly the discriminations so frequently made by managers and public alike in favor of their European colleagues. The stamp of European birth and breeding has been a powerful advantage with which native musicians have always had to contend, with more or less unsatisfactory results. But let them turn their attention for a moment to the American invasion of the continental opera world, says Musical America, editorially, and the fact that it has now attained such proportions that in one or two centers open mutiny on the part of the European singers seems imminent, and they may consider that their wrongs are being—in a left-handed way, so to speak—avenged.

From year to year, in Italy, France, Germany, Austria, the American voice and the American capacity for work and single-minded concentration on achieving the goal it has set itself, have been steadily making their possibilities felt more and more on the opera stage, awakening skeptical critics to a realization that they constitute a power to be reckoned with and forcing down barriers already existent or erected by local prejudice. Germany has been the tardiest to accord talent hailing from the New World practical recognition, and there it is that resentment against the incursion of our singers has reached a temperature bordering on fever heat. As yet there has been no significant expression of it in any city excepting Berlin, but conditions are inflammable in several other centers, as can readily be believed from the fact that, in all, there are thirty-three young Americans occupying positions of greater or less prominence in the German opera-houses.

Geraldine Farrar, who as a singer was cradled at the Berlin Royal Opera, and who forged her way ahead undaunted and undismayed by a provincially hostile press and the machinations of the jealousy-begotten cliques peculiar to opera institutions, until she had the satisfaction of knowing that the announcement of her appearance, in no matter what role, was sufficient to insure an "ausverkauft" house, has been the innocent agent in precipitating a small tempest in Berlin. The mere fact that the five American members of the company were conspicuous in the recent production there of Puccini's "Madam Butterfly" might have been grudgingly passed over, but that Intendant Von Hulsen should deliberately ignore Fraulein Destinn, who had made a sensation as Cio-Cio-San in London and had expressly urged the production of the work in Berlin that she might make a similar sensation there, and give Miss Farrar the privilege of creating the title part—and incidentally, the chance to appropriate the "sensation"—was more than prima donna flesh and blood could stand. What an unheard-of breach of "Intendantal" etiquette! No wonder that offended dignity suddenly discovered the urgent need of a month's leave of absence. An acute attack of "primadonnitis" seems to be the trouble, though an official diagnosis has not been published, and one writer guilelessly refers to it as a "heart affection."

It had no bearing on the subject, of course, that Fraulein Destinn has been the most successful of all the Salomés Europe has heard, and that she is to have the chance to sing several new roles this season, nor was the poignancy of the injury ameliorated by the fact that the Intendant considered that the Berlin public had a right to hear Miss Farrar in a new part once more after an interval of a year and a half. However, the performances of "Madam Butterfly," with the five American singers in the cast, go merrily on, and such is the indorsement of the public that notwithstanding the raised prices it is difficult to secure seats unless they are ordered promptly. And this in itself probably does not improve the temper of the Kaiser's indignant singers.

Fortunately, the general public is broader-minded than the vast majority of the inhabitants of the prima-donna world, and the Germans, though temperamentally loath to admit that other nations can teach them anything about music, are gradually learning that all good art is cosmopolitan. As a writer in the New York Times tersely remarks, we have never needed that lesson on this side of the Atlantic; in fact, it is only of late that we are learning that all good operatic art is not strictly European.

Dawn.

The first gray streaks of dawn but show
The world yet sadder than before,
As hill and tree and homestead grow,
Wan phantoms in the morning glow.
Wait; while the cold gray here is round us.
There, rising up behind the height,
The sun in rose-red splendors found us,
And all the world is full of light.

Art and Artists.

BY ANTONY E. ANDERSON.

Any Sculptor to Any Model.

I know not anything more fair than thou.
God give me strength to feel thee, power to speak
Through this dumb clay and marble all the thoughts
That rise within my spirit while I gaze.
What saith the scripture? In His image God
Shaped man, and breathed into his nostrils breath
Of life. Here then, as nowhere else, shines God;
The thought made flesh, the world's soul breathing soft
And strong, not merely through those lips and eyes,
But in each flawless limb, each mighty curve,
Each sinew moulded on the moving form. . . .

Recent Sculpture by Mr. Calder.

One of the first of this year's art exhibitions in Los Angeles, and one which will undoubtedly be classed among the most interesting and instructive of them all, on a retrospective view, is that which was held by the two Calders in their Figueroa-street studio on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday last. Mrs. Calder gave us some of her recent work in a graphic art—that of painting, while Mr. Calder was represented by many examples of the plastic art.

Of Nanette Calder as a painter I spoke at some length, in Art and Artists, only a few weeks ago. Many of the canvases then mentioned were shown in the present exhibition, with a goodly number of new ones added. There were about thirty in all. They were excellently hung and well lighted, and showed conclusively that Nanette Calder is a painter with a remarkably strong decorative sense. Her work will "fit in" anywhere, and will always add to the charm and unity of a room. She essays figures, landscapes and marines, always with equal fearlessness, and always with that technical ease which shows the artist who has training as well as temperament.

The sculptural work of Alexander Stirling Calder has also received appreciative mention in these columns. He came to Los Angeles about a year ago. The twelve months passed here have not been idle ones for him, as the things he has just shown, in marble, in plaster and in clay, amply testify. They indicate growth in power and in simplicity, fine artistic traits that Mr. Calder has possessed to a marked degree from the very beginning of his career as a sculptor.

This career may be said to be an heritage from his father, who has done much notable work in sculpture, especially in the decoration of the City Hall of Philadelphia. Alexander Stirling Calder was born in Philadelphia in 1870, and there he began his studies at the Academy of the Fine Arts. After four years in that school he spent two years in Paris, first under Chapu, and later under Falguiere.

Since his return to America he has done many things in sculpture, but as a matter of course much of his time has been devoted to portrait busts. In the present exhibition a number of these were shown, among them a notable marble bust of the late W. L. Vail, the wealthy ranchman. This was modeled in Los Angeles, and sent to New York to be cut by Piccivilli, who in the past has done marble cutting for St. Gaudens, French and other famous sculptors.

The bust of Mr. Vail is done with much freedom and simplicity. The bigness of lines and forms, the complete absence of all superfluous details, suggest Rodin. We are made to feel the fine and strong character of the man whose marble effigy we behold. The firm yet sensitive lips seem to move as if about to speak. The sweeping mustache has the soft flexibility of human hair, yet it is done with the utmost simplicity.

Another impressive bust is that of Najinyankte (Stand-and-Kill,) a Sioux Indian with some white blood in him. The lines of this young man's head are unusually refined and beautiful. The expression is one of thought that is almost melancholy. The eyes are nobly intelligent. Mr. Calder has modeled this superb Indian in a number of poses, one of them a statuette of simple dignity which shows him standing, tall and straight, wrapped in a blanket. The sculptor has covered this statuette with a coating of shellac and given it a few slight but effective touches of color.

Especially interesting is a figurine of a nude Sioux Indian dancing. It is full of action, not violent, but the slow, steady jog of the typical Sioux dance. In this figurine, which, despite its small size, seems almost alive, Mr. Calder demonstrates his thorough knowledge of human anatomy—not to mention his keen sympathy with human character in all its demonstrations and phases. A fine bust, still in the clay, of the same Indian, was also exhibited.

Other notable plastic work from Mr. Calder's hands was a replica of the bronze grave-marker which was placed on the grave of the wife of Gen. Sewell of New Jersey. Two female figures, Love and Faith, in very low and flat relief, stand with joined hands. Faith holds a chalice and Love a rose. There are other beautiful and appropriate symbols on the grave-marker.

The sculptor is busy on models for two piers to be erected in the new Y. M.C.A. building. The piers, which are to be twenty feet in height, will have life-size figures, which will symbolize the spiritual and athletic development of a young man. The model for athletics was shown. In high relief, on the four sides of the column, were active figures of a club swinger, a fencer, a football player, and a shot putter. These will probably be cast in bronze, and will make a fine and inspiring decoration for a noble institution.

Another beautiful model is that of the Eliza A. Otis Memorial, which the Y.W.C.A. will place in their building soon. The finished work, which will probably be in bronze, is to be a panel, three feet by four feet, to be placed over the fireplace of the library. It will represent "Christian Womanhood," a beautiful draped female figure kneeling with a lighted lamp in one hand and protecting a child with the other. The lines of this low relief are very simple and effective. Its symbolism is reverently conceived.

The public spirit shown by these two noble institutions for young men and women, in the encouragement of what is fine and true in art, should be taken as an example by the rest of the community. Los Angeles, a metropolitan city in size and importance, is lamentably lacking in public statues, fountains, etc. We have the artists—Mr. Calder and others—who are able and willing to give us beautiful things when we are ready to ask for them. Surely, it is about time to ask!

ART NOTES.

The two Wachtels, who have been sketching among the cañons north of Santa Monica for the last month, have just returned, bringing with them much work of surpassing excellence. They will have an exhibition later in the season. They are now at home to their friends every Sunday afternoon.

Three of the California landscapes submitted by Hanson Puthuff to the jury of the coming exhibition of the Society of American Artists, to be held in Chicago, have been accepted. Their acceptance is no surprise, however, to Mr. Puthuff's Los Angeles admirers and friends, who have long known that he is one of the most talented of our western painters.

Mary C. Dwyer and Susan Dwyer will hold an exhibition of oils, water colors and pastels at their home studio, No. 1037 Grand View street, beginning tomorrow and continuing for a week.

The long-looked-for exhibition of Joseph Greenbaum's recent work opened at Steckel's yesterday, and will continue for three weeks. A score or more of canvases are shown. Mr. Greenbaum, who came to Los Angeles as a portrait painter, has been doing some remarkably good landscapes and marines lately, thus developing a new phase of his talent. There are some notable portraits of women in the present exhibition. An extended review will be given in next week's Art and Artists.

Laura Grover Smith, well known as a writer and lecturer, gave an interesting talk on architecture before the Arts and Crafts on last Monday evening.

Octavia Holden, whose artistic bookbinding has attracted such favorable attention in Los Angeles for the past year, has now returned to her old home, San Francisco. She has just opened her new studio at No. 1716 Sacramento street, in that city.

Norman St. Clair is still sketching in the cañons near Laguna. Three of his strong and beautiful water colors were sold last week from his studio on East Avenue 41.

The Fine Arts League will hold its annual meeting on November 12 at three o'clock, for the purpose of electing officers for the coming year.

Come Home, Come Home.

Come home, come home; and where is home for me,
Whose ship is driving o'er the trackless sea?
To the frail bark here plunging on its way,
To the wild waters shall I turn and say,
You are my home?

Fields once I walked in, faces once I knew,
Familiar things so old my heart believed them true;
These far, far back, behind me lie; before
The dark clouds mutter, and the deep sea roar,
And speak to them that 'neath and o'er them roam,
No word of home.

Beyond the clouds, beyond the waves that roar,
There may indeed, or may be not, a shore
Where fields as green and hands and hearts as true
The old forgotten semblance may renew,
And offer exiles driven far o'er the salt sea foam
Another home.

But toil and pain must wear out many a day,
And days bear weeks, and week bear months away,
Ere, if at all, the weary traveler hear,
With accents whispered in his wayworn ear,
A voice he dares to listen to say, "Come to the true home."

Come home, come home! And where a home hath he Whose ship is driving o'er the driving sea?
Through clouds that mutter and o'er waves that roar,
Say, shall we find, or shall we not, a shore
That is, as is not ship or ocean foam
Indeed our home?

The maid of honor, Miss Clara Swartz, wore Persian lawn over pink taffeta, and the maids, Miss Grace Blackburn, Miss Jennie Yager and Miss May Ruth Miller, were garbed alike in pale pink mousseline. Each carried a fancy basket of pink rosebuds. A reception was held later at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Leary, of No. 3516 South Hope street. Elaborate preparations have been made by members of the Concordia Club for their annual opening ball, which will be given Saturday evening, October 2, in honor of the debutantes. This event is one of the most important in Jewish society circles, and if predictions count will meet the approval of all. The decorations and supper, which will be elaborate to a degree, will be in charge of the Alexandria Hotel, and under the special direction of Mr. Reichel. Music will be furnished by Arend, who has prepared a special programme. Assistance League Vaudeville.

It is true the Shrine ball has occupied the center of the stage for the past week, but at the same time, in all the arrangements for the swell affair, there has been an undercurrent of other great events to follow, principal of which is the Assistance League vaudeville entertainment at the Mason Operahouse on November 18, when 150 maids and matrons, bachelors and benedicts will get together to do something serious.

Edgar Temple, who has seen many affairs of this kind through at various places in the East, says he has never found a more receptive body of amateurs than those who constitute the Assistance League forces of Los Angeles.

Manager Temple is introducing a lot of material which has never been used in the West; most of it being creations of his own, which have been used in entertainments in and about New York. Many of the dances, marches, songs and tableaux are those which have become most effective in the various musical shows exploited by Henry W. Savage.

Charles Bowes, who has charge of the young folks assisting Mrs. Connell in the Swing song, is introducing some very finished effects, both in the musical numbers and the artistic stage settings. The artists are being photographed, and the costumes, which are rapidly being finished, are most beautiful and expensive. The color effect is prismatic, and under a spot light will show the most harmonious groupings yet seen upon the local stage.

The exchange tickets are now on sale at the Bartlett Music Company's, and will be until the 7th of November, when the numbered seats will be in readiness.

OUT-OF-TOWN SOCIETY

Pasadena.

THE number of social functions given in the past week has been unusually small, the only affair interesting a large number of young people being the initial dance of the season given by the Algonquin Club at the Shakespeare Clubhouse, Friday evening. The floral decorations were elaborate, the club colors being effectively carried out in gay chrysanthemums and autumn flowers. The dance orders were attractively gotten up as souvenirs of the season's opening. The ballroom presented a brilliant scene between 9 o'clock and midnight, when fifty couples engaged in a round of waltzes and two steps.

One of the largest functions was the surprise party given Mrs. Julia Phelps of Galena avenue, Tuesday evening, in honor of her birthday anniversary. Those who made up the company came dressed in costumes of long ago, and most of the gowning was quaint and artistic. The table was spread in the gold and ivory dining-room, and was ornamented with violets and maidenhair ferns. Novel creations are here in fancy woolen two-piece gowns and Princess effects for dressy occasions.

They come in plain voiles and veilings and fancy plaids of the nicer sorts; blues and browns and tans and blacks are the prevailing colors. They are neat, tastefully trimmed affairs—and so splendidly made. You'll doubt the wisdom of employing a dressmaker when such things can be had—all ready to put on—for so small an outlay.

Very pretty styles at $25, $29.50, $32.50 and up.

Ostrich Feather Sale—All Week

Wonderfully Pretty Hats

The Pick of Paris

Where did you ever see such millinery beauty?

Truly the Marvel has won the laurels of victory in this triumphant collection of exquisite hats.

They are the pick of Paris—for you know there are many Paris models that would not be practical in Los Angeles.

But such as are practical are here. True enough, they're not all Paris productions. Many are copies — but were it not for the great difference in price, the fact that they are copies would not be detectable.

Almost every conceivable form of trimming is employed—ostrich feathers, fancy feathers, great wings, breasts, coques, aigrettes, pompons, flowers, foliage, rich ornaments, novel stick pins.

But type can never convey the true interpretation of such beauty.

The privilege to look and study is yours—we believe you will find the display quite fascinating.

—and the prices—consistency is the prevailing factor—Marvel prices are right—you'll agree to that.

Main Floor

In a word--Marvel ostrich feather sales are growing better and bigger every time--better, because we're always crowding more value into regular prices--bigger, because more and more women are constantly coming to recognize Marvel leadership.

We buy our ostrich feathers direct from a South African Ostrich farm--under special contract--and if you could just know how much we save--but you can easily tell by comparing Marvel regular prices with regular prices elsewhere.

We're forced to this sale because we have another big lot of feathers coming in from South Africa--and our stock is heavy now. So heavy, in fact, that it will take a week's busy selling to reduce it sufficient.

Seems rather unusual for such a sale as this to come right in the face of an ostrich feather season.

But the Marvel Bargain Basement is always springing the unusual--that's the secret of its success.

ABOUT fifty guests witnessed the pretty wedding ceremony which united the lives of Miss Hazel Estelle Flanders and Albert A. Parker of this city Monday evening. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Flanders of North Painter avenue, and the event was solemnized at their home. White roses, smilax and potted palms formed a charming bower under which the bridal party stood for the ceremony. Rev. W. H. Martin of the Christian Church was the officiating clergyman, using the ring ceremony. After the reception and the serving of a wedding supper, Mr. and Mrs. Parker left for a wedding trip. They will be at home on Franklin street.

A charming simplicity marked the wedding of Miss Bessie Robbins, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robbins of Earlham Drive, to Glen Moffatt Bostwick, Thursday evening. It was a home wedding, only the most intimate of the family friends being bidden. After a trip to several of the coast points, Mr. and Mrs. Bostwick will return to this city, and in a week or two will leave for Woodbine, Iowa, where the groom has just built a pretty home for his bride..

Mrs. Charlotte Saunders and Owen W. Kenworthy surprised their Whittier friends by an unannounced wedding ceremony, which took place in Los Angeles on Wednesday. Both are well known in this city, the groom being in business here. They will make their home in Whittier.

Mrs. Susie Andrus and E. D. Moorhous, both of this city, were married on Monday, the ceremony being performed in San Diego. THE social event of the past week was the semi-monthly meeting of the Tropico Thursday Afternoon Club, which was held at "The Snuggery," the bungalow of Mrs. Charles Murray on Glendale avenue. A dainty basket decorated with autumn leaves and containingfruits and nuts was presented to each guest. Mrs. Murray was assisted by Mrs. Edward Lynch, secretary of the club. Miss Maude Moore and Miss Harriet Meyers presented an interesting programme. Each member responded at roll call with a quotation from Longfellow. Mrs. John Seaman read "The Night," by Longfellow and Mrs. W. H. Halleck gave "The Launching of the Ship" by the same poet. Miss Maude Moore gave a paper on the prehistoric discoveries of America. Mrs. Andrew Stephenson read a paper embracing the voyages and explorers from 1492 to 1512, and Miss Harriet Meyers treated of the explorers from 1512 onward.

CHAPTER XIX.

MAXINE PLAYS THE LAST HAND.

When the play was over, I let Raoul go home with me to supper. If Godensky knew, as he may have known—since he seemed to know all my movements—perhaps he thought that I was seeing Raoul for the last time, and sending him away from me for ever. But, though the game was not in my hands yet, the treaty was; and I had made up my mind to defy Godensky.

I had almost promised that, if he held his hand, I would give Raoul up; and never have I broken my word. But if I wrote a letter to Godensky in the morning, saying I had changed my mind, that he could do his worst against Raoul du Laurier and against me, for nothing should part us two except death? Then he would have fair warning that I did not intend to do the thing to which he had nearly forced me; and I would fight him, when he tried to take revenge. But, meanwhile, before he got that letter, I would—I must—find some way of putting the treaty back in its place at the Foreign Office.

It was too soon to dare to be happy, yet; for it was on the cards that, even when I had saved Raoul from the consequences of my political treachery, Godensky might still be able to ruin me with him. Yet, the relief I felt after the all but hopeless anguish in which I had been drowning for the last few days, gave to my spirit a wild exhilaration that night. I encouraged Raoul with hints that I had news of the necklace, and said that, if he would let me come to him in his office as soon as it was open in the morning, I might be able to surprise him pleasantly. Of course, he answered that it would give him the greatest joy to see me there, or anywhere; and we parted with an appointment for 9 o'clock next day.

When he had gone, I wrote a note—a very short note—to Count Godensky. I wanted to have it ready; but I did not mean to send it till the treaty was in the safe whence I had taken it. Then, the letter should go at once, by messenger; and it would still be very early in the day, I hoped.

Usually, I have my cup of chocolate in bed at 9 o'clock; but on the morning which followed I was dressed and ready to go out, at half-past eight. I think that I had not slept at all, but that didn't matter. I felt strong and fresh, and my heart was full of courage. I was leaving nothing to chance. I had a plan, and knew how I meant to play the last hand in the game. It might go against me. But I held a high trump.

Again, as before, Raoul received me alone.

"Dearest," he exclaimed, "I know your news must be good for you look so bright and beautiful. Tell me—tell me!"

I laughed, teasingly, though Heaven knew I was in no mood for teasing.

"You're too impatient," I said. "To punish you for asking about the wretched diamonds before you inquired how I slept, and whether I dreamed of you, I shall make you pay a penalty."

"Any penalty you will," he answered, laughing, too, and entering into the joke—for he was happy and hopeful now, seeing that I could joke.

"Let me sit down and write at your desk, on a bit of your paper," I said.

He gave me pen and ink. I scribbled off a few words, and folded the note into an envelope. "Now, this is very precious," I went on. "It tells you all you want to know. But—I'm going to post it."

"No, no!" he protested. "I can't wait for the post."

"Oh, I wouldn't trust my treasure to the postoffice, not even if it were insured. Open that wonderful safe you gave me a peep into the other day, and I'll put this valuable document in among the others, not more valuable to the country than this ought to be to you. I'll hide it there, and you must shut up the safe without looking for it, till I've gone. Then, you must count ten, and after that—you may search. Remember, you said you'd submit to any penalty, so no excuses, no complaints."

Raoul laughed. "You shall have your way, fantastic though it be, for you are a sorceress, and have bewitched me."

He unlocked the door of the safe, and stood waiting for me to gratify my whim. But I gaily motioned him behind me. "If you stand there, you can see where I put it, and that won't be fair. Turn your back."

He obeyed. "You see how I trust you!" he said. "There lie my country's secrets."

"They're safe from me." I said pertly. (And so indeed they were—now.) "They're too uninteresting to amuse me in the least."

As I spoke, I found and abstracted the dummy treaty and slipped the real one into its place. Then I laid the envelope with the note I had written, where he could not help finding it at first or second glance.

"Now you can close the safe," I said.

He shut the door, and I almost breathed aloud the words that burst from my heart, "Thank Heaven!"

"I must leave you," I told him. And I was kind for a moment, capricious no longer, because, though the treaty had been restored, I was going to open the cage of Godensky's vengeance, and—I was afraid of him.

"I may come to you as soon as I'm free?" Raoul asked.

"Yes. Come and tell me what you think of the news, and—what you think of me," I said. And while I spoke, smiling, I prayed within that he might continue to think of me all things good—far better than I deserved, yet not better than I would try to deserve in the future, if I were permitted to spend that future with him.

The next thing I did was to send my letter to Count Godensky. This was a flinging down of the glove, and I knew it well. But I was ready to fight now.

Then, I had to keep my promise to Miss Forrest. But I had thought of a way in which, I hoped, that promise—fulfilled as I meant to fulfill it—might help rather than injure me. I had not lain awake all night for nothing.

I went to the office of the Chief of Police, who is a gentleman and a patron of the theater—when he can spare time from his work. I had met him and had reason to know that he admired my acting.

His first words were of congratulation upon my success in the new play, and he was as cordial, as complimentary, as if he had never heard of that scene at the Elysee Palace Hotel, about which, of course, he knew everything—so far as his subordinate could report.

"Are you surprised to see me, Monsieur?" I asked.

"A great delight is always more or less of a surprise in this workaday world," he gallantly replied.

"But you can guess what has brought me?"

"Would that I could think it was only to give me a box at the theater this evening."

"It is partly that," I laughed. "Partly for the pleasure of seeing you, of course. And partly—you know already, since you know everything, that I am a friend of Mr. Dundas, the young Englishman accused of murder which he could not possibly have committed."

"Could not possibly have committed? Is that merely your opinion as a loyal friend, or have you come to make a communication to me?"

"For that—and to offer you the stage box for tonight."

"A thousand thanks for the box. As for the communication——"

"It's this. Mr. Dundas was at my house at the time when, according to the doctor's statement, the murder must have been committed. Oh, it's a hard thing for me to come and tell you this!" I went on, hastily. "Not that I'm ashamed to have received a call from him at that hour, as it was necessary to see him then, or not at all. He meant to leave Paris early in the morning. But—because I'm engaged to be married to—perhaps you know that, though, among other things?"

"I've heard—a rumor. I didn't know that it amounted to an engagement. Monsieur du Laurier is to be a thousand times congratulated."

"I love him dearly," I said simply. And not because I tm an actress, but because I am a woman and had suffered all that I could bear, tears rose to my eyes. "I am true to him, and always have been. But—he is horribly jealous. I can't explain Mr. Dundas's night visit in a way to satisfy him. If Raoul finds out that an Englishman—well known, but of whom I never spoke—was at my house after midnight, he will believe I have deceived him. Oh, monsieur, if you would help me to keep this secret I am telling you so frankly."

"Keep the secret, yet use it to free the Englishman?" asked the chief of police gravely.

"Yes, I ask no less of you; I beg, I implore you. It would kill me to break with Raoul du Laurier."

"Dear Mademoiselle," said the good and gallant man, "trust me to do the best I can for you." (I could see that my tears had moved him.) "A grief to you would be a blow to Paris. Yet—well, as you have been frank, I owe it to you to be equally so on my side. I should before this have sent—quite privately and in a friendly way, to question you about this Mr. Dundas, who passed under another name at the hotel where you called upon him; but I received a request from a very high quarter to wait before communicating with you. Now, as you have come to me, I suppose I may speak."

"Ask me any questions you choose," I said, "and I'll answer them."

"Then, to begin with, since you are engaged to Monsieur du Laurier, how do you explain the statement you made at the hotel, concerning Mr. Dundas?"

"That is one of the many things I have come here on purpose to tell you," I answered him; "for I am going to give you my whole confidence. I throw myself upon your mercy."

"You do me a great honor. Will you speak without my prompting?"

"Yes, I would prefer it. In England, a year ago, I had a little flirtation with Mr. Dundas—no more; though we liked and admired each other. We exchanged a few silly letters, and I forgot all about them until I fell in love with Raoul and promised to marry him—only a short time ago. Then I couldn't bear to think that I had written these foolish letters, and that, perhaps, Mr. Dundas might have kept them. I wrote and asked if he had. He answered that he had every one, and valued them immensely, but if I wished, he would either burn all, or bring them to me, whichever I chose. I chose to have him bring them, and I told him that I'd meet him at the Elysee Palace Hotel on a certain evening, to receive the letters from him."

"He came, as I said, under another name. Why was that, Mademoiselle, since there was nothing for him to be ashamed of?"

"He, also, is in love, and just engaged to be married to an American girl, who lives with relatives in London, in a very high position. He didn't want the girl to know he was coming to Paris, because, it seems, there had been a little talk about him and me, which she had heard. And she didn't like it."

"I see. This gentleman started for Paris, I have learned, the first thing in the morning, after a ball at a house where he met the British Secretary of Foreign Affairs."

"Perhaps. For I have inquired and found out that the girl—a Miss Forrest—is distantly connected with the British Foreign Secretary. She lives with her aunt, Lady Mountstuart, whose sister is married to that gentleman. And the Foreign Secretary is a cousin of Lord Mountstuart."

"Ah, Miss Forrest!"

"You know of her already?"

"I have heard her name."

(I guessed how; for she could not have seen Ivor Dundas in prison, except through the Chief of Police; but I said nothing of that.)

"You say you know how we met at the hotel, Mr. Dundas and I," I went on. "But I'll explain to you now the inner meaning of it all, which even you can't have found out. Mr. Dundas was to have brought me my letters—half a dozen. He gave me a leather case, which he took from an inner breast pocket, saying the letters were in it. But the room was dark. Something had gone wrong with the electricity, and I hadn't let him push back the curtains, for fear I might be seen from outside, if the lights should suddenly come on. He didn't see the case, as he handed it to me, nor could I. Just at that instant there was a knock at the door, and, quick as thought, I pushed the leather case down between the seat and back of the sofa."

"But what reason had you to suppose that any danger of discovery threatened you, because of a knock at the door?"

"I'll tell you. There is a man—I won't mention his name, but you know it very well, and maybe it is in your mind now—who wants me to marry him. He has wanted it for some time—I think because he admires women who are before the public and applauded by the world; also, perhaps, because I have refused him, and he is one who wants most what he finds hardest to get. He is not a scrupulous person, but he has some power, and a good deal of influence, because he is very highly connected, and when people have 'axes to grind' he helps to grind them. He has suspected for some time that I cared for M. du Laurier, and for that, he has hated Raoul. I have fancied that he hired detectives to spy upon me; and my instinct as well as common sense told me that he would let no chance slip to separate me from the man I love. He would work mischief between us—or he would try to ruin Raoul, or crush me—anything to keep us apart. When I saw the Commissary of Police, I was hardly surprised, and though I didn't know what pretext had brought him, I said to myself: 'That is the work of ——.'"

"Perhaps better not mention the name, Mademoiselle."

WOMEN MAIL CARRIERS.

Rain or Shine They Deliver the Mail Along Their Routes Regularly.

Although the East and West are now in comparatively close communication, yet there is much in the conditions of life in the West that we have little or no practical appreciation of here in the East, says the Pittsburgh Dispatch. The West not only generates strong men, but hardy and persevering women also, whose daily life calls upon them to confront conditions and surmount obstacles that many men would shrink from.

Miss Lettie C. Dillon and her sister, Miss Pearl Dillon of Keota, Iowa, are samples of sturdy, practical, western womanhood. The former is the official mail carrier of rural delivery route No. 4, and the latter acts as her substitute when needed. These two young women look after route No. 4 so well that it enjoys the reputation of being the best served route in that part of the country.

Miss Dillon was appointed to the route in June, 1904, which at that time covered twenty-five miles. In January, 1905, it was changed and increased to twenty-eight miles. In May, 1907, it was cut to twenty-six miles The magnitude of Uncle Sam's mail service is well known, but it was largely increased by the institution of the rural delivery. In many of the Western States the conditions of traveling are such that a rural delivery route is by no means to be regarded as a pleasure trip; it is too much like hard work. But Uncle Sam has found both men and women to deliver the mails regularly, and no matter how difficult the roads may be, the route must be covered if it is humanly possible. So that many of the dwellers in lonely places, who were obliged to depend on the fortunate accident of a neighbor passing their way or else wait for weeks until they themselves had occasion to go to the nearest mail station, now have their letters brought regularly to the door.

Miss Dillon has had many narrow escapes from accident by storm or flood, but she has pioneer blood in her, so she always manages to push on. She makes it rule always to drive good horses, and as she has been familiar with them all her life she knows how to get the most out of them, and she has never yet had a runaway. When from any cause she is unable to serve the route, her sister, Miss Pearl, serves for her; and this young lady also serves for other carriers while they take their vacations.

Miss Dillon usually goes over the route with a horse and buggy, using a storm shield in bad weather. But Iowa blizzards and spring freshets frequently work such havoc with the roads that they become impassable with the buggy, and she has to make her twenty-six-mile trip on horseback. She sticks to the work, however, because she likes to think she can "hold the job down." She takes a personal interest in keping up the good reputation that she has already earned for route 4, and sees to it that all her patrons are satisfied. It is largely owing to this interest in her work that it has frequently happened that this persevering young lady has served her route when the men in charge of the other routes have failed to do so.

These two young women have lived all their lives in Keota, Iowa, where they are well known and highly esteemed. They are types of that free, strong American womanhood which has shown that it can work on an equal footing with men, if necessary. They are the descendants of those women who tramped side by side with their husbands and shared the burden and heat of the day with the hardy pioneers in the frontier life of three generations ago.

CULTIVATED PATRIOTISM.

ENTLY Gifford Pinchot, chief of the United tates Forestry Service, at a banquet given by the University Club of this city, contended that one chief purposes of education in the schools, high and ould be to cultivate a spirit of patriotism, of high n to the republic which would manifest itself in ness to serve the people well in public office. The contended that this would bring more satisfac- to the individual than a career devoted to amass- fortune so large that the care of it must become a n, and that only by such services on the part of citizens could the public services be properly per- and the republic be preserved in its full integ-

The speaker has earned a right to talk to us in this . Possessed of a fortune which renders him as in- dent as a man can be in this respect, for many Mr. Pinchot has devoted almost his entire time ergy to the performance of a public service of high importance. He has performed his duties conspicuous intelligence and diligence and his suc- has been remarkable. He spends in the perform- f these duties much more than his salary.

les E. Hughes, Governor of New York, at James- n a more recent occasion, spoke in much the train as that held by the chief forester. He a volume of thought into one pithy utterance. ghes said, speaking of the duty of the hour: "It e each for all the others."

This ion was not self-conceived, but was made by the t demand of his fellow-citizens.

is much in these two utterances to interest the of the country, from the kindergartens to the universities. The future citizenship of this country will be largely what the teachers make it. The schools should not exist for the sole or for the primary purpose of cramming the minds of the pupils with a mass of miscellaneous information, more or less important, more or less useful, in earning a livelihood. They should not be maintained for the sole or predominant purpose of developing the mental powers, although that is much more important and will count more in after life than the mere storing up of information. The schools should be shops where character is built. A man is a greater thing than a mathematician or a linguist. A woman is a more important thing in the life of the republic than a pianist.

Patriotism is not a thing of native, spontaneous growth. The lowest form of savage knows little of it. He feels its impulse scarcely more than his companions of the ape tribe. The slaves of any epoch have produced no heroes like Miltiades, or Leonidas, like Fabius or Brutus, like Washington or Lincoln. The slave hordes of Xerxes "fought under the lash," the Spartans "for their altars and their fires." The legions of Caesar were invincible to a great degree because they had heard told many times the legends which make the pages of Livy so like a picture gallery of heroes. They know by heart the legends which Macaulay has immortalized in a new tongue in the "Lays of Ancient Rome." The centurians who vied so in their fighting under Caesar in Gaul felt the impulse of patriotic fire because they knew garlands of laurel awaited the victor's brows when the legions returned in triumph to the banks of the Tiber.

Neither the pages of Themistocles nor those of Livy recite deeds of valor more brilliant than may be found scattered all through those of Bancroft. From Lexington and Bunker Hill to Manila Bay and San Juan Hill the history of this republic is filled with stories as heroic as those of Thermopylae, the Caudine Forks, or Capua. The lives of the Scipios are not more resplendent than those of Grant, Sherman and Sheridan.

The annals of our years of peace are also full of the noblest examples of devotion to the welfare of the republic. Washington was "first in peace" as well as in war, and his services to his country as President were as fruitful in good results as his services on the battlefield. What country can produce statesmen more illustrious than Franklin, Jefferson, Clay, Webster, Seward, Lincoln, Roosevelt, Taft and Root?

The pages of history are made up and closed over the career of nearly all these. And so they are on the career of many who although useful to the country in developing its resources devoted most of their time and energy to the gathering of fortunes for their children to scatter. Some of those fortunes have been scattered in vulgar debauchery by titled sons-in-law who married the daughters of our millionaires for the dower they brought.

Lay side by side before the eyes of generous youth the closed life story of our merchant princes of the past and our great railroad builders and those of the men who have just been named here. You will be sowing seeds of patriotism which in the next generation will grow up into men like these, who will render high service to the republic, prefer duty to dollars, and be each for all, that the republic may be handed down to a generation coming after them unimpaired in the high ideals created by the first founders who make illustrious the early pages of our history.

A STUBBORN YOUTH.

John C. Bell, District Attorney of Philadelphia, and Justice John P. Elkin of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania were schoolmates, and the District Attorney tells this tale about the justice:

"John was a stubborn youth, and the teacher had all kinds of trouble with him. I remember he insisted upon saying 'have went,' and to correct him the teacher compelled him to remain after school one day and write 'have gone' 300 times.

"After scribbling 'have gone' until his hand ached, John appended this note to the bottom of a sheet of paper: 'I have done my work and have went home.—J. P. E.' "—[Woman's Home Companion.

FAMILY OF BLIND MUSICIANS.

A concert as pathetic as it was interesting took place lately at Hamburg. The concert givers were a sister and two brothers, all blind; a fourth brother, who is studying composition at the Berlin Academy of Music and whose works have already been very favorably commented on, being similarly afflicted. The sister possesses a fine and well-trained soprano voice of considerable compass, while one brother, who on this occasion acted as her accompanist, holds an appointment at Muhlheim-an-der-Ruhr as organist. The third brother is a 'cellist of considerable talent. The family are natives of Muhlheim.—[Pall Mall Gazette.

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

REVIVAL OF OLD FASHIONS.

THE survival of ideas is strikingly illustrated in the annual number of new fashions, which, when carefully considered, are seen to be a revival of the old or modified forms of shapes, designs and colorings that have had their day before. There are fashions in dress, in furniture, architecture, etc., peculiar to every age, every period in the history of civilization expressing to a greater or less extent the social and economic conditions of the time, or manifesting the intellectual and artistic, or, as a whole, the psychical attitude of the human spirit in every given epoch or era of the life of the race.

It is well that the house or apparel of an individual should, so far as circumstances will admit, be an index to the character of the person wearing the garment or occupying the house. In like manner every community, every country or nation is distinguished by the mode in which its moral and spiritual life finds outer expression. Yet, while individuals and nations may have their special traits of character, or their mental and moral coloring traceable in every form of expression, practical and artistic, there are certain eternal, fundamental forms of thought and feeling from which these emanate, however diverging from the original ideas and sentiments common to all mankind.

There are those today who speak of a lady or gentleman of "the old school" much in the same tone they assume when referring to a curiosity of art or literature, while they are prone to scoff not alone at the polish, but at the genuine elegance and fine breeding that are the permanent dower of some so-called "old-fashioned folk." Still further, they even deride with an air and dash of modern wantonness of spirit, the soundness, or thoroughness of an older, though by no means ancient order of scholarship as passe in our day of rapid railroading in education, and in our age of superficial, if not altogether spurious culture.

Again, there are those who laugh at the "old fogies" who are overparticular in their ethical exactions; who make exaggerated demands intellectual, moral and material, by asking for purpose, quality and sincerity in conduct, in the issues of commerce, art and craftsmanship, and who frown upon the tawdry results of ephemeral minds and incompetent hands, having little more than quantity and deformity to recommend them. Indeed, all of these sternly-inclined "quaint" or "antique" individuals, the twentieth-century lightning-speed-progress-makers wave lightly aside under the lump designation of "old-fashioned" or "way behind the times," forgetting that there is such a thing as going too fast, as well as too slow! Thus the runners in a race who have started at a full pace have often been overtaken by their more slowly-moving competitors who did not exhaust themselves at the outset, but, able to draw upon their reserve strength for an extraordinary effort, they succeeded in carrying off the prize of victory.

But, dropping all figure or similitude, the fact is that among the ultra-moderns, especially among our own genial but not always thoughtful Americans, there is a dangerous tendency to underrate exceptional effort or to disparage the painstaking thoroughness and finish with which the "other-minded" seek to accomplish their daily tasks. The desire to do well what is worth doing at all, we are happy to observe, still exists among many workers in every field of employment; but the opposite is also true, that too numerous are they who believe conscience service to belong to old-fashioned, or obsolete ideals. And on the basis of this belief is formed much of the defective practice ranging all the way from the performance of the duties of the housemaid, to the directions of the mistress; from the work of banking and shipping clerks to public officials; from heads of municipalities to heads of State.

The result of this baneful bit of philosophy as to what is old and what is new-fashioned, particularly respecting the methods and products of manual labor, is slack, slipshod workmanship which those trained to a stricter régime will not tolerate, much less condone. Hence they are labeled as "difficult," "severe," "unbearable cranks." "old cronies" whose ideas are so far out of fashion as to make them ridiculous; for it is not uncommon to hear a youngster boast in home, school, shop or office, "No one would dream of taking his or her orders seriously."

Be that as it may; what, however, these objectionable rigorous "old-fashioned folk" for the most part represent, may be summed up as good manners, sound morals, skilled labor, honest service, accurate knowledge, genuine culture. And despite passing vogues and noisy popularity attending cheaper people and inferior performances, these rashly and wrongly estimated ones will nevertheless remain, to use a commercial phrase, the staple articles from which the stock of civilization derives its principal value. For they will always remain the fundamental models, however old, upon which later forms of society or social service fit to produce lasting results will have to be fashioned. Still more, however seemingly "out of date," they will by the best judges be accounted as "good style" in every age; and hence, however "old-fashioned," their sterling qualities, or the enduring ideas and principles which they represent will be subject to perpetual revival, thus converting the old into the ever new.

The Backwoods of Egypt. By Frank G. Carpenter.

THE OASES.

HOW MODERN ENTERPRISE IS OPENING UP THE DESERT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PORT TEWFIK (Egypt.)—Modern enterprise is opening up the backwoods of Egypt. Syndicates with large capital are prospecting for coal oil and copper in the Sinai peninsula. The Egyptian Exploration Company is working gold mines between Luxor and the Red Sea, and the Nile Gold Fields Company is operating further south beyond Assouan. An English syndicate with a capital of $2,500,000 is about to build a railroad across the Libyan Desert to develop the string of oases which lie 100 miles or so west of the Nile Valley; and by the Assouan Dam over 50,000 acres have been added to that great fertile spot in the desert known as the Fayoum. All of these regions may be called the backwoods of Egypt. Most of them have long been considered barren and worthless, and about them little is known.

The Gold Fields of the Desert.

Within the past two or three years a great interest has sprung up as to the gold fields of Egypt. Prospectors have been going over the desert above Cairo, between this country and the Red Sea, and more than a score of syndicates have been formed to prospect the various concessions. The whole country has been divided among them, and the Egyptian government has instituted a department of mines to control them. This department is under the Minister of the Interior, and it has a camel police, so that its soldiers can go rapidly from place to place and keep order. Lines of communication from certain ports on the Nile to the Red Sea are being opened up in order to enable labor to be more economically sent to the mines and to give the companies better means of transport for the materials and foodstuffs which they require.

At present the headquarters of the mining department is at Edfou, between Assouan and Luxor. It has supplies and material stored there, and it has been making experiments of crossing the eastern desert on motor cars and motor cycles to some of the mining centers. Just now the chief mines are far away from the Nile, and it is necessary to have quick methods of reaching them. A number are right on the shores of the Red Sea, and they run up and down through the whole of the eastern desert in the mountainous regions bordering the coast. There are other mining companies operating in the Soudan, and some which have concessions on the very border of Abyssinia.

Ancient Mines Being Opened.

A number of these companies are reopening the workings of the ancient Egyptians. The Streeter concession, for instance, is looking for emeralds at the foot of Jabel Nugrus, near where gold mines once were. Its territory includes some of the most mountainous country of Egypt, with peaks rising from a mile to a mile and a half above the level of the Mediterranean. It lies within thirty miles of the Red Sea, and is filled with ancient workings of gold, lead, copper, iron and emeralds. Just west of this concession the Egypt and Soudan mining syndicate has four prospecting areas of twenty-five square miles each, upon which ancient gold workings are shown, and evidences of old mines have been found in many of the other allotments.

It is well known that the desert east of the Nile supplied quantities of gold ages ago. It was for several centuries the California of the civilized world, and produced enough to make the Pharaohs rich and to enable them to send treasure to the kings of Western Asia. Some of the letters to Pharaoh, which have been discovered, come from his royal correspondents in Asia, and they are filled with requests for gold, which is spoken of as being as plentiful in his country as dust.

A little later, when Egypt had lost her empire and had been overrun by the barbarians of the north, the amount of gold yielded by the mines of the desert was still great. Old Rameses, the oppressor of the Hebrews, had a big income from them, and under the Ptolemies the revenue of the country is said to have been something like $20,000,000 per annum, a large part of which came from the mines. On some of the oldest tombs there are pictures showing how gold jewelry was made over 4400 years ago, and one of the officials of that time states that he had commanded an escort which brought gold from the mines of Keneh and Kossier to Coptos.

This same region is now being exploited by the Egyptian Mines Exploration Company, and not far above Kossier, on the Red Sea, is the Um Rus Mining Company, which, with a capital of $900,000, is working some of those old mines. It has erected a large plant, consisting of an electric generating station, air compressors, for driving rock drills, and a railway six miles long, connecting the mine with its ten stamp mills on the seashore. The main shaft is now over 600 feet deep, and the output is $7000 or $8000 per month. In the report of last October the Um Rus officials stated that more than $100,000 worth of gold had been mined, and that improvements were under way which would materially increase the output. This mine was worked as far back as 1377 B.C., and vast quantities of gold were taken out of it when the Pharaoh of the Bible was on the throne. At that time it is said that the Egyptian taskmasters worked the mines with slaves. They made them labor away day and night. The children were forced to carry the ore and the old people ground it to powder.

The opening up of the oases of Western Egypt is an agricultural proposition rather than a mining one, although extensive deposits of alum, phosphates and minerals are said to exist there. Gold, which runs as high as $2 per ton, has been found in the lower beds of the phosphate rocks, but it is not known whether it is merely a local freak of nature or whether it may expand into richer gold-bearing ore.

The oases of Egypt lie 100 miles or so west of the Nile, in the heart of the Libyan Desert. There are great centers which have been known for ages, and of which were noted for their fertility when the He were still at work under their Egyptian task These oases are Kharga, which lies 120 miles west of Esneh, but which is best reached from As Farafra, which is almost directly west of Assiout, may be reached by camels in the space of eight Dakhla, which lies between Kharga and Farafra, and the oasis of Baharia, which is about three days' from Girga, on the Nile.

The corporation of Western Egypt proposes railroads to these oases, and as a consideration it is to receive 600,000 acres of land and is to right, for thirty years, to mine the alum, phosphates with which the oases abound. A scheme is to irrigate the lands acquired by the sion. The company estimates that it will cost per acre to do this, and that the lands will per acre as soon as the water can be put Much of the irrigation will be done by arte some of which have been already sunk and ing flowing streams. The company is composed lishmen and Egyptians, and it has a capital It has already begun building its railway, the route from the Nile to Kharga with equipment. through some interesting parts of the Libyan Desert by trails, and it is probable that winter resorts similar to that at Biskra, in the Sahara, will spring up in these oases. I first saw the Libyan Desert in Tripoli. It begins there and runs eastward to the Nile Valley. Near Egypt it is a monotonous, stony tableland from 600 to [illegible] feet above the level of the Nile. It is absolutely barren, and is without doubt one of the bleakest parts of the globe. As one goes westward and nears the oases the land drops. The desert is cut up by ravines and hills. The oases are in a depression running for several hundred miles irregularly north and south. Just west of them the land is still rocky, but after about six days' camel journey it changes to an ocean of sand which extends on and on for hundreds of miles.

These oases now have over 30,000 people. They are Mohammedans, and include both Arabs and Bedouins. They live in villages of mud-brick houses, each oasis having one or more towns. In Baharia there are four villages, in Farafra one, and in Dakhla fourteen.

Dakhla is the most thickly-populated of all the oases. It has over 17,000 people, and it is watered by 420 wells, many of which were bored by the Romans. All of these villages have mosques. In Kharga there are [illegible] people in one village, and it is the seat of the Egyptian government. There is a government doctor there, and also a telegraph office. Many of the inhabitants have never been outside the oases, and they are said to be interesting to an extreme. They grow fruit and dates, exporting the latter to Egypt.

The new company expects to raise rice, wheat and barley, as well as cotton and sisal hemp. It has already planted many thousand date palms and large orchards of oranges, olives and pomegranates.

The Fayoum.

The largest and most fertile of all the Egyptian oases is the Fayoum. It is so big that it is a separate province. It contains about 850 square miles and has a population of 370,000. It lies about seventy miles northwest of Cairo, and there is only a short strip of desert between it and the Nile Valley. It is an oval basin, inclosed by the stony Libyan hills, and watered by a great canal, which some say was first built by Joseph and others that it was a branch of the Nile and neeeded only to be widened and deepened. The canal which feeds it now is called the Bahr Yusef, which means Joseph's Canal. It begins a mile or so north of Assiout and flows through upper Egypt, watering the Nile Valley until about seventy miles above Cairo, when it turns to the west and flows through a break in the hills into the Fayoum depression. The canal is 270 miles long. I have seen it where it begins near Assiout, and it looks like a wide and deep river.

In ancient times a great lake formed a part of the Fayoum. It was 450 miles around, and in places was 300 feet deep. It was used as a reservoir to supply the Delta with water, in times of low Nile, and a canal 300 feet wide connected it with the Nile River. This was the Lake Moeris, mentioned by Herodotus and also by the geographer Strabo. That lake has now almost disappeared, and its bed is covered by some of the richest farms in the world. The only part of it which remains is Lake Karum, thirty-five miles long and six miles wide, which lies at the northwestern edge of the depression at the foot of the Libyan hills. A great part of the land about the lake is desert, and its banks are covered with reeds and tamarisk shrubs. Its water is slightly brackish, but the people drink it. It contains fish, and the right to fish in it is let out by the government to one man, who allows the men living on the banks to ply their trade ,and in return receives one-half the catch.

Some of the best fruits and most beautiful flowers of Egypt come from the Fayoum. A railroad has been built into it, which connects with the main Egyptian system, and one can go from Cairo to Medinet, its capital, in four hours. There are two trains each way every day, and there is considerable travel from one place to the other. At Medinet there are branch railroads which reach every part of the oasis, and there is a system of tramways which includes a number of villages.

The Labyrinth.

The Fayoum is not often visited by tourists, although it contains some of the most wonderful ruins of ancient Egypt. There is a pyramid about five miles from Medinet, in which a mummy of an ancient king was recently found, and there are some traces left of the Labyrinth described by Strabo and other travelers. The Labyrinth is said to have been quite as wonderful as the pyramids. It was situated on the banks of Lake Moeris, and was a great palace, which had 3000 rooms, half of which were above ground and half below. The buildings composing the palace were connected by long covered passages which interested each other and wound about so that a stranger could not go through them without a guide. Strabo says that the ceilings of every room consisted of but a single stone, and that the passages were covered with slabs of extraordinary size. Herodotus, who went through the rooms above ground, says that the structure was more wonderful than the pyramids, and that the windings through the courts presented a thousand occasions of wonder as he passed through. Just who built this structure no one knows; but it is supposed to have been made as a temple and a tomb by one of the Egyptian kings, who lived more than a thousand years after Cheops built the great pyramid.

How Egypt Governs Sinai.

The Peninsula of Sinai, in which the Children of Israel wandered for forty years after they came out of the Nile Valley, now belongs to the Egyptians and is governed by them. The country is visited by travelers by means of camels and Bedouin guides, and it is possible to go up the mountains where Moses saw the Lord in the burning bush, and where he received the Ten Commandments engraved on blocks of stone, while the Israelites were worshiping the golden calf in the foothills.

The Peninsula of Sinai is one of the most mountainous deserts of the world. It has no tillable soil, but it is said to be well mineralized, and to have deposits of copper which were worked as far back as 3700 B. C. These deposits are now being again prospected, and a concession for mining them has been given to one of the exploration companies. The Cairo syndicate is investigating the northern half of the peninsula, and their engineers have reported the discovery of coal in small quantities. Petroleum is believed to exist there, and also turquoises and other valuable stones.

The government, however, is finding it difficult to administer the country, and just before Lord Cromer left he directed that the whole peninsula be put under the War Department. A British officer of the Egyptian army is to be the governor and commandant. His headquarters will be at Nekhl, the chief town of the peninsula, which is about its center; and there will be other Egyptian officers stationed at various points. The intention is to make the country safe for tourists and travelers, as well as for prospectors, and it will soon be possible to visit all parts of the peninsula.

The Queer Natives of Sinai.

In the past it has been difficult to control the natives of Sinai. The country is so large and so rough and the population so sparse that it is almost impossible to capture criminals and bring them to justice. A camel corps has been organized, and a telegraph line and possibly a road for motor cars will be built to Nekhl, although this may not be until at some time in the future.

At present there are about 30,000 inhabitants in the peninsula. They are all of Arab origin, save one little tribe, who are believed to be the descendants of some Roman troops sent to the peninsula in the sixth century.

These Sinai people have their own systems of justice, and they resent the laws which the Egyptians are trying to force upon them. They believe in the vendetta, and in blood money as payment for murder. If a man kills another in time of peace, the relations of the dead have the right to revenge or to pardon if the blood money be paid. The blood money for an ordinary murder is fixed at forty-one camels, and it may be paid on installments, the payments running for a month or a year or more. If a man kills another secretly and denies the crime, but is found guilty, he is fined four blood moneys, and the murdered man's relations may take revenge by killing one of the family of the murderer and still have the right to three blood moneys.

How the Judges Detect Crime.

Shortly before he left Egypt Lord Cromer made some investigations of justice in the Sinai peninsula, and in one of his reports described how a justice detected whether criminals were guilty or not. He had three methods—by water, by fire and by dream. The test by dream was made by His Honor going to sleep and dreaming whether the accused was guilty or not. If the dream showed the man guilty, it was looked upon as a judgment of God, and he was punished. The water test was made with a copper jug filled with that fluid. The judge, the accused and the spectators sat in a circle, and the jug, in some way or other, was made to move around through the group, and if it stopped opposite the accused he was guilty.

The fire test was severe. It was often used to convict men of stealing. In this case the judge heated an iron pan over the coals until it was red-hot, and then made the accused touch it three times with his tongue. If the tongue showed marks of burning he was guilty, and, if not, he was innocent. Two experts always sat with the judge to witness whether the tongues of the accused were burnt or not.

All such methods are now to be done away with, and the British and Egyptian officials are to see that justice is administered according to the laws of the land.

THE GIRL'S LAUGHTER.

In the village cemetery, beautified by its white and yellow flowers and gilded by the rays of a setting sun, I saw a most beautiful girl of about 16 laughing like one bereft, with her eyes fixed upon one of the slabs of a tomb.

What a disagreeable sensation I experienced on seeing her thus laugh! Such merriment, contrasting with the sadness that prevailed where so many beings reposed in eternal slumber, was unnatural!

I drew near, and in a tone of reproach said to her:

"Beautiful child, you would not thus laugh had you loved or even known the hapless being resting beneath these stones."

And she, looking at me with astonishment, exclaimed:

"Know him! Holy Virgin! Why, he was my lover! We would have married. I had no joys which he did not share! My thoughts were his; his hopes were mine. When his heart's beats ceased, I felt that Death cried unto me: 'Come, come!' "

"Why do you laugh, then?" I replied, subdued by the melancholy look of her eyes and by the sincere ring to her words.

"Why do I laugh, indeed? Holy Virgin! To give him pleasure! When he lived and we were sweethearts his greatest joy was to see me happy. No music pleased him more than my laughter. Cannot you comprehend how great would be his suffering did he but feel that I wept upon his grave?"—[Transatlantic Tales.

NO PICNIC.

A woman with eight young children entered a street car which was already comfortably filled. The conductor became impatient because it took the family so long to get on board, and when the mother finally reached the platform and the car began to move, he asked:

"Are these all your children, mum, or is it a picnic?"

"They are all my children," returned the woman, with a grim smile, "and I can tell you it's no picnic."—[Exchange.

A Marvelous Memory.

VALUABLE OFFICIAL OF SENATE OF UNITED STATES.

By a Special Contributor.

THE United States Senate is not amenable to the civil service law, but without adventitious aid of any character, the Senate retains the services of its valuable officials from childhood to old age; and then gives them interment.

For well-nigh fifty years Amzi Smith was superintendent of the Senate document-room, until, on August 24 of this year, he died full of years and of honor. Under his supervision the document-room grew in value and importance, until its archives, as arranged by the veteran superintendent, became substantially invaluable to the Senate.

In discussing an appropriation for the document-room, on June 24, 1884, the distinguished, capable and brilliant Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, said: "I do not think that the value of the services of this official is properly appreciated. To any person familiar with the vast archives of this body, with the enormous amount of printed matter, extending back for more than half a century, with which some official must be absolutely familiar, so that if at any time we require a document ancient, forgotten, for the purpose of illustrating an argument, or showing what has been done in days gone by upon a subject now before the Senate—I say the value of the services of a man who is familiar with that vast accumulation of material cannot be overestimated."

"In my judgment the only proper way to administer that office (Senate document-room) is to keep a force of men there continually in training, to retain them there by sufficient salaries, not extravagant, but satisfactory, so that they shall be here consecutively one after another as long as the office is to be administered. The best-trained man, the best scholar, the most competent man might be put into that room without previous experience, and he would be as helpless and worthless as a 10-year-old child."

The policy thus outlined has been continued. Indexes of the finest character are maintained, but actual experience in handling the documents is absolutely necessary in order to give to the Senate the character of service required.

The late superintendent was a man of trained memory, who could turn to a thousand of intricacies of public affairs which are not indexed and cannot be indexed. For about a quarter of a century George H. Boyd has been assistant to the superintendent; and, upon the death of that official, Mr. Boyd became acting superintendent.

Mr. Boyd has a better natural memory than was possessed by the late superintendent; and he has been greatly advantaged by the training which he has received. Every bill or resolution which has been introduced during the past twenty-five years has its proper niche in the memory of Mr. Boyd, and he can instantly tell which Senators participated in the debate; naming the days of the week or month when debates occurred. Moreover, he has studied the debates of the past, so that he is able to produce facts concerning every important discussion that has occurred during the past fifty years. There are innumerable intricacies of detail in all matters of legislation which cannot be indexed; and all of these are stored away in the memory of this official.

Very often during a debate in the Senate close observers will notice some Senator calling a little page boy and sending him out on an errand. In a little while that Senator will arise and begin discussing the question at issue, gravely referring to facts and precedents which occurred in former sessions of the Senate; and the "old-timers" of the press gallery know that George Boyd has been posting the Senator on his facts. Nobody ever questions his statements of fact, for he is almost mechanically exact in his mnemonic procedures.

During the Fifty-ninth Congress there were introduced in the Senate and the House 34,524 bills, and 6472 of them became laws. If a man were to have accurate memory of the disposition of so many billls, it would be regarded as a wonderful mental performance. But Mr. Boyd has memory of the history of all of the bills, which have been introduced and enacted during a period of a quarter of a century. He is a man of marvelous memory, and also a man of superior clerical and executive ability. The salary of the office is absurdly inadequate, when compared with the extent and importance of the duties; but all of the Senate salaries are small.

Mr. Boyd was born in Washington, D. C., April 25, 1861, and was appointed a page on the floor of the Senate in December, 1871. He was appointed a page in the document-room May 11, 1884, at a salary of $720 per annum. He was made assistant superintendent in 1890, and first assistant superintendent January 19, 1897, at a salary of $2000. Early in the coming session of the Congress, this capable and industrnous public servant will be designated superintendent of the document-room, with the salary of $3000 per annum. Some of his active friends have ventured the suggestion that the salary of the office be increased, and Mr. Boyd has vetoed the proposition, saying:

"The honor of succeeding such a man as Mr. Amzi Smith, is in itself worth more than money to me; and, besides, the increase from $2000 to $3000 is, in percentage, an enormous increase of income, anyway."

Moreover, as stated in the beginning, the Senate does not arbitrarily change its officials, and so Mr. Boyd has come into an office that fixes him comfortably for life; and he is contented.

Study of the Earth.

WORK OF GEOPHYSICAL LABORATORY AT WASHINGTON.

By a Special Contributor.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—To find out how Earth was made, is the function of the Geophysical Laboratory of the Carnegie Institution, just completed upon an isolated hill overlooking the capital city from the northwest. No individual, university or State has ever attempted or even contemplated the breadth of research assigned to this workshop by Prof. R. S. Woodward, president of the institution.

Alighting from my car and mounting a steep flight of steps that ran up the hillside, I yesterday found this new building—an imposing structure of the Spanish style, with gray stucco walls and a wide, overhanging roof of red tile. I was received by the director, Dr. Arthur L. Day, a young physicist who has not yet turned 40, although he has taught at Yale, his alma mater; has been a member of the scientific staff of the great technical school of Charlottenburg and has served as physical geologist of the United States Geological Survey.

Physical Laboratory

"We will here study the minerals of the earth first by making them ourselves, artificially, from the purest of materials, and—after thus counterfeiting them—by subjecting them to many physical, chemical and optical tests, we can make minerals much purer than those found in nature," explained Dr. Day as he led me on a personally-conducted tour of the new building. And in the course of this inspection I soon perceived that the Geophysical Laboratory is unique, not in function alone, but in its ingenious arrangement.

Building Has an Overcoat.

The building wears an overcoat which will keep warmth in in winter and the heat out in summer. This insulating layer, placed outside the exterior brick wall, is composed of six inches of hollow terra cotta with air spaces laid horizontal and closed at the ends. This scheme is entirely new and original. The terra cotta overcoat is less expensive and almost as strong, structurally, as the brick wall underneath.

Another novel arrangement protects the delicate measuring and observing apparatus in the laboratories on the upper floors from the jar of the heavy machinery in the basement. Each basement room containing heavy equipment has for a floor a thick slab of cement separated, bottom and sides, from the adjoining walls by a six-inch layer of dry sand. Other modern laboratories have separate buildings for their power equipment, but in the Geophysical Laboratory, a great saving is effected not in material alone, but in power which otherwise would be wasted in transmission. To keep the delicate instruments free from dust the air pumped into the laboratories is filled before being admitted and to free them from the jarring action of trolley cars or heavy machinery, which otherwise might come near, the building's complete isolation was purposely selected. It is protected from such encroachments by the steep contour of the hill on three sides while the land on the fourth side is to be occupied by a quiet school of the Sisters of the Holy Cross.

To Repeat Earth Building Processes.

But to get at the milk in the cocoanut—at what Dr. Day and his scientific staff are driving at:

They plan to manufacture on small scale what Dame Nature has wrought on a vast one, so far as earth earthy is concerned. Geologists have thus far inferred that in the beginning earth was as the sun is today—a mass of heated vapor. As this gradually cooled, the surface hardened into a crust which as it grew thicker pressed more heavily upon the now liquid interior which came flowing to the surface whenever a crack appeared. At first a fairly uniform mixture of the elements formed earth's mass, and certain combinations solidified to form the first crust; but when portions of the liquid interior afterward leaked through the forming crust, these soft masses became, when cooled and hardened, species of rock different from the original crust. It was all a process of evolution concerning which science has done little more than guess—hence this Geophysical Laboratory. To more than guess, to learn, to know how earth was made, science must repeat these processes in the laboratory. But in order to do this, the scientists must have at their command enormous pressures and temperatures. Physicists in some parts of the world have worked with enormous temperatures and others in other parts have experimented with vast pressures; but nowhere else in the world—except in nature's own laboratory—has there ever been equipment for working with these vast temperatures and pressures in the same place and at the same time.

Will Be a Rock Factory.

Nature's processes in earth building seem to have been first the condensation of vapor into liquid and then the condensation of liquid into a solid. But in retracing Nature's steps, Dr. Day will not go back to the very beginning and construct a miniature globe out of vapor. Every one knows that vapor will condense, and there would be no object in such an experiment. He will take up his earth problem from the time when our sphere became encrusted and certain portions began to show individuality. He will manufacture lava such as exists in the bowels of the earth, and by application of his high pressures and temperatures transform that into rocks or separate it into the familiar minerals and metals of earth.

He will manufacture rock in this way: First, he will obtain the pure chemicals which, as has been learned by analysis, nature used in manufacturing her rocks. These—lime, magnesia, alumina, silica and so on—he will place in the proper proportions in a series of mechanical mortars and pestles which he showed to me—a number of them in rows and tiers, the pestles revolving and stirring at the same time and with a rapid, uniform motion. After being thus thoroughly mixed, they will be melted in a powerful electric-arc furnace, after which they will be ground and mixed again. Then they will be ready for applications of enormous temperatures and pressures acting together, as in the earth.

Greatest Artificial Pressure Here.

Nature's pressures will be reproduced by a hydraulic compressor exerting 100,000 pounds to the square inch—the pressure that would be exerted on your hand if a fifty-ton bar an inch square at the end were rested upon it. This pressure is the greatest that has been produced under man's control. The powder that has left the mechanical grinder and mixer is poured into a cylindrical opening an eighth of an inch in diameter and then the desired pressure is applied.

I asked Dr. Day whether he had found it necessary to take any special precautions against accident [illegible] these enormous pressures. He smiled and said:

"I am going to paint all of the apparatus white so we may find it easily if it gets suddenly scattered [illegible] the landscape."

The heat, which may be given at the same time, [illegible] plied by an electric arc whose temperature can be [illegible] so great that it will melt any known metal or [illegible] so high indeed that beyond a certain point it [illegible] measured. The[illegible] protecting their eyes from the intense glare by [illegible] at the flames through ruby glass.

Tremendous Temperatures.

And what are the immense temperatures which [illegible] here be reproduced in order that Nature's rocks [illegible] counterfeited? The gamut of your imagination [illegible] ably does not reach above a temperature sufficient to heat a metal red-hot, which is about 1000 deg. [illegible] But while the iron of the kitchen stove will [illegible] becoming red-hot, yet the rock that we call "fire[illegible]" which lines the inside will stand a red or even [illegible] heat without any damage whatsoever. In nature's furnace all rocks were melted once and many are melting today. At a temperature higher than [illegible] copper and gold will melt; still there is no difficulty in finding rocks with which to line the furnaces [illegible] they are melted and the crucibles which hold them while they are melting. Hotter still must be the [illegible] which glass is made or iron melted, but yet [illegible] found rocks to hold them while they seethe in [illegible]

Halloween Ghosts.

PHANTOMS SEEN BY AMERICANS WHITE AND RED.

By a Special Contributor.

THE imaginative mind of the primitive red man peopled the world about him with all sorts of fanciful beings, which, like the little girl with a curl in the middle of her forehead, when good were very good; when bad, really quite horrid.

During the sunshiny day, the evil spirits and monsters had the grace to lie low in mountain cave and cavern, but at night they prowled through the dark, windswept forests to their hearts' content.

The most fascinating among them was the Flying Head, a kind of thrilling species of supernatural bat, we opine, for it had long black wings and two long sharp claws, while it was covered with hair that protected it from arrows—incidentally, when the head stood on its chin so to speak, it was taller than the tallest brave in the tribe.

Not only was it a blood-curdling bogy to scare fractious small fry into good behavior, but women also were mightily afraid of stumbling upon it in the dark. This in many cases no mere matter of nerves either for the Indian maiden to whom this specter appeared "never heard the words of a husband's wooing or the prattle of a papoose."

The gods grind slowly, but exceeding fine—to invisible sawdust so monstrous a thing as a Flying Head.

One chilly evening—the 31st of October, we have no doubt, though the careless chronicle omits the date—a widowed squaw sat within the doorway of her lodge roasting acorns over a spluttering fire and, womanwise, dreaming of her past happiness, her eyes riveted upon the flames that were kindling her dreary heart bright with memories. In fact, so absorbed was she that she did not net even suspect the presence of the Flying Head, the grinning face of which at that very moment was peeping in at the doorway.

Achilles had a mortal heel, and though for obvious reasons a Flying Head could not be accused of that weakness, some part of its anatomy must have been very human. It smelled the roasting acorns, it watched the woman stretch out her hand; pick up something from the fire—make a munching sound absolutely maddening to its hungry stomach—up whichever sleeve it carried that commodity. In through the doorway of the lodge it reached a long claw, snatched a live coal instead of an acorn from the fire and swallowed it whole.

All that night a howl of mingled rage and pain—like the piercing shriek of the wind in a storm—rent the forest, and never again was the Flying Head seen.

. . . .

Up in the Canadian domain lived the Blood Tribe of Indians, Heavy Collar, their chief.

One morning Chief Heavy Collar—having separated himself from his party in quest of buffalo—awoke to the uncomfortable discovery that he had slept that night beside the skeleton of a Blackfoot woman killed the preceding summer. Naturally, he needed no second bell to hasten his preparations for breakfast, and the sudden recollection of a pressing engagement hurried his footsteps through the forest all that day.

But night at last stood in the way of further progress, and he was forced to light a fire and cook his supper. While thus busily occupied, he looked up to see the skeleton astride a tree branch, whistling lustily, and, if you please, swinging her legs over his own private camp fire.

For a small boy to whistle in the dark may encourage the craven-hearted but, the whistling of a ghost grates on even a brave's nerves.

In polite Indian, Chief Heavy Collar requested the skeleton to desist—in fact, begged and implored the specter to withdraw. But however warm the day, the evening grows cold—thin people are always chilly—and the warmth of a fire was most acceptable to a skeleton's ankle bones. So she simply remained swinging her legs, her head cocked up to the stars, perhaps a twinkle in the hollow where an eye had been.

The chief grew thoroughly angry—it was an impertinence you'll admit!—lifted his rifle and fired.

The branch of the tree swayed free and the skeleton, falling backward, screamed: "You have killed me again! Dog! there is no place on earth you can hide from me."

Died game, you see, if it was the second time! As for Chief Heavy Collar, he made tracks for home all that hideous night; and all that hideous night the curse and the woman pursued him. Yet when he reached the camp at dawn and looked back, on the ground only his own footprints could be seen; convincing proof that the pursuer was a ghost.

A feast of welcome was at once prepared for the returned chief, and never was brave more glad to be surrounded by flesh-and-blood mortals and gaiety. But the end was not yet: While they ate and drank and were merry, a big bear stole out from the bushes. The chief picked up a bone and threw it to chase Bruin away. To his consternation a sepulchral voice muttered: "You killed me once, and again you are killing me!" Mrs. Banquo's ghost had arrived at the banquet.

"A ghost bear is upon us!" shouted poor old Heavy Collar.

In every way they tried to exorcise the demon, but prayer and incantation alike were unavailing. Still, the old mother of the chief would not give up—a failing of mothers the world over when the safety of their children hangs in the balance—and lighting a pipe, she did all in her power to coax the ghost to friendliness.

But as she offered her pipe, the bear retreated. The mother advanced a few steps. The bear withdrew farther.

Gradually the truth dawned in the chief's mind. His mother had fallen under the spell of the ghost. To his credit, he determined to save her. Throwing his arms about her waist, he endeavored to hold her, but his strength was nothing compared to the force of that ghoulish magnet drawing her away. A brave threw his arms about the waist of the chief; second brave tried to hold back the first, and so on, until the whole tribe was linked in a life-saving chain.

All useless! And suddenly, the pipe fell from the hand that held it to the ground. The mother of Chief Heavy Collar was dead.

Satisfied with her revenge, the Blackfoot woman returned no more from the spirit land to the haunts of men.

But the Indians in America did not have a corner on spooks.

At certain times, the fishing population of a little village in Maine were frightened by the weird sight of a phantom ship of ancient build coming nearer and nearer until it almost touched the shore, then after a pause—breathless to the watchers—slowly floating out to sea again.

For many years, too, Pond's Cove, in the same State, had a ghostly visitant, the appearance of a remarkable light the baffled all explanation until the dying confession of one who had left the town some years before was received making the phenomenon clear.

This fisherman had murdered the rival suitor of the girl whom he afterwards married, and, carrying the dead body out to sea, sank it in the waves that he thought could tell no tales. But, to his horror, once every year, a light came from the place where the body had been dropped overboard, floated eerily to the scene of the murder on the shore, and finally touched with a shining finger of accusation the very house where the murderer dwelt.

A phantom ship and a phantom light upon the sea, but what of a ghost train whizzing across the land?

Soon after the railroad was opened over Marshall Pass, Colo., an engineer of sturdy character and enviable record, was given charge of a train which he successfully ran on the new road for some time in his usual able way.

One night as he left the first line of snowsheds, he heard a whistle behind him and at the same moment the gong in his cab sounded. At once he applied the brakes and stopped the train.

The conductor, hurrying forward, asked what had happened. The engineer turned with the same question. Neither could satisfactorily explain, and the conductor, vehemently denying that he had rung any signal went back bewildered; the engineer, vehemently insisting that the gong had sounded, started on again, his face puzzled, his eye anxious.

In a few seconds, a whistle sounding danger shrieked nearer and nearer, and looking back as the train swung round a curve, the engineer was horrified to see a train speeding madly after his own.

He opened the throttle wide and huskily ordered his fireman to pile on coal.

They made the summit at last, and taking every advantage that gravity gave dashed down grade. As they now turned a sharp curve the engineer gave a dizzy glance back. Not more than 200 yards behind came the chasing train, its engineer—his face white as the driven snow—leaning out his cab window, laughing wildly. At the same moment a red danger signal gleamed ahead—between the devil and the deep sea with a vengeance!

Our engineer chose the devil; reversed lever and put on brakes.

The pursuing train seemed almost to leap into his own, but as he awaited the crash he saw the rails between the two trains spread and the whole second train roll into the cañon.

Enough to make any man weak in the knees! But there came no expected cry for help, no shriek of pain; no hiss of steam. And finally the train that had so narrowly escaped continued down the mountain side.

On approaching Green River the next morning, however, the engineer found written in frost upon his cab window the following words:

"A frate train was recked as you saw. Now that you saw it you will never make another run. The engine was not ounder control, and four sexshun men wor killed. If you ever run on this road again you will be recked."

This was the only report of a wrecked train ever received, but the engineer, being a sensible man, gave up his run and took another position on the Union Pacific.

A DEPARTMENT STORE TREE.

"The carnahuba palm of Brazil," said a lumber dealer, "is the world's most useful tree. A department-store tree you might well call it, for it gives everything from medicine to cattle food.

"It's roots make a very valuable drug, a blood purifier that is prescribed a good deal in the spring. Its timber takes a high polish, and is in demand among cabinetmakers for fine work. The sap becomes wine or vinegar, according to the way it is prepared, and starch and sugar are also obtained from this sap.

"The fruit of the tree is a cattle food, the nut is a good coffee substitute, the pith makes corks.

"There, can you beat it—medicine, sugar, coffee, starch, wine, corks, cattle food, lumber and vinegar, all from this one tree, the carnahuba palm?"

The Desert.

PEN PICTURE OF THE LIFE FOUND IN ITS SOLITUDES.

By a Special Contributor.

FAINT and visionary are the ideas of those who have not trod the desert's dreary waste of sand and rocks, who have not seen its sparse growth of fantastic vegetation. It is a world in itself, peculiar to itself, a world where one must learn again the alphabet of nature. It is a world that holds its inhabitants in thrall after they once have learned the lesson of its mystery.

To him whom time and experience has taught its ways, its dangers, its exactions and its moods, to him who is its veritable son by adoption, its solitude presents no terrors, but to the son of "the sod country" it is an enigma. To him it first teaches its primary lesson on the value of water. He will learn that water is the most precious thing known to the desert dweller. He will come to many stopping places in his journeying where food is given freely, but water must be paid for. He will learn that there are days and portions of this desert where even water is powerless to supply moisture to his body as fast as it evaporates, that is, unless it is possible for him to immerse his whole body in it. He will learn that nothing produces thirst so quickly as the knowledge of the emptiness of the canteen hanging at his side. So long as he can hear the gentle swish of the life-saving fluid there, he can withstand the desire to drink, but as soon as the last drop has been drawn, then thirst comes in earnest with all its suffering and hallucinations. Days of hunger do not begin to equal the actual sufferings of one hour of desert thirst.

A man goes tottering unsteadily forward, his flannel-covered canteen swings loosely at his side; it is empty. Onward plods his wavering way across the plains and valleys with ever-recurring swirls of alkali-laden dust fiercely lashing his roughened face and bringing scalding tears of agony to his half-closed eyes. His lips are cracked and swollen, his tongue thick, black and protruding. The desert thirst has him in its deadly embrace. His whole being cries for water, water! Anything for water. Just a little drop of water! And then, as though God had heard his cry and looked with compassion down upon him, before him, such a little way, just ahead, lies a lake with green trees about it whose sturdy forms are mirrored in its clear depth. Green verdure covers its shores, and cattle stand knee-deep in its shallows. There is a house just beyond, about whose door little children play; and orchards of fruit-laden trees extend out beyond in long, even rows. It is such a little way, it may be a mile, perhaps only half a mile, or even not more than 100 yards. He gasps with joy, he waves his stiffened arms and totters into a run. Oh, how delicious the water will be when he reaches it! How he will drink and drink! How he will roll himself in its embrace, and drink it in through each pore of his poor, shrunken body. Nothing will keep him from it; nothing can. It will, perhaps, not be cool, but oh! how sweet, how delicious! And then he stops and gazes. Yes, it is still there, just a little way ahead; not much nearer than when it first came in sight; but, while he gazes, it slowly fades away. The fairy landscape with its homely peace and its life-giving water is gone. There is no water, there are no trees, nor lake, nor home, nor cattle, nor little children playing about! Nothing but burning sand and bare, desolate mountains, looking blue and unreal in the distance. The mirage!

It is then that the end comes and the buzzards which for hours have been slowly circling above him in wide arcs, float in gradually-lessening circles and gradually glide nearer and nearer to the waste of sand below them where their banquet awaits. Days, or possibly years, afterward, some prospector may stumble on a pile of bleached bones and idly speculate and pass on his way. The story of the desert's tribute paid in human life has not been written, and never will be.

Seldom, however, comes this fate to the true son of the desert. He has learned his lesson well. The desert's mystery and solitude present no terrors to him. He is familiar with its moods and passions. Above all he has learned to estimate with absolute certainty his own limitations, his own powers of endurance. Nor familiarity, nor knowledge, nor utmost desire can prevail upon him to start on a trip that might be beyond his powers.

One must learn that almost all life on the desert goes armed. In the vegetation world of the desert the cactus comes first, with its numberless species. They are all armed, with long or short tough spines that can penetrate the thickest boot. The solitary and often grotesque "Joshua" or Yucca, the mesquite, the catsclaw, and numberless shrubs whose names have not been written, all are armed in one way or another. Some exude poisonous sap, others nauseating odors. The sagebrush is about the only one that does not seem to have anything with which to protect itself.

In the animal kingdom most are either armed with sharp teeth, spines, odors or poison to serve to keep their enemies at a distance, while the others depend upon their fleetness or artful skulking and hiding.

The spined and repulsive Gila monster, the horned toad, the sidewinder, with its two horns and deadly fangs, and its cousin, the desert rattlesnake; the tarantula, scorpion and desert bee, each of whose sting is exceedingly painful, and sometimes fatal, are among the desert's denizens. Then there are many varieties of lizards, large and small and of many colors, who protect themselves by their speed alone. The prowling coyote, bobcat, mountain lion, jack rabbit, cotton tail, mountain sheep, ibex, antelope, and an occasional deer are there. Among the smaller animals are the gopher, kangaroo rat, trade rat, hydrophobia skunk, ground squirrel and innumerable mice. But the traveler seldom sees any of these. The prospector, however, soon becomes acquainted with them. The first or at the latest, second night of his stay in any one camp, he will be visited by a trade rat, who will carry away all that portion of his outfit that is not too heavy for his ratship to handle and religiously leave some stick or stone in its place. A hydrophobia skunk will be apt to call and lunch from any bacon rinds that may be lying about, not disdaining a nip at Mr. Prospector's nose, if the opportunity offers. It is said and firmly believed by the sons of the desert, that the bite of this little skunk produces hydrophobia. The Gila monster is seldom seen, and the writer, after having spent nearly a year on the borders of Death Valley, has yet to see one of them at large. Rattlesnakes are also scarce except in some favorable locality.

The mountain sheep and ibex are gradually becoming tame, and this summer they have come to springs where miners were camped as regularly as domestic stock and with little more timidity. The mountain quail follows the miner and his burro. In the Avawatz they were unknown until this year, but they are dant there now. It is an unwritten law among miners on the desert that no game animals or birds be killed, or in any way disturbed, unless one is tual want, and he must make proof, convincing fact, if he kills a quail or sheep.

All life on the desert lives by its power to thirst. All desert plants are so constructed that are able to conserve and store up moisture against time of drouth. This necessity has wrought forms of both animals and plants, and in time leaves its indelible mark upon men who dwell wastes. The leaves of all desert trees are thick so that they expose as little surface as for evaporation in the dry air. The great present evidence of the struggle for water is everywhere where men come together on the this struggle all who come to the desert must stantly. Every wagon must have its water barrel burro his water bags, each man his canteen.

There are times, however, when the desert desert. That time comes with the rain. Nothing where, can outrank the glory of the desert when finally comes. For months, perhaps years, scorched and dry, not a sprig of green anywhere gray dust. No life appears; all is dead, dull seed, no blossom nor promise of them; no the rain comes, and in a few days the whole one field of green and gorgeous blossom. No can produce so great a profusion and variety or such exquisite colors. Red, yellow and den Answers:] For many a long year the cam- nd has been casting round for the secret which enable him to produce his snapshots in their nat- lors. Enormously complicated scientific processes r photography have, in fact, been actually in- d only to prove what is called "commercially im- able"—and to capitalists that is, alas! a damning . But at last the mystery of a color-photography which can really be made to pay has been hit strange to say, the miracle of photographing in s of Nature has been performed with the aid of tato.

POTATO PICTURES.

HE "IRISH APPLE" OF COMMERCE FOUND COLOR PHOTOGRAPHY.

he time these lines appear in print, any reader of s can go to a little shop close to the British Mu- nd there purchase a box of the wonderful "auto- e" plates. They are dear, it is true, costing some- the twenty times what the ordinary dry plate or s, but this will hardly deter the suitor who to immortalize the pink-and-white complexion est girl, or the gardener who wants a permanent of the all-too-soon faded glories of his prize hemums.

utochrome plate is exposed in the camera in the way. For the outdoor landscape in sunshine a sec- posure is required, but at the seaside, where the is photographically speaking, tremendously strong d with that inland, genuine snaps, in a fraction ond, could be taken. The plate must be exposed its glass side toward the lens; it is developed in inary way, passed through nine solutions, one of reverses it from a negative into a positive, washed e minutes—and, behold! you have your picture, with the true colors of Nature, from pure black and white—these "colors" which are not colors, up till now, been impossible to render by any of alled color processes—together with the green grass, the blue sky, the pinks and yellows, and purples of the flowers; all, in fact, exactly saw it at the moment you pressed the button half r previously. For the autochrome plate takes time to finish than an ordinary one.

what has the potato to do with the natural colors autochrome? Simply this. The autochrome plate ed with myriads of excessively minute starch —the starch being derived from potatoes—and grain is stained a certain color, and each grain is y the same size. There are 20,000 of these starch s to the inch, and of these one-third are stained olor, one-third green, and one-third orange. But together do the grains lie upon the surface of te, and so ingeniously are they arranged without ngle grain overlapping its fellow, that the human oking through the plate, sees nothing but white. he looking through a piece of finely-ground glass. d the grains is the ordinary photographic film, and ing a picture on this film in the regular way the e automatically sorts out, as it were, the rays of passing through the screen of potato grains; and violet light has passed we see a violet patch of , where green has passed it is green, where or- has passed, it is orange—and all the other colors e combinations of these primary colors. The pic- can be shown in a magic lantern, or else placed sparencies in a window; indeed, window-sized can be made, so that instead of gazing out from fice at a row of chimney-pots you can look forth ently—on the Alps or Windermere. So far, it s proved practicable to transfer the pictures to and it is thus only possible to make one picture e exposure in the camera, just as it has always with the still popular "tintypes;" but already an r is at work on a paper which he calls "Uto," and he claims will reproduce the chrome views any r of times.

The Food We Eat.

MR. MCBEAN, THE HOTEL CLERK, REMARKS ABOUT IT.

By a Special Contributor.

"IT'S gettin' so," remarked the house detective plaintively, "that purty soon a man won't be safe from pizenin' hisse'f without he takes to livin' on hard-boiled eggs and raw bannanners."

"And at that he'll have to do his own peeling to avoid adulteration, won't he?" said Mr. Alexander McBean, the hotel clerk. "I know what's troubling your vast intellect, Larry. You've been reading up on the subject of the food we eat and you made the horrifying discovery that you've been fitting up an unhappy stomach as a dye shop and cleaning works when all the time you thought the stuff you heaved into that ill-fated system of yours was real provisions. The next time you eat a typical New York breakfast, which will be tomorrow morning—six bites, one gulp, a choke and a nine-inch strip of assorted hiccoughs—the whole to be washed down with a hurried cataract of water as you take a flying leap off the chair, you will probably be seized in from one to two hours with sharp shooting pains in the vicinity sou' by sou'west of the ship cable called a watch chain, which is draped across that series of terraces, called a diaphragm, which you wear on your front elevation. Will you concede as heretofore that you have a touch of indigestion and hurl in a few pepsin tablets to quiet the disorderly parties in the middle flat? You will not. You'll arrive at the truly distressful conclusion that you are being slowly put to death by some of these here deadly and murderous chemicals that never seem to do you any harm until you hear about 'em."

"I won't think it; I'll know it," said the house detective gloomily, as he fixed his cold professional eye on a sure-thing person who had slipped into a chair in the lobby of the St. Reckless and was trying to look as if he belonged there. "I'll know it good and plenty. It's a terrible thing, I tell you, that them scoundrels that's putting up canned goods and the likes of that should be allowed to doctor up their truck with binzine of soda and bivalves and corpuscles and washin' powders and formaldehyde and all them other unhealthy drugs. Say, Mr. McBean, tell me, what is this here formaldehyde they talk so much about, anyway?"

"It is a distant branch of the well-known family of the same name that was at one time prominent among the old lyin' insurance companies," said Mr McBean. "The Equitable Hydes have left us. They now reside abroad where the head, if I may use such a term in this case—where the head, James Hazen Hyde, is engaged in the culture of violets and creases in the pants. But the one you mention, formaldehye, is still very much in our midst if you'll believe what good old Dr. Wiley, down at Washington, and his able corps of young poison-sifters have to say."

"In course I believe 'em," answered the house detective fervently. "You know every time I think about that article I just read I feel like I ain't goin' to have no appertite for lunch."

"Right you are," said Mr. McBean, "right you are. My old friend, Dr. Wiley, assisted by my young friend, Upton Sinclair, has done much to cut down the cost of living in this country by discouraging the pernicious human appetite. We owe them a great deal, and some day, when I can catch one of them up a quiet alley, and there's a bit of scrap iron handy, I'm going to give him my share.

"Larry, I passed all through it. For years my idea of a tasty breakfast was a sirloin steak about three inches thick, smothered in some of Bermuda's favorite product. Then I'd stroll out of the breakfast-room breathing airy persiflage among my friends, a regular walking edition of De Quince's great work, 'The Confessions of An Onion Eater.' I'd be feeling satisfied with myself inside and out, and I'd look the part. But one fine day Dr. Wiley stepped out of a newspaper and took me firmly by the arm.

" 'My good man,' he says, 'do you realize that you are slowly but surely destroying the only bunch of vital organs you've got to your back? When they're gone, where do you suppose you're going to get another set? Speaking of disgusting things, now where would you guess the stuff you just ate, came from?'

" 'Off a cow,' I says, 'off the aft quarterdeck of a deceased cow—there or thereabouts.'

" 'Not at all,' he says, 'not at all. It came out of a dark room. That's where it came from.'

" 'You surprise me,' I says, turning slightly pale. 'You pain me.'

" 'Yes,' he says, 'a corrupt butcher retired to a recess back of his chemical shop with a fireproof T-bone, a bottle of Hypo No. 2, a strand of processed dog meat, a vial of carmine writing fluid, a pinch of isinglass, a dash of ammonia and a few other things which, if I mentioned them you'd be ill, and with these ingredients he developed that there ostensible steak which you have just consumed. The sauce with which you deluged it was really the same stuff that a Rube-lady uses to varnish a hearth with. You had some green peas on the side, too, didn't you? Yes, I thought s my trained eye detects traces of the coloring matter still on your lower lip. French peas, you say? Yes, lad, so called because the basis of them is Paris green. Ah, my young friend, beware, ere it is too late, beware of the sulphuric sandwich, the fromage de borax and the yellow ochre entreé. Or, if you must eat them, I call your attention to the new labels which we are compelling the manufacturers to place on their preparations.'

"And with that, Larry, he held up before me a can of tomatoes, bearing the following inscription in large letters: "GUARANTEED UNDER THE UNITED STATES PURE FOOD LAW,' and under that in clear but modest type almost a sixteenth of an inch long, this admission:

> "This can contains one-half pint benzoate of soda, one heaping dessertspoonful analine dye, one lump of prussic acid the size of a hazel nut, one tomato."

"What did you do after that warning?" asked the house detective.

"I took Dr. Wiley's advice, to be sure," said the hotel clerk. "In the same connection I discovered that following Dr. Wiley made me look a good deal like his professional brother, Dr. Tanner. I quote you the menu: For breakfast, one plate of finely-chopped lemonade straws dampened with a gill of tepid water that had been boiled four hours and then strained; for lunch, a measure of predigested oats and a short bran mash; for dinner, some shredded fodder, and a compressed-air biscuit; and for dessert, a sterilized prune. After one week I had a feeling in my stomach like a house for rent and a taste in my mouth like a hay and feed store. I had been told, Larry, that such a diet would clear the brain. And so it did. It cleared mine so thoroughly that after the second day I couldn't seem to notice any brain at all. I had all the mental activity of a German carp. So I returned to the imitation provender that had been destroying me inch by inch and gained nine pounds in four days."

"The pure-food people is doin' great good makin' them guys label their pollutin' truck with the real facts," insisted the house detective.

"I admit it," said the hotel clerk cheerfully. "Formerly we were kept in innocence and did well and stayed happy. But now we know what's coming to us. The law, you may notice, don't cut the poison out of the vittles. That would be crude and it would be expensive, and undoubtedly unconstitutional. No, what the law does is to kindly indicate the presence of the foreign substances in bold, strong letters than can readily be detected by turning the can upside down and using a strong magnifying glass. This, of course, is a great boon to humanity, for now when the paroxysms begin to come on you can turn to the back of the Almanac where it says 'Poisons: Their Anecdotes,' and see whether your symptoms are running true to form."

"It's certainly got me all razzled," said the house detective. "I feel squeamish. Less go take somethin' to brace up?"

"Whisky?" inquired the hotel clerk.

"Sure. Why not?" asked the house detective.

"Poor deluded creature!" said Mr. McBean, pityingly. "I see you only read half the article. Don't you know whisky has been exposed? Whisky, Larry—how I hate the sound even of the hateful name—has been shown to be something like embalming fluid, only stronger, and something like furniture polish, only not so sticky. The chemical analysis reveals the fact that when not used as a beverage it's a fine thing for removing blackheads from the face and taking grease stains out of imported rugs. Would you insult your digestion by imbibing three stalwart fingers of a carpet cleaner?"

"How about somethin' mixed, then?" suggested the house detective; "a dry martini, say?"

" 'Tis no better," explained the hotel clerk, with gloom in his voice. "As shown by the latest exposes in the magazines, the gin in a cocktail is but little more than Christmas card paint, while as for the seeming olives that go with these insidious mixtures which you put into your mouth to steal away your membranes, I hate to tell you, but they're only green persimmons, that have been treated with bleaching compound by a firm out in Illinois. You might as well drink a package of Easter-egg dyes as a cocktail, Larry."

"Oh, thunder!" said the house detective, "if you're goin' to be so dad-blamed particular, we'll make it a little kummel. I know doctors recommend kummel."

"Again your profound ignorance astounds me," said the mentor. "Every reader of the newspapers knows that kummel is manufactured out of an inferior variety of canary-bird seed, thus explaining why, when a German takes two glasses of it, he wants to fly up on the table and sing himself to sleep."

"Well, great guns! Mr. McBean," said the desperate house detective, "I may cut out the grub, but I'm blamed if I'm goin' to starve myse'f. I want a drink."

"So do I," said the hotel clerk briskly, as he came out of his onyx alcove. "I'll give you a toast, Larry. 'Here's to good old Poison, drink her down.' "

GAS FROM COTTONWOODS.

The cottonwood tree which grows in such abundance in Kansas is a complete gas-making plant, according to a recent discovery made by Prof. W. Bushong, one of the assistant professors of chemistry at Kansas University, who recently attempted to make a trip down the Marais des Cygnes River in a canoe. In the heart of the cottonwood tree is confined a gas which burns readily, with a faint blue flame, and which produces a greater degree of heat than does the ordinary natural gas because of a larger proportion of free hydrogen. This feature of the cottonwood has never before been exploited. It is not a matter of great commercial value, but it is an interesting bit of scientific information.—[Kansas City Journal.

AN EXCELLENT DIAGNOSIS.

A medical student who prided himself on being a humorist was running down the steps of the hospital which he was "walking," when he met a fellow-student. "Hello, Brown!" cried the latter, noticing that his friend looked pleased. "You're in a hurry. What's the matter—any good cases?"

"I should think so!" cried Brown. "We've got a woman in the ward upstairs who is so cross-eyed that the tears run down her back!"

"Bless me!" said his friend. "You can't do anything for her, can you?"

"I should think we can—in fact, we have," cried Brown; "we've treated her for bacteria!"—[Philadelphia Inquirer.

Alaskans Doomed.

ESKIMO TO BE PRACTICALLY WIPED OUT IN FIFTY YEARS.

By a Special Contributor.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—The government authorities look upon the situation of the Alaskan natives as hopeless. During the coming winter (already arrived in that far northern latitude) a good many of them, doubtless, will be wiped out by starvation; and, taking into view the appalling death rate among the Eskimos, it seems likely that those unfortunate people will have practically disappeared by fifty years from now. As for the Indians of Alaska, they have already departed, save only a remnant estimated at about 3000.

Glancing around the Arctic Circle, the neighborhood of which is their chosen habitat, one finds that (including Greenland) perhaps 28,000 Eskimos survive today. Of this number one-half, roughly speaking, are in Alaska. They are quick-witted, jolly little people—shrewdly suspected by ethnologists to be the direct descendants of the lost men of the early Stone Age, driven northward—and it seems a pity that they should be doomed to perish at last from mere social contact with the whites.

Yet, this is about the situation. A century ago the Eskimos of Alaska were probably at least three times as numerous as at present, but contact with the white man, involving the acquisition of his liquor and diseases, has destroyed them wholesale. Measles (a comparatively harmless malady with us) assumes a deadly form among these Arctic people; epidemics of it wiping out whole villages, and scarlet fever and smallpox, unknown to them in earlier times, have wrought terrible havoc. Thus, and by reason of other causes presently to be mentioned, the native population has diminished at a frightful rate. Towns which formerly had 1000 to 2000 inhabitants are represented at present by a few scattered huts; and at Point Barrow (formerly a thriving community) the deaths for some years past have been fifteen to every birth!

Notwithstanding the utmost efforts made by the revenue cutter service, which is a sort of maritime police, much liquor is furnished by whalers and traders to the natives, in barter for skins and other merchandise. So eager are the poor Eskimos to obtain the poison that they will give almost anything they possess for it—even what is absolutely necessary to their subsistence; and, having secured it, they will devote long periods to drunken idleness, when they ought to be hunting and storing food for the coming winter. In just this way, for example, it came about that a party of twenty-odd literally starved to death on King's Island, in the northern part of Bering Sea, a few years ago. When a revenue cutter stopped there in the following summer, only their bones, scattered about what had been a camp fire, remained to tell the tale.

Unfortunately, the white men, not content with introducing rum and disease among the natives of Alaska, have proceeded to adopt the deadly expedient of taking away their food supply. Availing themselves of the merciless advantage bestowed by weapons of precision, they have deliberately set out to destroy the animals upon which the Eskimos depended for their subsistence. In this effort, indeed, they have been so far successful that whales have become almost extinct in Alaskan waters ;the walrus has all but disappeared, and seals and sea lions have grown so scarce that their skins can scarce be got in numbers sufficient to cover the indispensable boats.

But the greatest of all disasters is the destruction of the walrus—a mighty creature, weighing 3000 pounds when full grown, of such great and varied usefulness that it has been called the "camel of the Eskimo." Its flesh is good for food, its oil for heating and illumination, its skin (stretched on wooden frames) for canoes, its intestines for water-proof clothing, the soles of the flippers for footgear, its sinews for nets to catch birds, and its ivory for a variety of domestic implements. During long periods in winter walrus meat used to be the only available meat of the Eskimo.

The walrus, unhappily for itself and the Eskimo, is a stupid and unwieldy animal. By habit it is gregarious, assembling in herds on the ice off shore. Selected members of the herd are appointed to keep watch, while the others sleep and amuse themselves—a clever arrangement, but one which gives the white hunters an admirable advantage, inasmuch as they are easily able to pick off the guards from a distance by accurate rifle practice, thereforeupon murdering at leisure the entire assemblage. In this manner as many as 2000 walrus have been killed on a single ice cake—merely, it should be understood, for the sake of their tusks (of an excellent quality of ivory,) the bodies of the animals being left to rot!

Thus it comes about that today, on the Alaskan coast, it is scarcely possible to find a single walrus in waters where formerly they were so numerous that their bellowing could be heard above the incessant roar of the waves and the grinding of the ice floes. In the religious ceremonials of the Eskimos there are chants, of ancient origin, recounting in lamentable terms sufferings due to walrus famines—periods of want and distress, when, through causes wholly natural, the much-prized animal failed to turn up in its accustomed numbers in its usual haunts. But now, alas! there has arrived a permanent famine of the walrus—for, should the species ever become even comparatively numerous again, the very fact would invite its final and complete annihilation by the rifles of the white men.

One striking point of resemblance between the Eskimo and the Paleolithic (Early Stone Age) people is found in their remarkable talent for carving and picture-making. The tribes of the Later Stone Age, in Europe, knew not how to represent anything in nature by drawing or by cutting tool; but the more ancient Cave Dwellers, from whom these Arctic folk are supposed to be descended, left behind them plentiful evidences of their artistic bent. And thus today it is observed that nearly every Eskimo is a born artist. Through the months of the long winter night the men, for lack of anything else to do, devote much of their time to the work of carving small images of animals, such as the whale and bear, out of walrus ivory or driftwood, turning out in this manner complete Noah's Arks. They make dolls, too, for their little girls, whose doll houses frequently take the form of snow huts whittled out in miniature, with tiny soapstone lamps and cooking pots.

It is a fact worth mentioning in this connection that the snow hut (which is the winter dwelling of the Eskimo) is a marvel of ingenuity in architecture. To begin with, the building material must be selected with great care. The snow bank selected as a quarry must have been formed by a single storm, in order that the blocks cut from it shall be solid and homogeneous. Each block (cut with an ivory knife, or with a dovetail saw bought from a trader) is three or four feet long, two feet high, and six or eight inches thick. Ordinarily two men do the work, one furnishing the slabs while the other lays them in place.

Instead of laying them in parallel courses like bricks, the builder adjusts the blocks to form a spiral, inclined inward so as to make a dome-shaped structure, with the culmination of the spiral in the middle of the top, where three or four triangular pieces are put in finally to close the hole. By this method a vault is constructed without a scaffold; and the finished hut looks like the half of a sphere set upon its flat side. The joints are made air-tight with snow mortar, and a slab of clear fresh-water ice is inserted in the wall for a window. Around the inside is a bank of snow, which is used for tables and for sleeping purposes—the hut being lined with the skins that serve as a cover for the summer dwelling built on a framework of whale's ribs.

The most important article of furniture is the [illegible] stone lamp, about which the whole life of the household may be said to revolve. Indeed, this lamp has actually determined the distribution of the [illegible] rendering it possible for these Arctic people to [illegible] an otherwise uninhabitable region. It is used for lighting, for heating, for cooking, to melt snow for [illegible] water, and for drying clothes. Over it hangs the cooking pot, and above this, suspended from the ceiling, a net containing articles (such as boots and mittens) [illegible] there to dry in the ascending warm air. The lamp itself is a shallow, semi-circular vessel of soapstone, [illegible] the straight edge of which is laid a strip of [illegible] ted moss. It gives a brilliant and beautiful light, [illegible] supplied by the constant drip of a slice of seal [illegible] suspended near the flame.

In those latitudes there are few plants useful to [illegible] and no trees worth mentioning. There is always [illegible] of driftwood, however, partly from wrecks, but [illegible] supplied by the rivers which empty into the [illegible] Ocean. Most of the clothing worn by the Eskimos [illegible] made of reindeer hides, which have been obtained [illegible] erto chiefly from the Siberian Chukchees, who come [illegible] every summer to attend the international fair on [illegible] bue Sound, just north of Bering Strait, on the Alaskan side. This fair is an occasion of much dancing [illegible] feasting, with incidental dealings in wives. Quotations vary, of course, but a fair article of wife may be had [illegible] $10.

LL Halloween, or the eve All Saints Day, has long been known as "Nutcrack Night," for in England and Scotland nuts of various kinds, especially ts and hazelnuts, have played a prominent part for ries in Halloween sports and popular ceremonies. Northumberland nuts are still cast into the open fire the hearth as a kind of sacrifice, for, unbeknown to people, the burning of nuts on the family hearth is a late survival of an old heathen sacrifice. In Wales, the bonfire is more of a family, than a public affair. When darkness sets in they build a big fire near the house, and after it has burned to ashes everybody throws into the latter a white stone with the thrower's own private mark upon it. In the morning search is made for the stones, and should one be missing, its owner will die ere long. The Orkney fisherman, always superstitious, makes a kind of holy water of his own, with which he sprinkles his boats on All Hallow's for good luck, at the same time signing them with a cross with tar. It is probable that this custom is connected with belief in spirits and goblins, the holy water and the cross being intended for exercising charms, to ward them off.

Some of our American Halloween customs come directly from Ireland, such as the catching of apples hanging by strings, or floating in water. In our Irish-American families, who keep up old customs, an apple and a lighted candle are stuck on the ends of a sharp stick hanging by a cord, the feat being to try to catch the apple in the mouth while the apple and lighted candle are rotating. The Irish also make use of nuts. They cast three nuts on the hearth, or into the grate, each bearing a lover's name. The one that cracks and splutters means the unfaithful lover, the one that burns quietly indicates that its namesake is propitious, while marriage will surely follow if the nuts named after the girl and her lover both burn together. In the ashes of the burnt nuts the Irish tell fortunes. In America Halloween usages vary according to the respective lines of European immigration, and also with respect to the length of time elapsing since the first settlements. Along the Atlantic Coast, the site of the first colonies, local customs have become fixed, and many of these are perpetuations of old English, Scotch and Irish habits, as seen in the swinging apples, the burning nuts, the bonfires and juvenile pranks—the last originating, in the writer's opinion, in the alleged mischievous doings of old-world goblins and witches.

Halloween, of course, means Holy Eve—the evening sacred to all the saints, the holy ones of the church, and it seems the irony of fate that All Saints Day should thus be ushered in by such time-honored sports and revelry.

ALFRED K. GLOVER.

Campagna's Inhabitants.

COUNTERPARTS OF THE AMERICAN COWBOY NEAR ROME.

From New York Sun.

ONE of the most striking features of the Campagna is the herds of cattle which are bred there and roam at liberty over its hills and valleys. They are estimated to number about 200,000. They are magnificent beasts, generally with whitish skins, enormous spreading horns and large soft eyes.

Buffaloes may also be seen in herds here and there. Though sulky and sometimes savage, they submit to training, are very sagacious, and will drag enormous loads.

One meets them generally in the marshes, where they are sometimes used to clear the canals of the reeds, flags and aquatic plants with which the summer has choked the stream. Though generally under control, their original savagery will occasionally break out, and they sometimes attack their drivers and trample them to death.

Along the walls of Rome at regular intervals little pens are railed off with strong beams to afford refuge to any pedestrians in case they may chance to meet a drove of buffaloes or cattle.

A considerable number of horses are bred on the Campagna, and several hundred are often seen together on one farm. The Campagna horses are not handsome in figure, but they are very strong and enduring. They are of so robust constitution that they are practically immune from ailments, and one of their characteristic features is that they do not require shelter either in summer or winter.

The horses seen in the Campagna are mostly mares and unbroken colts. The latter, known as puledri, are generally left wild until they are three years old. They are provided with water, and very rarely, when the cold and rains have destroyed the grass, with some hay, but generally they are left to roam at large without any shelter except what they can find for themselves under the trees.

A solitary driver, the counterpart of an American cowboy, called buttero, wearing a peaked black felt hat, a short jacket or a long riding black cloak lined with green, according to the season, breeches of goatskin with the long, shaggy hair hanging from them, short riding boots and long spurs, with a long pole, visits them occasionally. When the third year is passed the drivers go out together to catch them as if they were wild animals.

Approaching cautiously, they either entrap them by dropping over their heads a plain headstall, which they extend on a long pole, or if the colts are very wild they use the lasso, which they handle very skillfully. Once the colt is caught he is dragged or driven home and fastened to a pillar in the center of a field and his training is begun.

Many of the Campagna horses are sold to the government for cavalry remounts, and as they are capable of enduring great fatigue and withstanding great heat and cold, they do excellent service.

The flocks of sheep on the Campagna are another characteristic feature. Their number is estimated at a couple of millions, and one meets them almost everywhere, near Rome, further inland, on the hills and in the woods or macchie.

They are tended by shepherds whose costume is picturesque, consisting of pointed hats adorned with a feather, coats and breeches of undressed sheepskin, and sandals or cioci, whence their name of ciociari. At their side they carry a gourd of water, in their pocket a black wedge of bread, and in their hand a long pole.

All day long, year in and year out, they spend their time leaning on the pole, watching the herds, gazing vacantly into space, dreaming perhaps, or sleeping under the shade of some solitary tree, while their dogs do all the active work, keep guard over the sheep, prevent them from straying, drive them and direct their course.

The sheep follow after the shepherd and are not driven before him, and at nightfall when they are all gathered together he leads them to the fold. The fold is movable and now pitched in one spot and now in another. It is made of a network of twine, stretched on stakes about three feet high, and it is identical with the old sheepfold of Roman times called retia.

The dwelling of the shepherd is a hut made out of branches of Spanish broom, conical in shape, open at the apex for the escape of smoke, and containing a wooden bench and a bed something like a ship's berth. His food consists of black bread and aqua cotta, literally cooked water. The plain bread constitutes the shepherd's lunch; the aqua cotta, his evening meal or dinner.

During the day, to while away the long idle hours, the shepherd will pick here and there herbs and roots, wild chicory perhaps and a few blades of a grass which resembles endive. These he puts carefully away, and when he returns to his hut he lights a wood fire, fills a pot of water in which he drops a small quantity of olive oil and throws in the herbs to boil. Paste on Sundays and bread on week days is broken in the mess, which the shepherd shares with his dog.

The Campagna shepherds very often are victims of the malaria, and they seldom live long. They are ignorant and superstitious, but often imaginative and poetic, especially in speaking of the beauties of nature, which shows their native susceptibility to fine impressions. In summer, when the great heat renders the Campagna unhealthful, the sheep are driven to higher levels and cooler pastures on the hills.

For long stretches of the Campagna a human dwelling is not met with, but now and again one sees a casolare, that is, a stone house, generally crumbling to ruin, and very rarely, to his great surprise, the traveler finds it inhabited. Generally it is a poor family of contadini from the Abruzzi, malaria-stricken and old, who attempt to eke out a livelihood on this desolate wilderness.

The husband will perhaps try to reclaim a piece of land, and by dint of hard toil he may succeed in growing enough corn to keep the family in bread during the year. The wife breeds chickens and pigeons, and the son, if there is one and he is not serving his time in the army, may be a shepherd or a cattle driver.

On some large farms of the Campagna owned by noble families there are large casolari where the fattore or overseer of the estate lives. If the farm is not rented but run by the owner, the fattore has several men under his orders who wear the livery of the noble house that employs them. There are the head herdsman, the buttari or drivers, the shepherds, carters and many others.

The agricultural implements are antiquated, the plowshare is of wood the same as that described by Virgil, the scythe is ponderous, and the grain is threshed or trodden out by horses and oxen or sometimes beaten out with a flail.

CURIOUS INSURANCE RISKS.

It is now possible for artists and authors to insure their work against failure. The manager of a prominent Moorgate-street insurance company yesterday declared that most of the companies were prepared to accept "risks" which a short time ago would have been considered ridiculous. Under policies now obtainable insurances can be effected by:

An author—That his latest book will sell to a given number of copies.

A playwright—That his drama will not be taken off the stage through failure before a stipulated number of performances.

A painter—That his canvas will be accepted by the Paris Salon or the Royal Academy, or will be sold within a time agreed upon.

A composer—That his song will be a success.

A golfer—That he will be relieved of financial responsibility if he hits or injures his caddie.

"All these policies," said our informant, "are what we call special indemnities. Of course, we will not issue a policy if the risk is obviously too great. An author, artist, or playwright would have to be of established reputation. Sir A. Conan Doyle and Mr. Kipling could obtain a policy insurance that any book they wrote would have a sale running into hundreds of thousands of copies. Mr. Pinero, as a playwright, would be similarly insured. We might also insure a Drury Lane production if, after seeing a rehearsal, our judges advised us to.

"If we were asked to insure the success of a new painting by a tolerably well-known artist, we would submit it to our art critic. In fact, the insurance business has expanded so that it is possible to insure against anything, the following, for instance:

"Wear of furniture.

"Loss of horses, dogs, birds, cats

"Sickness.

"Birth of twins.

"Increased income tax.

"Bad weather, involving financial loss.

"Death of a royal personage, involving financial loss.

"Delay of important documents in transit.

"Some of these risks look like gambling, and although we will accept them, we are not anxious to."—[London Mail.

A National Monument.

Petrified Forest of Arizona Under Uncle Sam's Protection.

By a Special Contributor.

FOR more than twenty years Arizona endeavored in a half-hearted and desultory fashion to secure the creation of a national park that would include within its limits the region of the Petrified Forest; but Congress never displayed any great enthusiasm on the subject, and the desired action was never taken. However, largely through the endeavors of Prof. Edgar L. Hewett, the Petrified Forest has now been declared a national monument, in accordance with the provisions of the Lacy Act, and its protection from heedless acts of vandalism is thus assured.

The most convenient point from which to visit the Petrified Forest is Adamana, a little way station on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad, consisting of a telegraph office, a water tank, a hotel and four widely-scattered dwellings. The original settler in this part of the valley of the Rio Puerco was an old frontiersman named Adam Hanna, whose wife was named Anna Hanna. For want of a more specific title, their ranch became known as Adam and Anna's place. What more natural than the dropping of the copulative—and there was the name ready-made, "Adamanna," abbreviated to Adamana—answering all the requirements of scientific nomenclature, as it was historically suggested, distinctive, definite and euphonious.

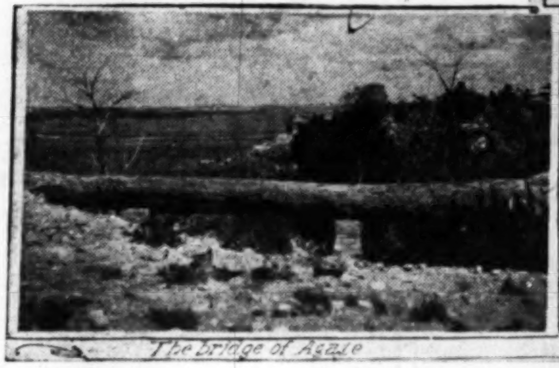
Adamana is as close to the extreme limit of civilization as any point on the main line of a great transcontinental railroad can well be. If one were to travel north, he would progress more than 200 miles before finding the ranch or home of a white man. If he traveled south, he would encounter no human habitation for a distance of from sixty to seventy miles. The nearest grocery, drug store, meat market, bargain counter or doctor is twenty miles west, at Holbrook; and the nearest daily paper, published at Albuquerque, is eighteen hours old when it reaches its subscribers at Adamana. In order to receive their proportion of the Territorial school appropriation the people of Adamana must boast of an enrollment of at least eight pupils in the district school. Last year there were but six children in the entire district. In order to help out, one householder sent his four-year-old son, and another borrowed the child of a relative in Holbrook. During the past year, the stork has visited Adamana three times, but none of the new arrivals can well be enrolled for the approaching school term, so that the Holbrook youngster will again be "borrowed" as soon as school opens.

In the neighborhood of Adamana are five separate petrified forests, or rather five separate places in which the slow process of erosion has exposed the petrified tree trunks to view. Beyond doubt, similar petrifactions exist in the buried rock-strata through most of the intervening country, and will be uncovered in future geologic ages by the unceasing action of the elements. From Adamana to the First Forest, the distance is about six miles; to the Second Forest, nine miles; to the Third Forest, thirteen miles; to the Blue Forest, seven miles; and to the North Sigillaria Forest, nine miles. The first three are all south of the railroad, and can be visited in one day, although most tourists content themselves with visiting the First and Second Forests, which are the most remarkable of the five. The North Sigillaria and the Blue Forests are on the north side of the railroad, and these also may be visited in a day. The North Sigillaria (named from the species of tree most common in it,) is mainly remarkable because it is the largest deposit of petrified trees in the known world, and also for the reason that many of the petrified tree trunks are standing upright, just as they grew unknown ages ago. However, the petrifactions here are of a uniform black color, and for that reason the region is less attractive than are the others, with their variegated hues. The Blue Forest received its name from the fact that most of the petrifactions are of a beautiful blue color, many standing upright, but the greater number are prostrate upon the ground.

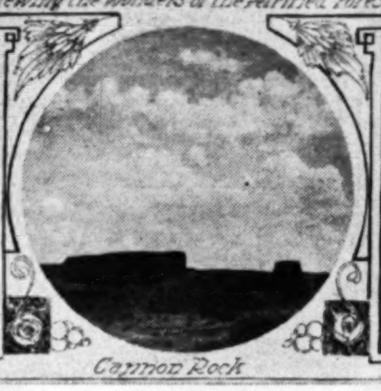
It is the First and Second Forests that have been set aside for preservation as national monuments by the government. Here are millions of tons of jasper and agate, of every shade and color that that master chemist, Nature, has ever painted. Some of the petrifactions are enormous tree trunks, more than 200 feet in length, with a diameter at the base of five or six feet. None of these are entire, being broken into segments of varying length by transverse cracks. When one of the larger trunks is broken open, the heart is generally found to be hollow, and thickly encrusted with crystals that might adorn the crown of a king—crystals of smoky topaz, of royal purple amethyst, of white quartz that sparkle like diamonds. And all around, over thousands of acres of the desert, the ground is littered with chips such as never came from any other woodpile. These are the disintegrating fragments of hundreds of logs that have been splintered and destroyed by the relentless ax of Time, whose edge is not dulled or deflected even by these solid masses of agate. The meanest chip that litters the ground might adorn the finest cabinet. Here one may pick moss agates, agates of purple, blue, orange, vermillion, crimson, mauve, garnet, violet, velvet black and spotless white. It is nature's own jewel box, filled with millions of tons of uncut gems.

A good deal has been said concerning the destruction wrought by vandals in the Petrified Forest. Al Stevenson, the genial boniface who runs the Forest Hotel at Adamana, has lived there for more than twenty-five years, settling in that section long before the tourists as a class had learned of its existence. He declares that he can perceive no diminution of the wealth or beauties of the forest since he first knew it. It is true that tons of agatized wood have been carried away; but for every log that man has thus despoiled, another has been uncovered by the wearing away of the rock-strata in which the deposits have been buried, perhaps for millions of years. Many logs are partly exposed; of some but the slightest segment is yet visible; and every year it becomes more and more evident that the visible wealth of this fossil forest of the past is insignificant in comparison with that which is yet covered. A thousand years hence, the process of erosion will still be uncovering new beauties, and the visible supply of agatized wood will be undiminished.

Viewing the wonders of the Petrified Forest



The bridge of Agate



Cannon Rock

View in the Second Forest

There are no great scenic features in the Petrified Forest to dwarf the intellect and challenge the wonder of the careless and unimaginative. The region must be studied in detail, rather than as a whole. Its beauties are not of the sublime and commanding character of those of the Grand Cañon, but call for more than a cursory examination to be fully appreciated. One must call to his aid his imagination, to picture before the mind's eye these prostrate masses of jasper and agate as upright monarchs of the forest, covered with foliage and melodious with the songs of birds, ages before Adam and Eve walked in the garden, before the giant peaks of the Rockies had been reared, when the contours of the continents and the divisions of land and water on the surface of the globe were far different from those now existing. After the giant trees whose trunks and branches, whose very bark, and rings, and knots and imperfections are simulated in flinty agate, had reached their maturity, they were buried beneath miles of water, at the bottom of a mighty ocean. Here among the tree trunks may be found petrified sea weeds, masses of fossil coral, sea shells and other remains of marine life. In the course of ages, several thousand feet of sand and marine sediments were deposited, and then the action of cosmic forces raised the whole region many thousands of feet above the level of the sea. Then the erosive forces of nature began their work; and after millions of years the accumulated sands of the seas (hardened into solid rock) were worn away in places, once more exposing to the light and air the long-entombed forests of the past. Yet the trees thus uncovered were not the same that the waters had overwhelmed. Every fiber of the vegetable tissues had decayed and disappeared. But as fast as they decayed, the spaces they had occupied were filled by dissolved minerals that percolated into the interstices and there hardened, stained into almost unbelievable colors by pigments dissolved from the overlying strata. Thus it happens that the hardened silicates preserve the texture, grain and every fiber of the wood that disappeared aeons ago.

How long a time was necessary for these vast geologic movements to take place, of course no man knows; but the estimates of geologists as to the period when the petrified forests were green vary all the way from 100,000 to 15,000,000 years ago.

The most famous single petrifaction in the whole region is that known as the Natural Bridge. This is a giant tree trunk, 110 feet in length, located midway between the First and Second Forests, that spans a small cañon, forming possibly the only bridge of agate in the whole world. Even when this remarkable bridge was first discovered it was broken into a number of pieces by transverse fractures in the log; but both ends were firmly embedded in the cañon walls and the segments were held in place. However, in recent years it has been evident that there was a gradual slipping of the segments that must ultimately result in the whole mass being precipitated to the bottom of the cañon. When the Petrified Forest was made a national monument it was confidently expected that the government would take steps to preserve the Natural Bridge by building suitable supports; but it became evident that long before the mass of red tape in which the subject became entangled could be unwound, the Petrified Bridge would pass out of existence. Accordingly, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company built two substantial stone piers, which will doubtless preserve the bridge of agate intact for many years to come. The beauty of nature's handiwork has been sadly marred by the clumsy efforts of man to preserve it, but this was preferable to permitting this unique object to be destroyed.

Other objects to which specific names have been given are Cannon Rock, Eagle Rock, the Battleship, Balanced Rock, and many others. Eagle Rock is not a petrifaction, but a tall column of sandstone on the summit of which an eagle's nest is plainly discernible, although it has long since been abandoned. The Battleship is an oddly-shaped butte of sandstone, from whose rugged sides protrude scores of petrified logs, like so many big guns through the portholes of a warship.

The most common use made of this beautiful agatized wood is to serve as cabinet specimens for curio collectors. A considerable quantity is also cut, polished and made into watch charms, sleeve buttons and other small articles of personal adornment. Thin sections of tree trunks are sometimes sawn and polished to serve as table tops, but the extreme hardness of the material and the consequent difficulty of cutting and polishing make these too costly for the demand to be extensive. Among the Indians the same material used to be largely employed for the manufacture of arrow and spear heads, and weapons of war made of this material that must have been obtained from the Arizona desert have been found on the plains of Kansas, and even among the remains of the Mound Builders in the Ohio and Mississippi valleys.

A DELUGE OF QUAIL.

The town of Nicolaieff suffered this week from a plague of quail. More than ten thousand birds, dead and alive, were harvested in the town and suburbs after a thunderstorm of exceptional violence.

The thunderstorm continued for a considerable time and rain fell in torrents. While the town was being illuminated by the almost continuous and vivid lightning flashes, quail, dead or alive, were observed falling and helplessly flittering in nearly every street and courtyard.

Men, women, and children immediately became oblivious to the deluge and the danger of being struck by lightning. Even the droschky drivers abandoned their horses to join in the universal scramble, bagging quail in the upturned skirts of their long gaberdines.

The unusual violence of the storm must have stirred up in a myriad flock the great numbers of quail which haunt the marshy and reedy reaches about the confluence of the Boug and the Ingul, which make a peninsula of Nicolaieff. The birds were evidentlyy exhausted by their enforced flight, and many of them were apparently killed by the lightning.

For the last couple of days quail on toast and otherwise has formed an item in the menu of every hotel and restaurant and on nearly every private household table in the town.

Early this morning, curiously enough, some hundreds of quail were caught by hand here on the Nicolai Boulevard, and the equally elevated terrace of the Alexander Park. They had obviously been driven over by a northerly gale from the opposite side of the [illegible] [Odessa Correspondence London Express.

The Dilemma.

How It Was Solved by a Clever Young Woman.

By a Special Contributor.

GIVEN an iron box, known to contain wealth, said to contain dynamite, arranged to explode when the key is used to unlock it—what would a man do? What would he advise?

This was the problem which I had to solve. I had an uncle whom I had never seen, on account of his deep-rooted antipathy to "relatives." He was a mechanical engineer by trade, but was reputed to have a wonderful collection of jewels, and to my great surprise he had wrote to me just before his death to say that he had decided to make me his heir. I did not feel like questioning him closely as to my inheritance, but after paying the funeral expenses I hastened to his bankers. There I was presented with a letter, written by him some months previously; and, more important to me, the heavy iron box containing the jewels was put into my hands. The letter, with sardonic humor, told me that the box contained not only the jewels—of which he gave me a fascinating list—but also a quantity of his "improved super-sensitive dynamite" arranged to explode as the key turned the lock. He closed with a grim hope that I might enjoy the jewels.

For two years I tried all kinds of plans to get at the jewels and at last, in desperation, I resolved to lay my difficulty before the great American public and ask for help. This resource did not fail me. A few days after the appearance of the newspaper setting forth my trouble, I received a letter. It contained five words:

"I can't solve your problem. A. GAY."

Not to be outdone in the soul of wit, I answered briefly:

"Come and try."

That evening, after my day's work at the office was over, I hastened to my room, scarcely even stopping for dinner. Not, I told myself, that I had much confidence in A. Gay—too many useless plans had already been suggested by my friends—but I felt that no opportunity should be neglected. And there was something about the note which appealed to me. As I sat smoking, I began to picture A. Gay to myself—a young, energetic man, up-to-date, certainly, from his business-like style of writing; a man of prompt decision and confidence in himself, by his brief note; a rather interesting individual, I should say, whom I should regret to see destroyed by dynamite in the bloom of his youth. No, he must not sacrifice himself; moreover, my jewels must not risk a possible explosion. I must be very careful—and again I took out the list of jewels and brooded lovingly over it till diamonds, sapphires, rubies danced before my enraptured sight.

A knock at the door interrupted my visions.

"Somebody to see you, sir."

"Very well, show him up," I answered.

The hesitating voice of my landlady continued: "Would you come down to my parlor, sir?"

"Why!" I began, running downstairs impatiently, and then stopping suddenly as I saw the form of a young girl seated in the dark little room.

"She says she has an appointment with you, sir."

"Nonsense!" I said, impatient with disappointment. "I am expecting no one except Mr. ——" Then I gasped, as the truth dawned upon me. She was A. Gay! I was fairly dazed by the thought, and by the eyes that met mine with a sparkle of amusement in their depths.

"I am Miss Gay," she said demurely, "and I have a business appointment with you."

"Certainly," I stammered. "You—ah—think—you can—ah—"

"May I see the box?" was her self-possessed answer.

"With pleasure," I said, rising. "Come this way."

As I led the way to a little closet under the stairs, I said: "This landlady has no suspicion of what I keep with such care." Then, reflecting on sundry and unexpected "movings" in the past, I added sadly: "The others all knew! I was never quite sure," fumbling with the key, "whether they were more afraid of burglars or explosion—but there!" flinging the door—"here is the dainty box."

"Oh, what an ingenious idea!" she exclaimed. "It is certainly safe from 'joggling.'"

After many ineffectual devices to keep the heavy iron box secure from even the slightest jar, I had at last evolved a plan which seemed perfect. First I set it on an old wooden chair, very strong and heavy. Then I bought four springs, such as one uses for bird cages, and placed one under each leg of the chair. To the springs I attached castors. For a non-mechanical man, I felt the arrangement very ingenious, preventing absolutely the possibility of explosion from a jar.

The girl proceeded to make a critical examination of the box—while I watched every movement anxiously.

"I can do it, I think," she announced finally, making notes on a tiny tablet she drew from her chatelaine. "But I must make some preparations."

With a slowly-growing confidence in her plan, whatever it might be, I acceded; and a week from that day, Thursday, was set for the important event, which she informed me, would be entirely without danger.

After she had gone (despite her protests, I put her on the car,) I settled myself to finish my cigar, but found the current of my thoughts completely changed. In vain did I read and re-read the list of jewels soon to be mine—if her promise came true—by my eyes as well as imagination; in vain, for before me danced the vision of the little white hand, resting so lightly, yet so firmly, on the box; of the laughing eyes, surveying my discomfiture with amusement.

"A. Gay,'" I murmured, "Annie, Amy, Attile, Abbie —I have it—Alice! It must be Alice—she looks like Alice!"

Now, I have never had much to say to ladies. In my own heart I have always firmly believed that if I chose to take the trouble, I should be very successful with them—but I had never cared to demonstrate this. Susan Willoughby was the only woman who had ever discovered it. She was, indeed, the most penetrating of her sex. Many hidden and hitherto unsuspected characteristics in myself did she reveal to me. Well do I remember the day in which she showed me, much to my surprise, that I not only hated crowds (which I had always known,) but that I also hated solitude—that my dream of bliss was a duette. I had lived thirty years alone and believed myself happy—but—and even then my natural thoughtlessness was so great that it was not until Susan sighed and murmured that she, too, knew what solitude was, that I knew how to remedy the evil. Of course, Susan being a young girl (that is, comparatively speaking,) did not in the least realize in what direction our conversation was tending—as she proved by her complete amazement when I murmured: "Two solitudes make a duette." She told me how surprised she was—she hardly knew—but urged by my skillful pleading, with many blushes and stammers she finally faltered a "Yes." Ah, well I remembered—and I knocked the ash off my cigar.

I remembered, too, the breaking of the engagement. I never knew exactly how that was. It was just at the time when I had decided definitely that without a miracle I could not get at my uncle's jewels—but would no doubt remain a poor clerk all my days. I despaired for a while—then aroused myself, to find my position lost and my betrothed engaged to another fellow. Oh, well—tomorrow I must stop on my way home and buy her a wedding gift. And so, restored to practical considerations, I went to bed.

The next morning I woke with a feeling as of something haunting me.

"By Jove[" I exclaimed, bounding out of bed, "she didn't say anything about terms. To be sure, I didn't suppose she goes about opening boxes for people—unless——" and I chuckled grimly, "unless she is a real 'perfesh.' Anyway——" and I called on her that evening, at her home in 119th street. No decision was made, however, as she "much preferred to leave the matter to me," "would rather wait until success was assured," and was in every way so different from the business-like young person of the evening before that I was amazed. But I was right—it was Alice!

Now, when it occurred to me next day, Saturday, that possibly dynamite experts might be interested in my uncle's "improved super-sensitive" compound, and that it might be a small sum in my pocket if it proved indeed a new compound, it also occurred to me that it would be a courteous act to ask her permission to have such experts present. So I telephoned her, and the matter was arranged.

Sunday was one of the dullest days it has ever been my lot to experience. I walked across town on 119th street—for no reason except that I felt restless. It was lonely. The streets were thronged with people, but what did I care for a mass of strangers? I wanted some one interesting, some one bright and young, some one—well, it was a stupid day.

On Monday I resolved to have some jewel experts present also. It might be worth while. This resolution necessitated another call at her house—but I chose an unfortunate time—she was out.

On Tuesday I tried again. No better luck.

On Wednesday I tramped up the high stone steps again—this time not to turn about instantly, for she was in, and would see me. She declared herself ready for the morrow's trial, but I fancied her a wee bit nervous.

The following evening at 7 o'clock a cab drew up in front of my door. From it descended first, myself; second, a complicated sort of fixture, in a wooden box, apparently a wooden soap box. This was carefully handed me by Miss Gay, who stepped down next, somewhat pale, but composed, and apparently sure of success. We entered the house, and were soon joined by the two dynamite experts whom I had invited, and a member of a prominent firm of jewelers.

As soon as we were seated, and everything ready, I rolled the box into the room, and Miss Gay rose.

"I wish to explain my plan," she said. "In this wooden box is a powerful battery, which supplies electricity to an X-ray vacuum tube. Under proper conditions the X-rays will throw on this screen of barium platino—cyanide the shadow of the box—is that clear?"

"The shadow of the outside of the box," objected one of the dynamite men. "See how dark it is. You can tell nothing of the contents."

"The power is not strong enough yet. Wait."

As she rearranged some adjustment, the glowing, wavering light on the screen seemed to creep slowly inward toward the center of the dark shadow.

"The jewels inside," she said, "will show as dark spots, being less transparent to these rays than the iron box. This is owing to chemical properties," she added, at my incredulous exclamation, "you must remember that these rays are not at all like direct sunlight—many bodies transparent to sunlight are opaque to this light, and vice versa. Jewels, like some other minerals, are not at all transparent to these rays, and so we shall see their shadows.

"As for the dynamite," she continued "that is another matter. This, you understand, is composed of nitro-glycerine (that is, glycerine mixed with nitric and sulphuric acids) with some non-explosive material added. This compound is less dense than iron, and so will not cast a shadow—a ray strong enough to go through the iron will go through the dynamite."

"Then we won't dare get at the jewels, even if we know they are there," protested Mather, the jeweler. "What's the good of seeing their shadows? Just an aggravation, I call it;" and he subsided into grumbling, as the soft voice went on.

"Acids have some very peculiar properties. My father was a chemist and an electrician. He taught me all he knew, and just before he died, he showed me the discovery of his life—a test which determines the presence of acids in a substance some little distance away, or surrounded by other substances, as in this case. He had hoped to be able to identify alkalies also—but that he left for me to discover.

"This test of my father's I shall apply before I increase the intensity of the light. I shall substitute this screen" (showing one resembling mica) "for the barium platino-cyanide one, and if there is any acid—that is, any nitro-glycerine—in the box, the screen will blaze with green fire."

Breathlessly we watched the screen. There was no result.

"There is no dynamite in the box!" she said firmly. "Will you open it, or will you see if the jewels will throw shadows?"

"Open it!" cried Mathers, eagerly.

"Oh, let's see the X-ray work," I demurred, seeing a faint shadow of disappointment on the sweet, excited face so near mine. "You haven't a true scientific spirit, Mr. Mathers."

So the other screen was replaced, the power increased, and the glowing, throbbing light spread slowly over the dark shadow. Evenly—too evenly—not a dark spot remained to testify to a single jewel.

"There are no jewels there," the girl said at last, voicing what we had not dared say.

"Open the box," I said. I scarcely recognized my own voice.

"Are you sure it won't explode?" quavered Mather.

"Sure!" and she flashed on him a look of scorn from her beautiful eyes.

I inserted the key—turned it—and threw back the lid.

"Cotton batting!" we exclaimed together.

"That could throw no shadow," she mused.

The cotton was eagerly thrown aside. Then—the box was empty! Exceedingly disappointed, I began to puzzle over the mystery, fingering the cotton as I did so. Suddenly a paper crackled under my fingers. With a half-suppressed exclamation which drew the others to my side, I drew out a paper, which, unfolded, proved to be in my uncle's writing.

"To him who opens this box," it began, "a word of advice. It is useless to search for the jewels—they are gone."

My heart sank, but my darling, leaning over my shoulder in her excitement, said with unfailing courage, "Go on—see if there isn't something left." So I continued.

"I am determined that my fortune—for there is a fortune, though it is not in jewels——"

"There!" she exclaimed, and I felt better.

"'Fortune'"— I hurried on—"'should go to one possessing courage, determination and ingenuity. These you have shown, by succeeding in getting at this paper. So I leave to you the enclosed formula for my improved, super-sensitive dynamite. It is the deadliest discovery ever made, and you will have no trouble in making out of it an immense fortune—even judged by the standard of today—if you have a business head. If not, I advise you to take a partner.

"'I leave this formula to you with but one condition—that you call it by my name. I wish to be remembered as one who helped his fellows—to die.'"

As I raised my eyes from the paper and saw Alice, lips parted, gazing eagerly at me, I had the solitary brilliant inspiration of my life.

"My head doesn't answer the description," I said. "I shall have to find a partner. Alice——"

I always assure her that I could have done it better if I had taken more time—but the result was eminently satisfactory.

I have only to add that my uncle's words are coming true. The dynamite men assure me that there are millions—even more—in that little scrap of paper. But I am sure that nothing better can the dynamite bring me than what proved its first gift—my wife.

"BIG BEN'S" RIVAL.

"Big Ben's" nose is going to be put out of joint by a clock and clock tower which will surmount the new offices, at Liverpool Pier, of the Royal Liver Friendly Society. The tower is to rise about 210 feet from the ground, as compared with Westminster clock tower's 176 feet; and the clock and chimes are to be in proportion. The dial of the clock will be 21 feet across, and will weigh one ton. It is to be illuminated, will be made of gun metal (to withstand the effect of the salt air,) and will have to be cast in ten sections; and this part alone will cost about £3000 to £4000. The whole building will cost over a quarter of a million.

It will occupy a prominent position on the next block to the new Dock Board offices, and the two buildings will present a new and imposing front to the river; much more in keeping with the importance of the "second city of the empire" than the dingy water-shed warehouses which have hitherto greeted the sight of our cousins from across the Atlantic on their arrival at the port of Liverpool.

The new building, like the Dock Board offices, is being erected on the site of a riverside dock, which is being filled in for the purpose.—[Tit-Bits.

THE BARBER THIEF.

"There's a queer and nasty kind of criminal that we call the barber thief," said Lecoq the detective. "He is a journeyman barber who lifts your scarfpin while he is shaving you.

"These rascals have learned somehow or other to shave and hair-cut fairly well. They go everywhere in the rush season—California or Florida in the winter, Atlantic City in the summer, and so on—and there the overworked boss barber, with hands scarce, is only too glad to take them on, and to take them on without references.

"It doesn't take a clever barber thief long to make a good haul. In a day in Saratoga one of these men lifted out of millionaires' and sports' neckties diamonds and pearls to the value of $4000.

She had thought it be an easy matter to give Koto a few "pointers," e even imagined how the girl would take them— g her in her pretty fashion and promising to take vice. But instead of this Koto's face was enig- ; she would not reply. Mabel closed her book sharp snap and crossed the room.

"That don't follow." He was laughing now. He had not given her credit for such shrewdness, yet he perceived she had already guessed of his feelings for Miss Drake.

"My! how nize you are," she said, admiringly. "How good ter me. Lissen to all my grade big trubbles."

The words sounded very tender and loving to the American girl as she crossed the room gracefully, a flush on her face and the cold glint of pride and dislike in her eyes. Koto smiled engagingly at her, and then suddenly remembered that she was sitting perilously near Dudley Stacy, and that the American girl was looking with eyes of deep, undisguised contempt and disgust at the pretty, slender hand that the man had taken in his.

"Koto has been telling me of some of the moral maxims you have been preaching to her, Mabel," he said looking into the girl's keen, appreciative eyes. He let Koto's hand fall from his. "You don't want to make a little prig of her."

The girl was too angry to answer him. She held her head high. The man had not perceived the cause of her anger, and fancied it was only that she was offended at him for interfering. That was one of the delights of his friendship with her—the fact that she so often resented his advising or even dictating to her at times. He enjoyed arguing with her and proving the point. She had a fine, strong, self-reliant nature which could scarcely tolerate dictation, and yet which when it would recognize its master would glory in being governed.

"Koto is such a child, only a little girl, you know," the man continued, "and—well, it's a shame; I wouldn't spoil her individuality. It is charming. Let her talk if she wants to. She declares it is not a Japanese failing—charm, I call it."

Koto was not listening to him. Her attention had been attracted by a new arrival in the room—a tall, fair young man, with a frankly boyish face. He was looking at Koto with fascinated eyes and although the young woman noticed it, she very deliberately turned her head from him.

Mabel ignored Dudley Stacey's remarks altogether.

"Koto, I wouldn't sit on the floor if I were you. There are plenty of chairs."

"Oh, yaes. I did sit on chairs. Thad's nod comf'ble. Me? I lig' sittin' ad Meester Stacy's feed."

"No doubt," the other girl said icily, "but it is a—not pleasant to see people sitting on the floor."

"Let me fetch your stool, Miss Koto?" asked Jack eagerly.

Koto rose to her feet. "I thang you," she said, very politely. "I prefer nod to have thad stool, Meester Jag—no! no! Meester John Leslie Drake."

Jack was so much astonished at the girl's sudden coldness that he spoke outright. "Why, what's the matter, Koto?"

"Madder!" Koto repeated, feigning the most extravagant surprise at the question.

"Yes; you speak as if you were angry with me."

"Oh, no!" she said, with extreme exasperation that she could not be "polite" without being suspected. "Now, whad you thing? I—only freezin' you. Thad's ride in America. Thad's Roman do es Romans do."

She smiled at Stacey, and he laughed outright, but the other two had not yet fully understood.

"What on earth does she mean, Stacy?"

Koto answered, with grave dignity, frowning disapprovingly at Jack's disrespectful allusion to her speech. "Eef you please, Meester John Leslie Drake"—this time she spoke it slowly and impressively—"thad's a secret between jus' Meester Stacy and me."

Stacy shut his mouth in mock approval, as if to say they could not wring it from him. "Yes, sir," he said. "That's a secret between just Koto and myself."

About a week later, Jack Drake joined his sister in her little sitting-room, and throwing himself down on a lounge, looked before him with moody, dissatisfied eyes.

The girl sat before a bright grate fire. She had some embroidery in her hands that she had been working on spasmodically, taking it up energetically one moment and then letting it drop in her lap as her mind wandered from it back to what she was trying so hard to forget. She did not speak for some moments after her brother had come in.

"Mabel, for heaven's sake put that stuff down!" the boy said irritably.

"What's the matter, dear?" she threw the embroidery aside almost with relief, and crossed over to him. Perhaps she guessed the truth from the boy's drawn face, and for a moment forgot her own woes.

"Let me make you some tea," she said, quietly, "and then we can talk."

When they were sipping the tea together the girl said very gently: "Tell me all about it, dear."

"I guess you know all there is to tell," he answered, shortly. "You know that—that——"

"Yes, dear, that you love Koto."

He nodded miserably.

"She don't deserve it." Mabel exclaimed, her eyes flashing.

"She does—that is she did till—till——" again he left his sentence to be finished by his sister.

"You mean till Mr. Dudley Stacy came between you," she added, bitterly.

"Yes; before that—I used to think she really did care for me. I loved her from the first; I couldn't help myself. You know I was always crazy over Japanese things. I used to read your letters from Japan over and over, and when you came back and I saw her—you had told me so much already, I seemed to have cared for her before I saw her, even. And then—well, it's all up with me."

Mabel's eyes were misty. The young man continued: "At first she seemed to—to care for me—never tried to hide it, even. But somehow lately I don't know what's the matter with her. She will scarcely speak to me, and when she does I ask her what's up, she fires all that stuff about 'freezing' and 'Romans' and 'secrets with Stacy.'"

"I wouldn't bother about her, Jack," his sister said, consolingly.

Jack was in an irritable state of mind. "Of course you wouldn't. You don't understand these things, Mabel—never did. It's easy enough for you to advise me not to bother, because you yourself don't know what it is to care for any one. You always were a queer sort of a girl." He looked at her curiously. "You never seemed to care for any fellow. I once thought you cared——"

"Don't Jack!" The girl's voice was passionate with pain, and her eyes were blinded with tears. Her brother sat up on the lounge, watching her.

"It's you who are stupid—that don't understand, or you would have seen—known—that I cared—that I loved him!"

"Sis, who?"

"Dudley Stacy."

The two looked at each other with tragic eyes in silence. Then the girl put her head down on the arm of her chair and began to sob in a hopeless, pitiful fashion; but the brother was too overcome to comfort her.

About a half hour later Dudley Stacy was announced, and soon he had joined them, coming into the sitting-room with the careless familiarity that always characterized his movements when in their house.

"Where's Koto?"

It was the first thing he said, and to the two who had just unburdened their hearts to each other it sounded doubly cruel. Jack gritted his teeth together fiercely, and felt a sudden insane longing to punch Dudley's cool, unconcerned face, as he stood carelessly before the fireplace lighting his cigar. Mabel, however, answered, quite calmly: "She is in her room. Shall I send for her?"

"Ye-es—that is—well, no, wait a bit."

He drew his favorite chair forward, and sat down.

A silence that was constrained to both brother and sister was now between them. Only once the girl lifted her head and looked straight into the man's eyes. His were full of the old, tender solicitude which she fancied was not there of late. Hers unconsciously were dewy, and held a nameless reproach which must have startled him.

He went over to her side, and leaned over the chair. Then he took the embroidery from the busy hands and held them close to his own. "Why, little girl, you have been crying!" he said.

Jack watched him with wrathful eyes, and sprang savagely to his feet. "What's the——" He had snatched his sister's hands from Dudley's, and now challenged him for explanation. The girl was very white, but Dudley Stacy was smiling that strange, enigmatical smile that his friends found so irresistible and fascinating, and, yes, often dreaded. For full a minute the men stood looking at each other in silence, the one questioningly tinged with good humor, the other savagely and angrily. "What do you mean?" the boy asked.

"That's—that's mine and your sister's business."

"Mabel, you don't permit—you——"

"Look here," Dudley Stacy interrupted, good-naturedly. "You must have guessed long before this that—well, that I loved Mabel. She knew it and——" he looked tenderly at the girl——"and I had hoped—had believed that she returned it. I told her of it a year ago. I was to have had my answer today. Perhaps she had forgotten that fact. I had not." His face was full of assurance, and he still held one of the girl's hands in his, despite her brother.

"Of course I didn't intend speaking out before you, young man, and—er—you're a trifle fresh, but I like you, I honestly do, and if it's any balm to your vanity"—he turned gaily to Mabel—"why, we'll ask your consent."

The girl was standing very still. Her face was white and cold, and she was holding her head with the sweet, rebellious pride that Stacy loved so well.

"I am sure I am honored!" She was trying to speak cuttingly, but her voice faltered pitifully in spite of her efforts to control it.

Stacy had grown very pale now. "You don't mean," he said, very slowly, "that—you didn't mean anything—that you were fooling with me? I won't believe that of you."

"But you," Jack put in, witheringly, "what of you and your outrageous flirtation with—with Koto?"

"Koto!" Dudley Stacy began to laugh immoderately.

"Oh! come now; that's too rich. Why you young idiot, I was helping Mabel teach her not to be too familiar with you."

"With Jack?" the girl repeated, blankly.

"Yes; I told her to freeze him, and that she must act like American girls. 'In Rome you must do as the Romans do.'"

"Then you don't care for her," she said, faintly.

"Then she don't care for you?" Jack echoed, stupidly.

Stacy answered the girl. "Why, little girl, of course not. You didn't think that!" He had her hands in his now, and was caressing them unrestrainedly.

"I thought," she said, "that Koto——" She was crying against his shoulder now.

"Koto is 'in luf,' as she calls it, with your brother, Jack."

"What?" said that gentleman.

"I said that Miss Watanabe Koto is waiting to be amused by you in her Japo-American drawing-room—and the secret between——" But Jack did not wait to hear the last words. He had bolted precipitately from the room.

Stacy finished the last words in Mabel's ear. "The secret was we confided in each other our—er—eternal adoration for certain other persons." L. A. K.

Smith College in June.

AN ALUMNA REJOICES AT RECOLLECTION OF COMMENCEMENTS.

By a Special Contributor.

EVERY year sees more California girls in Smith College. They thrive there; and in turn Smith loves their dash and energy. The Smith College Association of Southern California numbers about forty members, and is a great rallying center for Smith spirit on the Pacific Coast.

I went back there myself this June, and found what poor disappointed Ponce de Leon failed to find, the Fountain of Youth. Just a railroad ticket a yard long; an overland journey of four days; a station marked Northampton, Mass.; an elm-fringed street; and Smith, the Fountain of Youth, at the end of it. A fountain of bubbling, glowing radiant youth. If you don't believe me, go back yourself next June; go back and forget your real estate, and the price of meat and potatoes and lose your heart to 1500 queens of beauty.

There are many ways to go back. You may go as a fond parent who has come to see his daughter star in the senior dramatics. Mine came for my commencement. I can see him now swinging across the campus, and bowing to every pretty girl. "But you don't know that one," I remonstrated. "I can't help it," he retorted, "she was so pretty I just had to." He was right. It was the great natural law; old age doffing its cap to beauty.

Then you may go as a class baby. That's an entrancing way. For you are kissed by all your mother's classmates and admired to death. Our own particular class baby was a boy. So he was made cupbearer for our loving cup, and his mother toted them both on for the reunion.

Perhaps you would like to go as the husband of your wife. That's awfully trying. I wouldn't advise it. "I'd murder my husband before I'd bring him back," said Emma, whom we call daughter of the Vikings. "I simply wouldn't have him and the baby lurking around. Just look at Edith with that great hulk of a man always in the way; and what a sissy Nan has."

But the only way is to be an old "grad" or an old 'alum." And, with your arm around your bosom pal, to walk again those soft asphaltum walks and drop in for an ice at Kingsley's. You marvel at the slimness of the girls and the girth of the trees. "Bless me! Was I that slender?" Why, of course, and it wasn't so long ago. But the elms have outdone us all in the waist line. Tree life and girl life, each in its perfection. Girls swarming under the trees; and the trees overtopping the girls and the town.

There's the dear old College "Prexy" to see first. Just to see if he looks like your freshman remembrance of him. Just the same, with the old-fashioned chin whiskers and that high, clean-minded look. Doubtless looking much the same as when he opened his arms to the first student and said: 'Here is Smith College."

And there's John the night watchman. I spied him the night the seniors were having their hoop-rolling. One has not really arrived, and is certainly not in good standing, until John has gripped your hand. I sped over to him. "Hello there, John, you don't remember me, do you?" "Don't remember you," he snorted, "don't remember you! Number 13, Hatfield House; light always burning after 10." "Good, John, you've got a jolly good memory." "And you were the girl that had the night-lunch car come on the campus; and say, do you remember the night you climbed——" "There, that will do. Your memory is not so good." But he continued. "The college has grown lots more fluffy. It's all me and the president can do to keep this horde down. There they go," and he was off after the seniors who were making a dash with their hoops. "They don't run a bit better than we used to," I flung after him.

When you meet a Smith girl, whether she's been out a year or twenty-five years, her first question is: "How was the play?" For the play is the climax of the commencement week. One can't begin to tell about those wonderful dramatic performances, to which great critics and Shakespearean scholars never tire of coming. The long training and ardor and enthusiasm, the love of perfection that goes into them takes them out of the realm of ordinary amateur performances.

It's fun to pick out the fathers of the stars. You can't miss them. But the mothers usually conceal their pride. I sat near a stately father. He turned to his wife: "Just listen to Selma. Did you ever dream the child could do so well? Her voice is wonderful. Now, mamma, dear, I'm going to the other side of the theater to see how she looks from there." I last saw him at the end of the act applauding his Selma. It was his epic moment.

This year they gave "Much Ado About Nothing," a performance of rare excellence, and admirable for its ensemble work. Though perhaps not as remarkable in individual acting as "Hamlet" of last year. Smith in the Northampton Theater is in her element. She takes your ticket, she ushers you to your seat. She is the orchestra. She has probably cut down the trees for the forest scene; she has dyed her own tights.

A wholesome spirit of cöoperation pervades the play. You may try for Shylock and end up content to be clown; or aspire for Portia and finally delight to pull the ropes that work the gondola that carry off Jessica and Lorenzo.

If you like the spectacular and traditional, you'll find that, too. And the singing grows better every year. There's the senior sing out on the students' building steps, where the seniors give up their steps to the juniors; and the dance of the Griffin Green, a [illegible] dance, accompanied by a song about the Griffin Green roaming the campus for bits of knowledge.

Every year the "alums" come back in greater number, and though the president tries to restrain their enthusiasm and says this week belongs to the seniors, still the "alums" do break out into song and startling costumes. They have their innings before the ivy procession, and long before the junior ushers appear with the laurel wreath, great bands of reuning classes go [illegible]ing and cheering across the campus, some in scarlet [illegible] and gowns, others in yellow masks and yellow [illegible]. Mothers of three or four children, doctors, deans of [illegible]versities, Back Bay belles, and slum workers go [illegible]ning about in one great fiesta of the heart.

And there's Glee Club night, the last rite of commencement week. Thousands of lanterns [illegible] through the campus. The townspeople swarm up to the out-of-doors concert and see the fun afterward [illegible] a happy blend of poetry and comedy. If you're a [illegible] you're mighty near the sentimental point, and [illegible] trail after the Glee Club as they wander through the trees. If you're an "alum" you're very tired, but [illegible] are game, and will stick it out until you are [illegible] the campus. The parents go home early, for the [illegible] heavy.

The various reuning classes sit on the steps of the different buildings, flaunting gaily-illuminated [illegible]. One happy bunch was singing "No Wedding Bells for Me," and the nearby steps broke out into "Arrah, [illegible] You're Only Fooling." Over by a mysterious [illegible] candles I saw a group in sublime unconsciousness [illegible] vaudeville stunts.

And now the dew is growing heavier; a gang [illegible] are putting out the lanterns, and still the Glee [illegible] sings. It's an Irish folk song of a wistful [illegible]

HARRIET MORRIS.

A FUNNY LETTER.

A millionaire took a letter from his pocket, a letter written on thin, almost transparent paper.

"This is from a Parisian hotel-keeper," he said, "who wants my son to board with him while studying at the Beaux Arts across the Seine. It's a funny letter. Listen:"

And he read:

"Sir: Last month I had presented to you a project of location with the breakfast and dinner, and the little breakfast morning for the amount of $140 by each month.

"At that you must add, for the perfect comfortable in our hotel, like I had promised that before.

"At first a waiter interested specially at your service.

"Afterward the lightning with the gaz, or with the composition candle, the gaz arrangements should beat our charge.

"The firing with the wood or coals, many electro piles drivers that shall communicates with the kitchen.

"In this manner you shall have all the accommodations of the life of Paris.

"I give the liberty or franchise to tell you that at our ordinary at in each repast with a good plain cooking you shall encounter round you many young gentlemens wich speak the most pure French.

"This is, in my opinion, very favorable.

"In our hotel you shall have all the best cares in the best particular.

"I inform you of all things because I have seen in you together the good manners that have marked proverbial our urbanity and eloquency French.

"I repeat you, than our most large desire is for your life very agreeable about we."

A GOOD JOB.

"THE late Andrew McNally, of our well-known publishing firm, once had occasion," said a Chicago lawyer, "to consult me about an infringed copyright. Mr. McNally said he thought there would be no trouble about correcting this infringement. The thing, he believed, had been innocently done. The man who had done it was an amateur in publishing—unsophisticated—like a girl his father used to tell about in Ireland.

"This girl was the daughter of a poor man, and every week or so she used to come to the village rectory with a pheasant or a hare to sell. The price she asked was low, and for a time the pastor bought of her. Then, somehow, his suspicions were aroused. The next time the girl called, he said to her sternly:

"'It is good, fresh game you bring, my dear, and your price is always reasonable; but do you come by all these pheasants and hares honestly?'

"'Oh, shure, yes, your reverence,' said the young girl. 'My father is poacher to Lord Clare.'"

BUT NOT HIS.

NOTHING suited old Abe Jenkins (or, Uncle Abe, as we boys called him) better, after his day's work, than to sit in his cosy nook by the kitchen fire and smoke his old corn-cob. His wife, on the other hand, liked excitement, and would take in anything and everything from a funeral to a patent-medicine show on the street corner. On one occasion, however, the old lady succeeded in persuading Uncle Abe to go with her to see a phrenologist, whose clever advertising even interested old Abe a little. The old couple, arriving a little late, were ushered up into the front row. Much to the amusement of the crowd, and especially Mrs. Jenkins, Uncle Abe was chosen as a subject for the professor to experiment on.

"And now," said the phrenologist, "Mr. Jenkins, among many physical discomforts, you are troubled with cold feet also——"

"Yes!" yelled Uncle Abe, looking toward the front row; "but they are not my own."—[Judge's Library.

A Completed Storiette.

HOW MAX PROVED HIMSELF TO BE MASTER OF SITUATION.

By a Special Contributor.

THERE was no use talking, Max was positively giving me the fidgets, sprawled out on the seat in front of me, watching the trees fly past, his eyes half shut, his fingers drumming, drumming on the car window. I simply can't stand a lazy man, especially when there's six feet two of him. Upon occasion, a lazy little man can disport himself picturesquely, but Max——

I put down my magazine and glared at him vindictively. Not for very long, though. Max has a most disconcerting way of suddenly arising to the occasion, and outglaring one most effectively, without glaring himself. Of course I blushed till it hurt the back of my neck, and dove into my magazine with undignified haste. I hate gray eyes, anyhow.

"Well, my Lady Disdain, and what is it now?" (That's one of the most abominable things about Max—his drawl. It's as irritating to me as the escape valve on the steam radiator is to him.) "Is it my inches, my attitude, or the fact that I 'could do anything on earth I want to, and don't do anything but spend my money and break athletic records?'" he quoted mockingly.

Of course I couldn't lower my dignity by returning him an inadequate reply, so I continued my reading with really absorbing interest. I'd opened up to the page which sets forth the virtues of Ostermoor mattresses, but it did very nicely. I like the picture of the distressed lady trying to put six feet of elastic expansion into one foot of mattress.

"Mary, Mary, quite contrary," hummed Max. "We're pretty close to the long tunnel now. It's fifteen minutes long, upgrade, and a bad draft. Beastly hole. They ought to put on a couple of extra engines and rush us through."

"Yes?" I assented, with what I considered beautiful indifference. Max knows I confess to a secret terror of tunnels—wherefore the indifference. But nevertheless I couldn't help shivering a little when I caught sight of the black motuh which the mountain ahead opened up, just as we rounded a bend in the road. Some way, there's such an awful lot on top of you, going through a tunnel, and fifteen minutes is—well, fifteen minutes.

"Why don't they, then?" I inquired presently.

Max raised his eyebrows. "Why don't they what?" he demanded, somewhat impolitely, I thought. Max certainly doesn't possess a psychological mind, or he could easily have followed up my train of thought.

"Oh, put on extra engines? Well, you see, when I was——"

He stopped short, rather abruptly, I thought, but the funny little porter with the grizzly hair was lighting the lamps and shutting the ventilators, and I may have been mistaken—a gray-haired darky is unreasonably fascinating to me. He called me "chile," and took Max and me for a bride and groom. Perhaps that's why I was so interested in the magazines, in the first place. Max said I didn't show much strength of character, or I would have borne up under it as gracefully as he did. Provoking thing!

Suddenly, with a rush and a roar, we plunged into the tunnel. Involuntarily I shrank away from the quick blackness. It seemed pressing through the very glass itself, straight in upon me.

Max stopped drumming on the pane long enough to stifle a yawn.

"Do settle down and be comfortable, Molly. Fifteen minutes is the deuce of a time to spend sitting all hunched up like a scared rabbit."

The words in themselves were trivial, but suddenly a great anger flamed up in me against the man opposite. My eyes traveled quickly over his well-groomed figure, and rested a scornful moment on his tanned, handsome face. I seemed to resent equally, with a resentment I realized to be absurd, the dandified immaculateness of his dress and the lines of strength in his face—lines which had so far meant little to me. I found myself rebelling furiously against his lazy inaction, his good-natural badinage.

"Max," I declared contemptuously, "do you know, I get awfully tired sometimes of seeing you always so clean and well-kept—and lazy and shiftless? It seems a pity that you—that you——"

I faltered and stopped short. The gray eyes suddenly levelled upon me, gleamed quickly and as quickly dropped again. I felt as if I had been unexpectedly accused of stealing cherries and couldn't conceal the pits.

Max laughed and shifted his position. I breathed more easily. "Come, out with it—what is it that's such a pity? I'm not comfortable now, at least. Come, 'fess up, Molly mine, isn't it a part of this idealistic conception of yours that the true 'man of action' shall never be either comfortable or—well, we'll say, respectably clothed?"

I bit my lip hard, and reached for my magazine, which had slipped to the floor. If I could only say the cutting things to Max that I think of afterward! He stooped quickly and put the gayly-covered entertainer into my hands. I plunged blindly into the middle of an idiotic story of a cowboy, a horse and a girl.

"Molly," broke in the drawling voice, "you know those lights will ruin your eyes, and I'll warrant you've read every one of those sentimental love stories twice over. Put them down and talk to me."

I turned over another leaf; in fact, I accidentally turned two; but the situation between the cowboy, the horse and the girl seemed to be still unaltered.

I felt Max regarding me critically.

"No, you couldn't wear eyeglasses—you haven't enough nose, and spectacles and curly hair are not to be tolerated for a moment. Even a little dog and a string are out of the question. Put it down, Molly, and on my honor I'll make it worth your while. How would a storiette drawn from the life of Max Norton, Junior, do as a substitute? Now, don't tell me that doesn't appeal to your sense of the romantic, a bit of life history in the form of a confession, told in the heart of a tunnel."

I tried desperately to go on with my reading, but a ring of earnestness in the teasing voice held me in spite of myself. Suppose he were going to tell me something about himself, which I would be sorry not to have heard! I struggled a few more moments, then curiosity triumphed. Without raising my eyes from my book, I remarked reluctantly:

"Well, go on; I am listening."

I knew his eyes were twinkling, and I blushed again, and wanted to kick the seat very hard. His voice, however, was quite sober.

"That shows a much better spirit. But you must really put it down and look at me, Molly. This is a very serious matter. It may even affect your ideal of the man of action."

I lowered my book.

"There, that's better. Now listen. I've never told you about it, but before Uncle Ned died and left me his money; before I went to college to break athletic records; before even I met you, Molly, I did things! I—in fact, I was——"

The train stopped with a vicious jolt. I pitched forward in an undignified heap upon the floor, then scrambled to my feet, clutching desperately at the arm which Max extended.

"What has happened?" I gasped, peering out into the blackness without, startled and shaken.

Max reseated himself. He fell unconsciously into the listless attitude of a moment before.

"Sit down, Molly," he protested. "There's nothing the matter. This is upgrade, and—er—why, you know, they often stop this way upgrade."

I sank back on my seat, only half satisfied. All of my fears of the unknown terrors to be encountered in a tunnel arose once more to my mind. I stared nervously out of the window. I thought again of the huge mountain piled up over our heads.

"But isn't it dangerous to stop in a tunnel, and didn't you say the draft was bad in this one?" I persisted.

Max shrugged his shoulders resignedly, but did not reply. Three minutes went by in silence. Four. One by one, the traveling men at the end of the car had departed—in the manner of traveling men, to investigate. The only other woman besides myself rose hastily and followed them, in search of her boy who had gone to visit a playmate in the next car.

The silence grew oppressive. The car was becoming close and hot. I felt as if a breath were impossible.

"Max," I quavered, "isn't the air dreadfully bad?"

"Bad! How ridiculous! We could stay in here an hour longer and never know we were within a mile of a tunnel," he scoffed.

But presently a slight pucker of anxiety appeared between his eyebrows, and in a moment he too began staring out into the darkness of the tunnel. For five minutes longer we strained our ears for sounds from the front of the train. Ours was the last car.

Something seemed to be gripping at my throat. I leaned forward suddenly.

"Max, I'm frightened!"

He got up lazily.

"Keep your nerve up, Molly. I'll get you a glass of water. There's nothing wrong, I tell you."

He strolled down the aisle to the end of the car, and returned with a small tin traveling cup.

I stretched out my hand to take it, and then—the conductor threw open the door and stood peering the length of the almost empty car. The lantern in his hand threw up a greenish tinge on his white face. He glanced quickly about him. I was the only woman in sight, and this was the last car.

"Is there any one in here who can run an engine?" he shouted. "The engineer and fireman have both been laid out by the gas. A fellow in the car back has volunteered to fire. Ten minutes more of this will smother us all."

Max set the cup carefully down upon the window sill and stepped out into the aisle.

"I am an engineer," he said quietly.

They turned and hurried to the door. I stood quite still, and watched them go. I felt oddly satisfied and pleased, and no longer frightened. The door slammed.

I think I sank down upon the seat and clapped my hands softly. It was all so like a play!

When the train slowed down outside the tunnel, it was I who sprang to the ground first of all the passengers, assisted by the old darky, still gray from his recent fright. Hatless and excited, I raced the length of the cars to the engine. Would Max be all right? What if he had shared the fate of the engineer and fireman?

A man was climbing slowly from the cab. His face was covered with a mask of grease and soot. He wore a dilapidated jeans jacket and carrieed an oil can in one hand.

I rushed up to him.

"Where is Mr. Norton?" I demanded. "Is he all right?"

The man turned and grinned cheerfully down at me. His teeth gleamed white in the soot of his face.

"Max!" I cried.

He stooped beside the engine, flourishing his oil can. "I'm going to take the train on to Leavenworth," he said proudly. "I promised you a storiette, Molly, and it must be finished."

"There's one thing I never do," said Tete de Veau. "I never turn round in the street and stare after a pretty girl."

L'Oignon looked up from his oysters in amazement.

"What!" he exclaimed. "Doesn't your wife ever let you go out alone?"

The Law and the Lover.

HOW THE SHERIFF EMERGED FROM A PAINFUL PREDICAMENT.

By a Special Contributor.

THE 'dobe station, a section-house, a small spring filtering through the arroyo, on whose banks grow a few stunted trees, the "yards" and a dozen houses—these are Caliente. Through it runs a long ribbon of glistening steel, which links it with creation, and gives it excuse for being.

Caliente is designated in rather black letters on the railroad folder, but that only signifies that it is of importance in comparison with most of the stations on the line; they are composed chiefly of signboards nailed to telegraph posts, with occasionally a lonely siding wandering away into the sage brush and cacti. Caliente also has all these in plenty; but principally, there is the spring, a rarity invaluable. And it has a lunch counter.

In fact, the spring and the lunch counter may be said to be the reason for Caliente; at least, for the metropolitan character it possesses in comparison with its neighbors. For passengers on the Overland must dine, and trains pass Caliente at noon; also, they and the cars must have water, and Caliente has the spring. The combination was as inevitable as fate; there had to be a town, possessing these features; Caliente had the features; ergo, Caliente was and is that town—such as it is.

Where there is a lunch counter, must be a girl to attend it. Hence, Polly.

Polly came from "the East." Vague? No one in Caliente questioned the antecedents of any one else; it wasn't healthy. Every one came either from "the East" or from "the coast;" nothing could possibly have originated in Caliente but alkali and trouble. Even the appurtenances of the lunch counter, the hard-boiled eggs, the sandwiches, the pies and the paper napkins, were shipped up from San Bernardino, which was the last city in God's country, before you struck the desert eastbound. Properly, possibly, Polly should have originated where her stock in trade did; most of her predecessors had come from Southern California or thereabouts. Maybe that is why their stay had always been so brief; they were used to the unbroken sunshine and luxuriant beauty of this perpetual summer, and the changeless gray of the desert palled on them.

Why Polly stood it so long, no one knew. But she had been in Caliente for more than a year, now, and up to date, no one had heard her complain. True, she looked a bit droopy and faded to the easterners who passed on the trains, and from the California viewpoint, she was in need of the ozone of the sea, but the townspeople, what few there were, saw no especial fault in her looks or demeanor. She continued to deal out coffee and "sinkers," sandwiches and pie, to the hungry hordes of the Overland's bringing every day, with skilled and easy hand; no crowd was too great for her to manage or too rough for her to cow. She had a small breakfast and supper trade among the inhabitants, and she and Mrs. Maginnis, who kept the section house, were good friends, as should be the only women in a community, though she, being eastern, never could abide Yee Wong, who ran the commissary car in the repair way train. Thus things had moved in the even tenor of their way for some months, and so far as surface indications went, they seemed likely to go on so, indefinitely.

But Polly knew otherwise; she had known it for some time, in fact. The end of it all was coming, she felt sure, and it couldn't be very far off. The only question in her mind was, which end?

Yes, there were two, Frank Marsh, the agent at Vegas, half a day's run to the west, and big Bill Tampton, Sheriff of the county, whose normal habitat was Caliente, but whose office and real home were in the saddle, out on the broad upland waste, where he was most needed. Frank Marsh was eastern; thin, shrewd and secretive. He came over to Caliente Sundays, on the Overland, stayed till midnight, and caught the Limited back. Bill Tampton was western; fat, rotund, almost globular; easy-going, fun-loving, and jocular. He rode in whenever his duties permitted, and stayed as long as peace reigned or until another lawbreaker demanded attention, which might be anywhere from ten minutes to half a day. He never came on Sundays; there was too much doing elsewhere then. Thus, singularly enough, though each man knew the other, they had never met in Polly's bailiwick. But Polly knew that both cared for her; also, that some day she would have to make a decision between them. Woman-like, she put this off as long as she could; the one problem of her life was as to which man she had given her real love.

"You see," she told Mrs. Maginnis—for she had to make a confidante of some one—"you see, I like them both, ever so much, and they are so different."

"Av coorse ye doo, darlint," was the sympathetic reply, "av coorse."

"And they both like me," blushing prettily.

"How c'u'd they hilp ut? Don't all av us?" beamed the matronly Irish soul, with a smile as warm as the day outside—and that would have been 110 in the shade, had there been any shade, which there wasn't.

"But some day, they'll ask me, and then I'll have to say 'yes' to one and 'no' to the other. And heaven only knows how I'm to decide which I'll say which to."

"They're both fine, b'yes, both av 'em. 'Tis a har-rd worrld."

Which, being Mrs. Maginnis's usual expression, conveyed neither comfort nor meaning whatever. So that Polly was thrown back upon her old expedient—holding both men back from becoming too ardent, while she settled their status in her own mind.

But there are three Fates, remember: one spins, and one wields the distaff, and they are fair enough; but one, old and ugly and shrewish, she handles the shears and snips the thread. And it is her delight to cut the line of life just when it makes the most trouble for all concerned. The old hag was in a particularly mean mood this very day, and in manipulating her scissors, she severed at one slash the cords of all three of these young people—and what a tangle ensued.

Marsh's thread broke first. Polly's astonishment may be imagined, therefore, when, it being only Tuesday, Marsh entered her little café just after No. 2 started east with full-fed passengers. No. 1, westbound, was two hours late, and she had counted on a siesta meanwhile. But Marsh, on Tuesday!

"Why, Frank," began Polly.

"Ssh!" came the warning; "any one else here?"

"No; No. 2 has just gone, and No. 1 is two hours late."

"Yes, I came up on No. 2. I mean, any of the town folks about?"

"No, Frank. But I don't understand——"

"Where's th' Sheriff?"

"He started over toward Vegas early this morning, on the trail of a thief, I heard."

"Cattle rustler, I s'pose?"

"No, some one stole some money, I think; I didn't learn just what it was."

"Sure he isn't back yet?"

"Yes, he wasn't on that train so he must be coming back on his horse, and he hasn't had time for that, yet. Besides, he'd be in here for his coffee, if he'd returned; he likes my coffee."

Marsh overlooked the sally.

"Polly," he said, seriously, almost hoarsely, "Polly, I'm going to leave Vegas——"

"Leave Vegas?" she interposed, almost with affright.

"Yes, Polly; in fact, I have left. I resigned by wire today—yesterday—and the night man is in charge. I'm going to Los Angeles, Polly, right away."

"Oh, I'm so sorry," Polly began.

"It's all right, Polly," the man continued, in a hesitating sort of way. "You see, I'm tired of all this. There's no use foolin' away time out here on this desert, where a man's got no show. I'm goin' to the city, and make a place for myself, where I'm not haunted by sage brush and cactus and alkali. And, Polly, dear, I want you to go along."

"Me? To go along? Why, Frank, I don't quite understand."

"Yes, Polly, I want you to go along—as Mrs. Marsh. You know I love you, Polly; you must have known that for a long time. I've waited and waited to tell you, till I could see my way clear to have you somewhere besides this accursed desert, and now it's come. I've money enough now to take us to Los Angeles, $2000 in cash, Polly. That'll carry us through; and there I can find better things to do than hammering a key all day in a 'dobe. We couldn't marry and live in this Godforsaken region; Vegas is worse'n Caliente, and I'd never feel safe leaving you there. Besides, this is no fit place for an eastern girl; you can't last much longer if you persist in stayin' here. An' I love you, Polly girl, better'n life. Won't you say 'yes' an' come with me?"

The torrent of his words almost overwhelmed Polly; she could neither interrupt nor reply. Her heart beat, oh, so fast! and the red blood mantled her cheeks; her eyes filled with involuntary tears, and her bosom heaved with her newly-awakened emotions. She stood looking into his straining eyes, quite ignoring his outstretched arms, but she swayed like a reed in a breeze, and every instant she seemed to lean farther toward him.

"Will you, Polly?" he asked, almost in a whisper.

Then old Madame Fate snipped another thread, and the clatter of hoofs outside ceased, as the raucous voice of Sheriff Bill hurtled across the palpitating air:

"Whoa! You black-limbed son of hell; why don't you stand when I tell you? Whoa!"

Marsh went pale and shivered like an aspen.

"Sheriff Bill," whispered Polly, the spell of love still upon her.

"God! He mustn't see me here," exclaimed Marsh.

"No," said Polly, blushing: "I don't think it would be wise."

"It would be deadly for one of us," said Marsh, as he shifted his gun toward his thigh.

"Not that!" the girl exclaimed, "not that, here! He won't stay long. You must hide. Here!"

And she pushed him into the little alcove back of the coffee urn, behind the curtain which hung over her white serving aprons and caps. "Stay there!" she whispered, just as the Sheriff entered the little room.

Big Bill strode in, flapping his sombrero against his chest, and slapping his quirt against his "chaps," from whence poured a fine cloud of white dust. He strode—rolled, rather—directly to Polly's side.

"Hello, Poll!" he rumbled; "how's th' girl?"

"Hot, tired and worried, Bill," was the drooping answer, as the red in her hot cheeks surged up anew.

"Oh, jolly up, girlie, it ain't that bad," was the cheery reply. "Got any eatin's?

Polly stepped behind the counter, and began to enumerate her wares.

"Hot coffee?"

"Sure; two cups.

"Doughnuts?"

"No sinkers; ain't ready t' die yet."

"Now, Bill," came warningly.

"'Pologize!"

"Pie?"

"Like mother uster make?"

"Better."

"Half an apple an' half a peach."

"No peach, Bill. Cranberry today."

"Think ye're peach enough, do ye? Ha! Ha!" And the laugh that ensued was like the roar of a lion in a cellar. "Well, you're right there, Poll. You are a peach; no gettin' 'round that. Nobody knows that better'n I do."

"Don't joke, Bill; I'm not in the humor for it today."

"But I'm not jokin', Polly, girl," said the big Sheriff, as she looked earnestly at him. "Truly, Polly, I ain't. But I never seem t' be able t' convince you otherwise. Polly, girl, don't you see that I'm in earnest—deadly earnest? Don't you understand that I love you—every bit of ye? I'm not jokin' there; I'm in love with ye, and have been ever since yer pretty face first showed up in this forsakin place. I can't tell you all this in po'try, like a feller ought, but that don't make it none th' less true, Poll. Say, girlie, don't you think you could take me serious once, an' see how my heart beats fer you alone?"

The Sheriff was down off his high stool now, and was leaning well across the counter—as far as his ample girth would permit—holding both the girl's hands in his own. His blue eyes were fixed on hers, but she dropped her lids, and he got no glimpse of the conflict raging in her soul. That's why he went on, not waiting for her reply, not knowing that he had already pleaded his cause with the best of them:

"I've noticed ye fallin' somewhat this summer. It's too hot for ye here. If you'll marry me, we'll go down t' Los Angeles and live for a while, anyhow, till ye get stronger. I got money enough; I been savin' up fer this, an' I've 'most a couple o' thousand in my belt now. Polly, girl, say 'yes,' an' we'll go tomorrow, an' be married this afternoon."

The grip on Polly's hands tightened, but still she did not move, though her breath came in long shudders, and her cheeks glowed. Thus they stood for what seemed hours to Bill, before she finally spoke.

"I don't know, Bill," she said, slowly; "it's a hard position for a girl. If I could have you both——"

The Sheriff dropped the hands he held and stood erect.

"Both?" he echoed. "Both? What both?"

Polly started; that was where her thread snapped. She trembled all over.

"Oh, what have I said?" she whispered, almost in awe.

"You said 'both;' that means there's two of us. Who's th' other?" came from Bill, almost fiercely. "Tell me who he is."

"Frank Marsh," came the shuddering reply.

"Frank Marsh? From Vegas? Frank Marsh?"

"Yes, Bill; Frank Marsh, from Vegas. He also asked me to marry him——"

"Frank Marsh? Surely not him?"

"Yes, Bill; Frank Marsh, from Vegas. Why not?"

"Th' scoundrel! Him? Polly, not him?"

"Yes, Bill; don't you understand?"

"No, I don't, Polly; I can't seem t' get right on it. Frank Marsh! Why, he ain't fittin' t' untie your shoe, let alone woo you. Why, girl——" and the Sheriff went quite speechless in his agitation.

"Bill," said Polly, in an ominously quiet voice, "I can quite understand that men who are rivals should not love each other as devotedly as they might under other circumstances. But I don't see what call you have to call Mr. Marsh a scoundrel, and say such things about him as you do. Will you explain?"

"Explain? Hell! he ain't worth explainin'. I tell you, Frank Marsh is a hypocrite, a thief, a dog——"

"Hush!" The girl's voice fairly rang with her indignation. "Bill, you are a coward, a sneak, an ingrate, to attack a man in that fashion, just because he loves the girl you say you do. Let me tell you right here and now, that no one can be my friend and speak that way of my affianced husband!"

"Your—your what?"

"My affianced husband! Oh, it wasn't settled, two minutes ago, though Frank had asked me before you did. But it's all settled now; I'd marry him if I had to ask him myself, after what you said! We will leave here on No. 1, which is due now in fifty minutes, and will wire for the parson at Vegas to marry us when we sidetrack there for the Limited. And you can stand on the platform and see us depart, if you think it will add anything to your ugly disposition, for Frank is here now, and I am going over to get my clothes from Mrs. Maginnis, to be ready to leave with him. That's about all the words I want to waste on you, I think, today!"

And Polly swept through the open door with the manner and bearing of a queen.

For one long minute, Sheriff Bill was too astonished to think. Then, the cogs in his brain began to work again, and, strangely enough, it was the machinery of the law that impressed the first idea upon his returning intelligence:

"Frank Marsh here now. She said that; then he must be in town. He can't be anywhere about the shacks, for I looked in every one of 'em. He couldn't have come in since I've been here, or I'd 'a' seen him. He must 'a' been here all the time. Where?"

Then his eyes, sweeping the little room, hung on the black curtain across the tiny alcove, and rested there. Folding his arms across his ample chest, the Sheriff bellowed:

"Frank Marsh, come out o' that corner!"

The curtain swayed and parted, and Marsh stepped forth, gun in hand.

"Don't move, Sheriff, and put up your hands," said he, tensely, though his own hand trembled. "I've got the drop on you."

"Stow yer hardware, boy," was the officer's cool reply; "this ain't no shootin' game."

Marsh lowered the gun, half-shamefaced, and stood waiting.

"You're shy $2000 down at Vegas," said Bill, slowly.

"Yes," came from Marsh, almost defiantly.

"Took from a express package yest'd'y, huh?"

"Yes."

"Wha'd you do it for?"

"I needed the coin, of course; what did you think?"

"Poker?"

Marsh shook his head

"Never play."

Again the negative sign.

"Don't drink."

"Then it must be wimmin. That's all that's left. Where'd y' expect t' find any wimmin in this Godforgotten region, 'ceptin' Polly?"

"You've guessed; Polly."

The red face of the big Sheriff went white in a minute, and his hand rested on his own weapon.

"Frank Marsh," said he, and the words came like the cut of a knife, "if ever you harm a hair o' that girl's head—if ever you mention a dishonorable word to that young lady——"

"Don't worry," interrupted the other man, "I know. I heard you, but you weren't here when I made my talk, or you wouldn't speak so. I stole that money so's to have enough to marry Polly on. We're goin' to hike for Los Angeles on No. 1, an' then I'm goin' to work like an honest man. When I can pay that back——"

"When you can, eh?" The big Sheriff snorted. "If you think you can jump this region with a $2000 debt o' that sort hangin' over you, and get t' Los Angeles untouched? What'm I here for?"

"I had it cinched till you came. The parson's down at Vegas, and we would 'a' been married while No. 1 was waiting for the Limited there. I don't know what would 'a' happened much, after that; I'm desperate, and taking big chances, but for Polly's sake, I'd risk anything."

"For Polly's sake—yes; that's just why I'm standin' here palaverin' with you, 'stead of arrestin' you, accordin' t' my sworn duty. For Polly's sake? Frank Marsh, you ain't worthy of Polly, nor any other good girl, an' you know it. You're a common thief, an' it's my duty t' arrest you and jail you, without fear nor favor."

"But you won't! I've the drop on you, Sheriff!"

"An' you'd add murder t' your other crime, would ye? For Polly's sake, too, eh? You must think a lot o' Polly, you must!"

Something of the sneer in the voice of Bill seemed to go straight through the other man. His lips quivered, even as his gun again dropped; he looked at the big man even as a licked dog grovels at the feet of his master. For more than a minute, he stood thus; then, all the bravado oozed out of him; he threw the gun on the table, extended both hands toward the officer, and the tears filled his eyes, as he muttered:

"You're right, Bill. Put on the bracelets. I see it differently now. Only a man that's clean dare come to Polly, an' I'm a common thief. It never struck me that way till now; I know 'twas wrong, but I thought it could be made all right, an' she need never know. But it's all off now. You win. I'm your prisoner."

Bill stood a moment in silence. Then he asked:

"You got that money with you?"

Marsh silently extended a roll of bills.

"That's it; I haven't touched it yet."

Bill put it in his pocket; then he asked again:

"Outside o' this—incident, have you a clean bill o' health?"

"Yes, Bill; I swear t' God, my record's clean otherwise. But what's that got t' do with this case? This means the pen. Only get me out o' here, Bill, before Poll comes; I can't face her, for we love each other more'n you can conceive."

"You think so?"

"Yes, Bill; I know it. I've been comin' over here Sundays for a long time now, an' I know it. If you knew what love is——"

"Presumin' I don't, eh? You ain't a good listener, evidently. But I do, just the same; I know what lovin' Polly means, young feller, for I love Poll myself. An' it's just because I do that I'm now about t' vi'late my oath, an' do for her—for her, mind ye—what I never done for no livin' creature.

"Now, let's get down t' cases, Frank Marsh. We both love Polly, an' we've both told her so. Did she answer you, 'fore I broke in on th' scene? Or previous?"

"No; she was about to, when you came."

"Good! Then it's a fair field, an' no favors. Now, you stole that $2000, t' marry Polly on; it was a punk thing t' do, but I reco'nize your intentions was good, an' as you've turned it back, I ain't disposed t' do any more'n return it, with some such likely story that I found it, where th' escapin' thief dropped it——"

"Bill, you're not goin' to do that?"

"For Polly's sake, young 'un, remember that! An' that squares the company. Now, here comes th' other horn o' this dilemma: Providin' you an' Poll ties up, you got t' have money t' get t' Los Angeles on. I've got $1500 here in my belt, which I propose t' lend you——"

"Bill! You don't mean——"

"Shut up! Don't I love Polly, too? 'Sides, if she takes me, you won't need it. But if she doesn't—an' from what she said, I reckon I'm doomed t' be a bachelor some days t' come—then you'll take my money, as a loan, till y' get enough t' pay it back. That'll get you down there, all right, I reckon."

"No, I won't!" The manhood in Marsh flared up in a moment. "I'll take my freedom from you, because it would hurt Poll almost as much as it would me, if I didn't. But I'll be danged if I'll be your debtor for a red cent."

"Oh, yes, you will; th' money goes with th' freedom; it's both or neither. D'ye think I'm goin' t' see th' girl I love go hungry because you're too tender-hided t' accept a loan from a gentleman? You take that money, or go t' jail."

The voice of Polly floated in from the region of the section house.

"All right, Mrs. Maginnis; I'll send for my trunk when I get there. And you'll look after the lunch counter for a day or two, won't you, till they get another girl? Good-by! There's No. 1 now whistling for the crossing."

Then, a few moments after the two men, Polly stepped into the little room, suit case in hand.

"All ready, Frank," she laughed; "where do we meet the parson?" Then, seeing Bill and Marsh together, with the latter's gun still drawn, she exclaimed: "Having trouble keeping the big brute quiet? Put up the gun, Frank; he won't bite."

Marsh slowly turned from the Sheriff, replaced his weapon in its sheath, and relieved the girl of the suit case.

"That's th' train, Poll. said he, "are you going with me, or with Bill?"

"That?" said Polly, scornfully. "Hardly! And would I have that——" pointing to the suit case——"if I were not going with you? Come on; she won't stop for lunch today; she's too late

The thunder of the train drowned any further words; then the hiss of the air brakes told of her brief stop. Frank Marsh took the girl's arm, and gave one last glance, that embraced gratitude, pity and deep regard, toward the Sheriff, who still stood, money tightly clasped in hand, behind them. Then, he helped Polly mount the steps of the last car.

"Good-by, Bill," he said, extending his hand.

"Be good, Frank," was the reply.

Polly stopped in wonder. Bill saw his chance.

"Beg pardon, ma'am," said he, sweeping the ground with his sombrero, "but yer husband t' be is awful careless. Here's his roll, that he jest dropped. I reckon you'd better keep it fer him."

Poll took the money, with a smile.

"Good-by, Bill; and thank you," was his reward, as the train pulled out and down the yards.

And Mrs. Maginnis, who hastened over to take charge of the deserted lunch room, heard him mutter, as the last car disappeared in a cloud of dust:

"Oh, hell! Nobody ever loved a fat man!"

Where Garibaldi Died.

A VISIT TO THE OLD HOMESTEAD ON CAPRERA.

From Detroit News Tribune.

CAPRERA (Italy) Sept. 17.—The small rocky island of Caprera, lying off the coast of Corsica, is a sacred spot to Italian patriotism. It is here that the hero, Guiseppe Garibaldi, spent various periods of his dramatic life, where he ended his last days, and where repose his remains, under a huge granite boulder, rude monument symbolic of the rugged character of the man who achieved the unity of Italy.

Garibaldi, in the course of his wandering exile's life, first saw Caprera in 1849. Five years later, on returning to Europe from South America, he again came hither, buying from an English subject, Collins, for $1200, a strip of land, on which he lived, like a Robinson Crusoe, in a hut, sustaining himself on the fish of the neighboring waters. Later he cut down timber on the isle, and, taking a load of it to Marseilles, exchanged it for building material, with which he constructed the present homestead of the Garibaldi family at Caprera. It was from here that, kept a prisoner and watched over by a man-of-war, Garibaldi, one stormy night in October, 1867, escaped in a boat to the ship Beccaccino to renew his struggles against the pontifical power. Returning again to the island, after resigning his command of the army of the Vosges, the hero did not again desert it until his death.

Starting from Leghorn on the small boat Elba, crowded with old red-shirted Garibaldi veterans and other devout pilgrims, one passes on the ten-hour journey to Caprera various small islands, including Gorgona and Capraia, jutting rocks, mostly famous for having figured in the invective of Dante, who wished that they might be transferred to the mouth of the Arno, there to stem up its flood so that the poet's compatriots of Florence might be drowned. Further looms up Elba, largest of the Tuscan archipelago, and home also of another hero in the days of his humiliation and retreat.

The proximity of the two isles suggests comparison between the two heroes that occupied them. Both were prisoners in their respective habitations: Napoleon at Elba after having been forcibly made to abdicate a throne; Garibaldi after the battle of Mentana. Napoleon employed his days at Elba in petty reviews of the small army that the allied powers presented him as a toy, reigning in a mock court graced by his sister Paulina. Garibaldi spent his time in agricultural pursuits, meditating on his country's welfare until the cause of Italian liberty once more called him to the field. In Caprera Garibaldi learned to love the ideal of international humanity, that Napoleon, on the contrary, plotted to destroy. It is indeed not alone to Italy that Caprera is sacred; it deserves to be honored by all who revere the spirit of patriotism.

Caprera lies in the Strait of Bonifacio, between Sardinia and Corsica. From the east it stands forth boldly like a high and useless wall. From the west it shows a side densely clothed with myrtle and lentisk, dropping rapidly from skyline to sea level. Near by, and connected with it by an artificial isthmus, is the island of La Maddalena, the cherished harbor of Nelson's fleet during the French blockade; now one of Italy's strategic points, where one sees fort and arsenal and a harbor filled with men-of-war, their gay flags waving in the breeze.

On landing, which is inaugurated by the singing of Garibaldi hymns by Italian patriots, one goes directly to the house of the hero. On the trip the now notorious quarrel between the descendants of Garibaldi has been the subject of excited controversy. Some take the part of Ricotti, only son of the hero by his first wife, Annita, who presumed to remove from its position, near the monument of the hero, the tomb of his stepbrother, Manlio. Others side with Donna Francesca, second spouse of Garibaldi, who, considering that the remains of her son had been desecrated, appealed to the King of Italy to sustain her in her position.

The feud, fostered by partisanship, has reached the acme of bitterness. The Garibaldi homestead is literally a house divided against itself. Donna Francesca and her daughter Clelia occupy one part of the house; Ricotti Garibaldi and his family the other. Neither family will relinquish the possession of the property to the other, and each undertakes to play the host to the stream of visitors that pours thither in honor of the centenary of the hero's birth. With communicating doors walled up, each occupies a rival camp, as it were, under the same roof. The situation is an odd one, considering that the head of this discordant family devoted his life to the unity of his native land and the principles of fraternity.

The house, commanding a fine view of the sea, not far from the shore, is the nucleus of the one constructed by Garibaldi himself. It is a white, unpretentious-looking structure, one story in height, its flat roof ornamented with a belvedere. One of the added wings is used as a caserne for the guard of honor allowed the family and supplied by the military station of La Maddalena.

One's first visit is to Donna Francesca, who occupies the western side of the house with its little garden. Donna Francesca, a not very engaging matron of the peasant class, obligingly signs post cards and displays the seaward-looking chamber where the hero died, and where among other souvenirs one sees the little hand carriage which bore him wounded from the battle of Aspromonte. One also is shown the room which Manlio, cause of the present embroilment, inhabited during his short life as a naval officer. The house is a dismal example of bad taste. Cheap chromos depicting the epic battles of Garibaldi, interspersed with poor efforts of embroidery, cover the walls; and everywhere is an overwhelming quantity of wreaths—so many, in fact, as to overflow the bounds of the house and even adorn the roof. The deathbed of Garibaldi is hidden under them like a grave itself.

Having paid one's respect to the widow, one next makes a visit to the son of the hero. Gen. Ricotti has a long flowing beard that has much likeness to the mosaic fall of silver hair that adorned the face of the painter Meissonier. The figure of the general is now bent upon crutches, and he receives his guests surrounded by his family—a numerous one—dressed in uniform, his red shirt adorned with the galloon of his command, his kepi with the gold braid of a general; a distinction that his heroic father refused to don. His manner, kindly and patriarchal, does not lack dignity despite his invalidism, as he receives the homage of his companions-in-arms and joins with them in exchanging anecdotes of Italy's epic days.

At the grave of Garibaldi many affecting scenes take place. Grizzled veterans shed tears; others, kneeling, kiss the boulder of granite, excavated from the hillside and left in its stern simplicity, that marks the resting-place of the hero.

Near the grave is the urn dedicated to Manlio, which, removed by Gen. Ricotti to a greater distance from the paternal tomb, has been put back, for the present at least, in its original position.

Here, too, one finds the simple grave of Annita, Garibaldi's first wife.

The name of Annita carries a romantic perfume in the mention. This beautiful young woman, flower of two civilizations, was first encountered by the hero in South America, where, fighting by his side like a soldier, she was his faithful companion during his ten years of service to the republic of Rio Grande. Annita lost her life in childbirth during one of Garibaldi's distressful retreats before the Austrian forces; and the hero buried mother and babe in a trench, dug with his own hands.

By an odd coincidence, while an Italian committee is busy gathering funds for a heroic-sized statue of Garibaldi in Caprera, the island of Elba is about to unveil the monument to Napoleon that the sculptor Sidoni has made for the city of Portoferaio, capital of that island. That no great man can escape his monument is logical and human. To see the little corporal in the main square of Portoferaio carved in marble in classic attitude and cockaded hat might well recall to the beholder the remark of Pierre Louis Courier passed on the First Consul when he was made Emperor, "Il aspire adescendre." In regard to the proposed statue of Garibaldi for Caprera, one is inclined to hold that the island itself, already full of souvenirs of the hero and in its hard lines almost symbolic of his adamantine character, is itself the best of monuments, and that a colossal marble statue in photographic pose will be little less than a desecration.

November Anniversaries.

MONTH OF NOTABLE CELEBRATIONS IN OLD ENGLAND.

By a Special Contributor.

NOVEMBER is a month of masks, mummery and memory in "Merrie England." London particularly enjoys itself celebrating Guy Fawkes's Day, the anniversary of the Battle of Inkerman, Lord Mayor's Day, and the King's birthday. November 5 is the day of the "gunpowder treason and plot," and it was also on that day of the month that Tommy Atkins saved the reputation of the British army at Inkerman, in the Crimea, after the generals had blundered badly. November 9 also is a day of double celebration, the new Lord Mayor of London being initiated and the birthday of the King serving as a fine excuse for what since the Boer war has become known as Mafeking—in other words getting loyally rowdy.

November 5 is a quiet day compared with the 9th. The celebration of Guy Fawkes's Day used to be a great event, but of late it has been given over to the children. The little ones take advantage of the occasion to make a few extra coppers. In the poorer districts of London they may be seen going from house to house asking the tenants to "remember the grotto," and chanting:

"Guy Fawkes, guy,
Stick him up on high,
Tie him to a lamp post
And there let him die."

The expression, "what a guy," comes from this celebration, as it is the custom for all who take part in the fun to wear masks, and the more hideous they are, the better the wearers are pleased. A relic of Guy Fawkes still lingers in British officialdom. Whenever the British Parliament is about to meet, the cellars of the Houses of Parliament are solemnly searched, just as was done on that bleak November morning in 1605, in the time of James the First, when Guy Fawkes sat amidst thirty-six barrels of gunpowder and hoped to gain undying fame by elevating the King, Lords and Commons. In the place of fame he achieved the torture and the rather negative honor of being the sponsor of all "guys."

The ridiculous search is performed by the Yeoman of the Guard from the Tower of London, or the "Beef Eaters," to give them their common title. In the early dawn, just as the mist is rising from the muddy Thames, the Beef Eaters parade in the courtyard of the historic tower. Through the deserted streets they march to the big pile on the Thames Embankment which is known all over the world as St. Stephen's. As Big Ben booms out the hour their martial tread resounds along the corridors where Burke and Channing, Disraeli and Gladstone, Salisbury and Parnell so often walked. Then into the big cellars they go and look around as if they really expected to see the form of some desperate conspirator half hidden beneath a somber cloak. Probably the worst explosive they discover is some House of Commons whisky, which they would gladly confiscate, but the legislators who meet in the ornate halls above can punish that kind of plotter for themselves.

It has been the desire of some historians to connect the Roman Catholics generally with the planning of the atrocious attempt to blow up King and Parliament. Of course that is an injustice, for it was the work of fanatical members of an extreme section of the Jesuit party. King James, that "Most High and Mighty Prince, By the Grace of God King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith," etc., had violated promises which he made to his "faithful people" and some of those who suffered thereby went to the extreme of seeking a way to end the existence of the man of "many singular and extraordinary graces," as the translators of the Bible style him.

Robert Catesby was the originator of the devilish plot, but the ugly work was left to Guy Fawkes, a gentleman of good family who was actuated by a spirit of ferocious fanaticism and was quite content to send sky-high a number of Roman Catholics so long as the Protestant King went aloft with them. The desire of some of the conspirators to save friends led to the discovery of the plot. Lord Monteagle received a letter warning him to absent himself from the opening of Parliament. The letter was placed in the hands of the authorities, who had the vaults beneath the House of Lords searched. Guy Fawkes was seized and, after being interrogated by the King, was sent to the Tower of London. There he was tortured, but, despite the horrible cruelties he suffered, he stoically refused to confess. However, the majority of the conspirators were hunted down, and died the deaths of traitors, being tortured, then hanged, drawn and quartered and their heads exposed on Tower Hill.

Not so gruesome is the memory of the Battle of Inkerman, even though over 12,000 soldiers fell in that battle on November 5, 1854. That sanguinary conflict is known as the "soldiers' battle." In that hand-to-hand conflict, into which the British and French generals blundered and the control of which they practically lost, 14,000 British and French troops opposed 40,000 Russians under Gen. Le Prandie. The subjects of the Czar were not the equals of Tommy Atkins at close quarters, and after fighting from daybreak to dusk, the Muscovites fell back, leaving 10,000 dead on the field. The allies had 2500 killed, wounded and missing. It being November 5, a parody of an old gunpowder-plot song was quickly written, and the battle is commemorated in the ballad:

"Remember, remember, the Fifth of November,
Inkerman, powder and shot;
When Gen. Le Prandie
Met John, Pat and Sandy,
And a jolly fine licking he got."

An old Inkerman veteran the other day said: "None of us flinched, though the odds were so desperate. We didn't dare to. It was Hobson's choice with us—kill or be killed. I was unmarried then, and didn't care a tinker's damn for anybody."

There are no memories of torture, blood, or "regret to report" generals connected with the double celebration on November 9. Perhaps that is one reason why London clings to its Lord Mayor's Day sport despite the ridicule which is cast upon it. The Lord Mayor's show is one of those venerable pageants which has been handed down to Englishmen for centuries, and though nearly everybody now professes to laugh at it the majority would hate to see it dropped. It is the custom to declare that the show features get worse and worse each year and that they should be abolished. But the Londoner is really proud of the show. He likes to see the portly occupant of the "City" chair conveyed in a gilded cage from the famous Guildhall, along Cheapside, down Ludgate Hill, along Fleet street, the newspaper Row of the metropolis, past where the griffin used to obstruct the highway, and so to the law courts in the Strand, where the Chief Justice swears him in. For that one day the Lord Mayor makes a London holiday. 'Arry and 'Arriet, Algernon and Angeline, Lord Tomnoddy and Lady Vere de Vere each enjoys the fun in the way that suits each one best. Every one likes to see the new Lord Mayor perspire in his stuffy old carriage, lift his three-cornered hat to the cheering crowd and perhaps stumble over his unaccustomed sword as he alights at the entrance to the law courts.

Moreover the fact that the show comes on the birthday of King Edward gives many an opportunity to get loyally drunk. Thousands go on a jolly good spree. As the words of the old music-hall song have it, they go:

"Strolling round the town,
Knocking people down,
Tasting every kind of wet,
Having a jolly good time, you bet,
Kissing all the girls,
They're a fair old, rare old, ricketty, racketty crew."

November 9 is a strenuous day for the "Peelers," the police, who have to be up bright and early. Before the first suburban train, with its load of sightseers, begins to roll in, squads of the "finest" can be met marching to their various stations. Later the troops and volunteers lent for the festive occasion turn out to help the "bobbies" line the route of the procession. (In explanation of the use of several terms for the word policeman it may be said that the force really owes its existence to the great statesman, the late Sir Robert Peel. Somebody called the officers "Peelers," then a wag spoke of a single policeman as "Robert," which was quickly converted into "Bobby;" and now the London police are called bobbies.)

At the Guildhall there is mounting in hot haste. The steed, the clattering squadron and the gilded car are as quickly as possible formed in procession. The marshal, who directs all, has to think of precedents extending as far back as 1189, although in the year named, and for many years thereafter the great parade was made on the Thames, and for gorgeousness and fun the recent Roosevelt affair on the Mississippi was not a circumstance to the London water procession. It is safe to say that if any captains of the Thames boats jockeyed for position the Lord Mayor did not wait to have their certificates suspended, but had them hanged, drawn and quartered on the spot, to add to the general hilarity.

But to get back to the twentieth-century procession. Its average length can be gauged by those who know London when it is remarked that by the time the head of it reaches St. Paul's, the center will be opposite the "Old Lady of Threadneedle Street," as they call the Bank of England, while the tail-enders—bobbies, of course—will be seeking a surreptitious glass of 'alf-and-'alf in a Finsbury "pub."

Between the Life Guards in the van and the police in the rear will be carriages decorated with powdered footmen, floats upon which stand female cockney goddesses in costumes rather airy for a nipping November day, bands of various excellence to keep the crowd jigging, sailors to help it hurrah for the "King's navee," boys from the training ships who always get three good cheers and one cheer more, colonials who are sure of a jovial welcome, and liverymen—goldsmiths, silversmiths and numerous other smiths, all of whom have "ancient rights" to ride in the cortege. At each show there is generally some special feature to denote what the empire is most interested in—fiscal reform or something of that sort.

Several million people line the streets along which the parade passes, and woe to the man who wears a "topper." He will be allowed to rest in fancied security for a while, but soon a hoodlum will notice the silk hat. "Up with it," he will cry, and in two minutes that freshly-ironed "tile" will be nothing but a battered brim a quarter of a mile away. Of course, while the fun with the headgear is going on, confederates of the hoodlum will be busy relieving pockets.

But it is after dark that the real roystering commences. Then the crowd abandons the celebration of Lord Mayor's Day and sings "God Save the King." The night is given over to the celebration of the King's birthday. The West End is the scene of the chief gaiety. It was the "city's" turn during the day; at night the land of the signs "by special appointment to His Majesty" takes its turn. From Waterloo Bridge, up the Strand, past Charing Cross, around Trafalgar Square, up the Haymarket, and so to Piccadilly Circus and Regent street is a blaze of light. The royal sign of "the lion and the unicorn fighting for the crown," which appears above the stores of the tradesmen favored with the kingly custom, is brilliantly lighted, all the theaters use up electricity to an extent that gratifies the companies when the monthly bills are made up, while celebrated places like the Criterion and the Pavilion vie with each other in lavish display.

All the young folks from the shops are out to make a night of it, the country cousins have come to town by so many thousands that not a few of them have to sleep in the parks at night for want of a place to lay their weary and sometimes swollen heads, the light-fingered gentry from both east and west ends have their harvest-home celebration, and the man with the penny squirt does a tremendous business, for every Algernon in the crowd thinks it incumbent on him to give every Angeline a dash of dirty, vilely-perfumed water. In the ear or the eye is the choicest place for this November baptism.

Meanwhile the new Lord Mayor is entertaining the big-wigs at the Guildhall. The gold plate is brought out, there is a great run on powder and silk stockings for male as well as female heads and legs—Boston people please read limbs for legs—and the choicest delicacies of the season have been gathered to tempt the palates of right honorables, honorables, and the high and mighty of the land.

The new Lord Mayor is the center of the feast, and as he passes the loving cup around that distinguished gathering, he may well feel proud of the height to which he has attained. In his gold chain of office the man who yesterday was but a plain liveryman today is not alone the chief magistrate of the greatest city in the world, but he is a right honorable, the representative of royalty in the "city," the Conservator of the River Thames, and other things too numerous to mention. He is the most important functionary in London, and if by chance something very unusual should happen during his year of office he is sure to be made a baronet. But he certainly earns whatever the royal favor hands him, for in his hands London lays her fame as a hospitable city, and as the place where the great Mansion House funds are started whenever it is necessary to raise sums to meet the distress which comes through some great calamity. To help the Lord Mayor in his capacity as host the city allows him $50,000, with the use of the Mansion House, furniture, carriages, powdered and silk-stockinged lackeys and historic plate. Should his sovereign unhappily die during his year of office the Lord Mayor of London becomes, pro tempore, a member of the privy council, and perhaps figures in the deputation which announces to the new ruler that "the King is dead, long live the King."

This Mansion-House dinner, which winds up the festivities of November 9, is of more than unusual note because either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for foreign affairs makes a speech on the foreign relations of the empire. On one or two occasions the remarks made by a Prime Minister at the Guildhall have set at rest rumors of war. Lord Salisbury made several notable utterances around that gold-plated board, Mr. Balfour has charmed not a few distinguished audiences there and Campbell-Bannerman, who, being a Scot, "jokes with deefeeculty," has been elephantinely frolicsome at the Lord Mayor's table.

After the last carriage has taken the last noble guest from the Guildhall, when the "owl" motor bus has left Piccadilly Circus with its load of drunks, even when the first wagons from the market gardens begin to lumber along to Covent Garden, the police still have their hands full. They now have to attend to the men and women who have drunk not wisely but too well, and who are proclaiming to the statues of dead statesmen which peer from every corner, that they "won't go home till morning."

And when morning breaks? Oh, what a difference! And the magistrates have to listen to the same old excuse, year after year. HAROLD SANDS.

BRUTE AND HUMAN DRUG TESTERS.

A lot of sorry-looking chickens, dogs and cats live in the black, ill-smelling yard of the great chemical plant.

"We use these animals to test our drugs on," said the chemist. "They come in very handy. They more than earn their board.

"Ergotine is a drug we test on chickens. It is a simple test. If a dose of ergotine fails to turn a chicken's comb black, we know that the drug is, for some reason or other, worthless.

"Hasheesh we test on dogs. Hasheesh is made of female hemp buds; male hemp buds have no medicinal value; yet some dishonest dealers put male buds on the market, and since they resemble the female buds precisely, it is impossible to detect them save by an actual test. Dogs, given hasheesh, get drunk and happy if the stuff is good.

"Digitalis, the heart stimulant, is tested on frogs. We inject a drop of it into a frog's stomach, and in the kymograph, or heart-recording machine, we study the changes that take place in the frog's heart action. Thus we get a very accurate knowledge of what our digitalis can do.

"Do we ever test drugs on ourselves? Oh, yes, indeed, often. Chemists have lost their lives, chemists have gone incurably insane, through too rash a bravery in testing drugs on their own persons."

MUSEUM NUISANCES.

"Our greatest nuisances are lovers," said a museum curator. "Why do lovers always select museums to spoon in? Because, I suppose, the rooms are so huge and quiet, with so many secluded nooks.

"At any rate, Cupid continually embarrasses me. If I hurry round a case of stuffed birds, and seated behind a mastodon I see a young man and a girl passionately kissing each other's mouths. With a blush I turn to the reptilian section, only to find an elderly [illegible] man, in the shelter of a case of dried cobras, holding a young woman's hand and making a stately, old-fashioned offer of marriage. I switch off to the Egyptian room, but there a stout girl is sitting on a thin man's lap behind a mummy case.

"A museum is a wonderful rendezvous for lovers. Come, now, did you never meet your girl in one?"

Johnny Objected.

"BIG FLORRIE' SULLIVAN," said a New York detective, "will be missed here, now that his health has gone back on him. But let us hope that he'll soon be restored to us, alert as ever to fight against the cadet and other evils. Thank you, I will have one more, but make it short, please.

"Florrie Sullivan had many an adventure in the New York slums. Some of his adventures were dramatic, tragical; some were the reverse.

"Passing a mean little shanty in a horrible district one Sunday morning, Sullivan heard a loud yell:

"'Murder! Murder! Help!'

"In his brave, generous way, never stopping to count the cost, he ran at full speed toward the sound. 'An old man's voice,' he muttered to himself, and then he shouted as he ran:

"'Have no fear! Courage! I will assist you!'

"'Murder!' shrieked the voice again.

"Sullivan reached the door and thundered on it with fists and feet. It opened, and a neat young woman appeared.

"'What is the trouble that——' the man panted; but the young woman, smiling quietly, interrupted him.

"'Oh, never mind at all, at all,' she said. 'Shure, an' they're only puttin' a clane shirt on ould Johnny.'"

Too Late.

MARSHALL P. WILDER, the noted humorist, told a stuttering story at a dinner in Chicago.

"I hate stuttering stories as a rule," he said, "but this one is rather good. It is about two blacksmiths, both stutterers. The first snatched a red-hot lump of iron from the forge, rushed with it to the anvil, and then began this conversation:

"'N-n-now th-th-then, st-strike! Qu-quickly!'

"'W-w-where shall I s-strike?'

"'J-j-just at the end. H-h-hurry up.'

"'Th-th-this end?'

"'Yes, of c-c-course. Mind you hit s-s-straight.'

"'All r-r-right. N-n-now! Shall I l-l-let her g-g-go?'

"'N-n—you f-f-fool, the iron's c-c-cold.'"

The Reward of Politeness.

PRESIDENT HARAHAN, of the Illinois Central, at a dinner in New York compared foreign with home roads.

"And another thing," he said—"our railway servants are more courteous than foreign ones. Foreign porters and ticket sellers are a very crusty lot.

"An American and a Briton were once riding up to London in a first-class carriage. The American, at a certain station, leaned out and said to the porter on the platform:

"'What station is this, brother?'

"'Birmingham, of course,' said the porter in a surly tone. 'Can't you see the name posted up?'

"The American, after drawing in his head, said to the Englishman:

"'Now that was a piece of discourtesy you wouldn't meet with in America. An American porter would have answered me with polished politeness.'

"The Englishman smiled.

"'Ah, but it was your own fault, that rebuff,' he said. 'Pardon me for mentioning it, but your manner was too stiff, too rough-and-ready. The porter took you for a—a—a bounder. Now, at the next station, I will myself ask a porter some question, and I'll ask it in the gracious, condescending way we do such things over here. I warrant you I'll receive the most courteous of answers.'

"'All right,' said the American shortly, a little hurt at having been mistaken for a bounder.

"Well, at the next station the carriage drew up near a porter, and the Englishman—he was a typical, rotund, fine old John Bull—put his head out of the window, showed all his false teeth in a glittering smile, and purred:

"'Porter, would you kindly tell me the name of this station?'

"The porter glanced up, and then, as he slouched off, called back over his shoulder:

"'Ah, shut tha trap, tha bacon-faced old buffer! Put thy daft fat head in before I knock it off for thee.'"

A New Definition.

A RATHER cynical joke has been recently credited to Senator Platt.

The Senator on his last visit to the Manhattan Beach Hotel allowed a pretty little girl, a Western millionaire's daughter, to be presented to him.

The little girl, in the course of one of her many delightful chats with the aged statesman, said:

"Tell me, won't you, Senator, what political economy is?"

"Political economy, my dear child," Senator Platt replied, "is the art of never buying more votes than you actually need."

A Solid Liquid.

CAPT. BIGLOW, of Yale, was talking about an applicant for the football team.

"He will never make a football player," said Capt. Biglow. "He is as different from a football player as a bottle of brown fluid I beheld last summer was different from beer.

"A man with a motorcycle stopped at a mountain inn where I was lunching one sultry afternoon, and asked for a bottle of beer. The landlord took from a sunny shelf a bottle hung with cobwebs. He dusted it, and set it before the cyclist with a flourish.

"'You'll find this the best Milwaukee, sir,' he said.

"The cyclist opened the bottle, poured a little into a glass, and frowned.

"'Landlord,' he said, 'this is very thick and muddy beer.'

"The landlord lifted the glass and looked at it. He tilted it from side to side. It was so thick and muddy that it would scarcely spill.

"'It's the thunder,' he muttered. 'It's the thunder that has done this.'

"'Well, thunder or no thunder, I can't drink it,' said the motorcyclist; 'but I'll tell you what you might do. You might put it in a paper bag for me, and I'll eat it on my way home.'"

The Montreal Gurgle.

"STUYVESANT FISH," said a Pittsburgh banker, "is a very finicky person. To get along with him, you must be mighty particular about etiquette, you must shave twice a day, dress for dinner, all that sort of thing. If you don't come up to his standard, he is apt to say some very cutting things about you.

"I once sat beside Mr. Fish at a dinner at the Union League in New York. Mr. Fish, when the soup came on, began to cast sneering glances at a stout, red-faced chap opposite us; and finally he whispered to me:

"'That man is from Montreal. I can tell it by his accent.'

"'By his accent?' said I. 'But, Mr. Fish, the man hasn't spoken.'

"Mr. Fish's lip curled in a scornful smile.

"'I had reference,' he said, 'to the accent with which he eats his soup.'"

The People's Choice.

SENATOR LA FOLLETTE was talking in Madison about crushing monopolies.

"These concerns," he said, "live on the people, and therefore they try to flatter and delude the people. They pretend that it is on the people's sufferance that their existence depends. But this, really, is not the truth. The people have no choice in the matter."

The Senator smiled.

"The people and the corporations," he said, "remind me of a lady and her little boy. I was lunching at this lady's house one day. There was a very large chicken and a very small duck on the table, and the lady, pausing with the carving-knife raised, said:

"'Johnny, which will you take, chicken or duck?'

"'Duck,' piped Johnny.

"But the mother shook her head.

"'No, Johnny,' she said, in a firm yet kindly voice, 'you can't have duck, my dear. Take your choice, darling, take your choice—but you can't have duck.'"

Gave His Opinion.

ACTIONS, it is said, speak louder than words. One is reminded of the old saw by the story of a French dramatist who, while reading a play to the members of a theatrical company, observed that one of the actors had fallen asleep.

When, after the reading was finished, the company were expressing their opinions of the play, the dramatist insisted on hearing the views of the drowsy actor.

"I have given my opinion," said the player, suppressing a yawn.

"Why, you were asleep," said the indignant author.

"Sir," was the dignified reply; "sleep is an opinion."—[Cassell's Journal.

Rather Out of Hand.

PROF OGDEN CHALMERS LORIMER, Toledo's veteran educator, is one of the few remaining schoolmasters who still cling to corporal punishment.

"I believe in corporal punishment," he said stoutly, in a recent address. "I take no stock in moral suasion. Good, healthy boys under moral suasion have too free a time of it. They get out of hand.

"There is a friend of mine," said Prof. Lorimer, with a grim smile, "who is raising a family of six boys with the help of moral suasion. The mild little chap argued about the matter the other night at a club.

"'And do you believe,' said I, 'that moral suasion is better than corporal punishment for big, lusty boys like yours?'

"'Yes,' said my friend.

"For my part, I sneered.

"'And do you mean to say that you have never whipped your boys?' I asked.

"'As true as I sit here,' my friend declared earnestly, 'I have never struck one of my children except in self-defence.'"

Not Room for a Third.

SECRETARY TAFT was, on one occasion, in consultation with Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania. The Secretary is gigantic and the Senator is taller and weighs more than any member of the Senate.

While these two statesmen were in earnest conversation an aggressive politician endeavored to enter the room, but an alert secretary politely interfered.

"What are they doing in there?" asked the politician inquisitively.

This impertinent question nettled the secretary, and he answered tersely:

"Holding a mass meeting, I presume."—[Judge's Library.

Words Not Needed.

DR. JOHN HALL was a famous physician in Washington, and he had Presidents for his patients, and the families of Presidents, for almost fifty years. He always attended the funerals of those who succumbed to his treatment. Capt. Blank, one of the most prominent and notorious of the sporting fraternity, died suddenly one afternoon, about an hour after the physician had visited him and given him medicine.

Six stout, rotund, sporting men, with fiery red faces, acted as pallbearers. Dr. Hall walked in front of them, as they emerged from the residence of the deceased. An intimate friend asked Dr. Hall what caused the death of Capt. Blank, and he replied:

"Look at the faces of his pallbearers." D.

The Way the Czar Proposed.

IT is a pretty story which surrounds the betrothal of the present Czar Nicholas and the Czarina, for, although the great question had been planned and thought out for them by their respective parents, they were both determined to have a say in the matter.

That they were in love with each other everyone knew, and between themselves a mutual understanding had been arrived at in the summer-house of York Cottage; but as Czarevitch the future Czar had to make the formal and old-fashioned offer of his hand.

"The Emperor, my father," he said, addressing the blushing bride-to-be, "has commanded me to make you the offer of my hand and heart."

"My grandmother, the Queen," replied the present Czarina, "has commanded me to accept the offer of your hand"—she broke into a rippling laugh—"and your heart I take of my own free will."—[Tit-Bits.

Only a Fence Between.

A VERY dignified and self-respecting broker was touring through the country when a punctured tire compelled him to wait while his chauffeur repaired the tire. He strolled along the country road for a short distance, and found a red-headed, jumper-attired farmer boy husking corn in a field by the side of the road, and, thinking to jolly him a little, said:

"That is pretty yellow corn you are husking."

And the lad replied: "Yes; we planted yellow corn."

The broker, a trifle nettled, then said: "You won't have but a half crop, will you?"

And to which the boy said: "No; we planted this piece on shares."

This tart reply provoked the self-important man, and he said testily: "Why, you're not far from a fool, are you?"

And to which the boy replied: "No; there is only a fence between us."—[Judge's Library.

Carson went away, crossed the street, looked up at the big marble building, and then went back to say to the messenger:

"A little boy, listening to the weird skirl of the bagpipes of a street performer, once said to his father:

"'Father, why does the piper keep on the move all the time he plays?'

"'I can't say, my boy,' the father answered, 'unless it is to prevent any one getting the range with a cobblestone.'"

Deserved Only a Nickel.

A PROMINENT charity worker of New York said the other day about Miss Gladys Vanderbilt:

"When this good and charming girl goes to Hungary as the Countess Szechenyi, I know of certain hospital wards where she will be missed."

He paused and smiled.

"But let me tell you," he said, "of an incident that befell Miss Vanderbilt last year. "There was a children's hospital which she visited regularly, bringing fruit and flowers to the little patients, and in a certain ward a boy was pointed out to her one day as a very bad customer.

"'Oh, he is incorrigible,' sighed the nurse.

"Miss Vanderbilt talked a while with the little chap and when she rose to go she said:

"'See here, I have heard bad reports about you. Now I want you to promise me to be good. If you are good for a whole week, I'll give you a dollar when I come again next Thursday.'

"The boy promised to try to be good. This promise though, he did not keep. On her next visit Miss Vanderbilt, going to his cot, said:

"'I shall not ask the nurses how you have behaved this last week. I want you to tell me yourself. Now what do you think—do you deserve that dollar I promised you, or not?'

"The boy regarded Miss Vanderbilt with a troubled frown. Then he said in a low voice:

"'Gimme a nickel.'"

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

WINDOW GARDENING.

SOMETHING ABOUT DEPTH OF SOIL AND OTHER CONDITIONS.

By Ernest Braunton.

IN a country where gardening is not only possible, but pleasurable and profitable throughout the year, one may be excusable for resenting a discussion of window gardening. Yet there are many who have neither house nor grounds and in a flat must turn to this style of gardening if any be done. But there is another class fully as strong numerically who have window boxes for plants from choice and some styles of architecture seem to demand such ornamentation.

Almost any bedding plant will lend itself to the window box scheme if there be a sufficient depth of soil, but four or six inches is insufficient for any plant—common lawn grass demands more. Some of the most successful window gardens in Los Angeles have a soil depth of sixteen or more inches. On the shady side of the house one may easily grow any fern that will thrive out of doors in any situation, and there are a score or more of suitable sorts. Begonias are another group peculiarly suited to the window box, and are obtainable in great variety. One may have a border of drooping plants to hang in festoons over the box for permanent effect, and the rest of the space plant at present hyacinths, narcissi and the long list of Dutch bulbs in the market today—bulbs which nowhere thrive more luxuriantly than in the window garden.

In the dwelling, plants have much to contend with. Lack of light and air, gas, dust, dry atmosphere and a host of evil influences beset the house plant; but the window box plant is as free as the denizen of the garden, and may with little effort receive better care with coddling. For those who have little garden space or dogs, cats and other pests to dig up and destroy gardens the window box is a place of refuge for rare and beautiful plants. In close-in residence sections where there is no fence and the dwelling almost on the street, the few square feet available had better be given up to lawn with a few tough, hardy plants against the building front. Plants for flower effect cannot be grown where easily destroyed, covered with dust or mud or stolen, and there is for them no haven of safety other than the window garden. Not only is the effect a marked one for good from the street side, but leaf and blossom peeping in at every window goes far to relieve the monotony of even the dreariest day, and in sunshine is ever a thing of beauty.

Shade for the Back Yard.

In hot city backyards having a southern exposure a dense, satisfactory shade of more than ornamental value may be obtained by planting one or more arbor grapes set round about with four permanent posts well down in the ground. Across the space between may be put, from pole to pole, a few light strips of board to support the vine, and as growth extends the trellis may be built out according to the needs of the vines, until the whole yard is covered, if so desired. Such a scheme would prove productive of shade and fruit during summer and in winter the leaves would drop and allow the sun to keep the soil dry and warm. Plant upon it such grapes as the Peirce, California Concord and the luscious white "eastern" grape Niagara. All of these sorts are highly satisfactory in the warmest locations in this region, producing a good crop of fruit which is relished by all who partake.

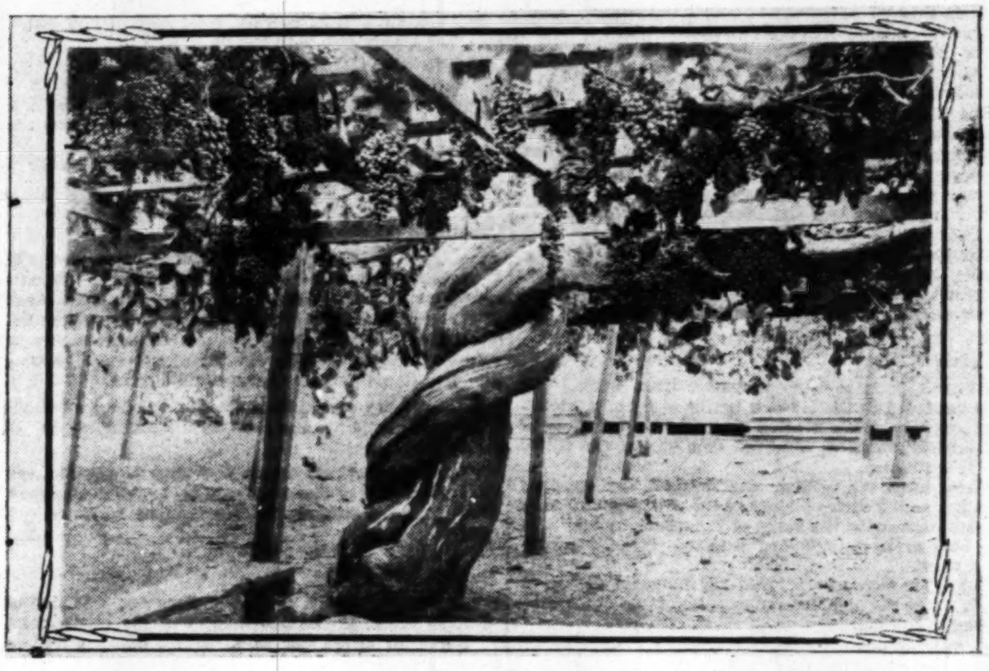
The Somber Conifer.

Conifers or cone-bearing trees are always inharmonious when planted on an ordinary city lot. Unless contrasted with lighter greens and bright blossoms the effect is depressing, somber or funereal. Nearly all conifers are strongest in effect as individual specimens, and therefore should stand somewhat isolated and be allowed to retain their lower branches to the ground, the necessary space is out of question in a small yard. Sooner or later they must be merged into the general planting where the area is small so that their individual beauty is soon lost; therefore a more cheerful-looking tree is preferable.

The Bengal Date.

Most of our readers are familiar with the literature of the common date of commerce and the many economic ways in which different parts of the plant are used. Every part of the tree is made use of; the poorer people make huts of the leaves; the fiber of the stems make ropes and coarse cloth; the stalks make crates, baskets, brooms, canes, etc., while the trunks make substantial buildings; the heart of the young leaves is eaten as we use cabbage, and the sap when fermented makes an intoxicating beverage or before fermentation is boiled into palm sugar.

In Southern California we grow another species, Phoenix sylvestris, closely allied to P. dactylifera, or the true date of commerce, and much more beautiful as a garden ornament and which is commonly called the Bengal date, a name which indicates its nativity. So close is it to the date of commerce that scientists who have made an exhaustive study of the subject more than suspect the commercial date originated from the Bengal species. In India this species is known as the "wild date, and is one of the most important economic plants of the country. It is put to all the uses enumerated for the more common species here, but its yield of sap for sugar is the most important item. A single tree has been known to yield an annual crop for nearly a century, and yields from eight to twelve pounds of sugar each year. This tree is very hardy, and endures considerable cold so that it might be easily grown over nearly all parts of this State, and its ornamental merit deserves more consideration as a garden plant than it has to date received.



BACK YARD SHADE.

Sago Palms.

Our so-called sago palm of Southern California is not a palm, but a cycad, and does not furnish the sago of commerce, though the heart of the trunks were, in the days when the plant was plentiful, used for food in Japan. Sago is now made right at home—in the United States—from cereals. All the sago palms in existence would not keep us in sago for a week. Metroxylon sago in Borneo, and M. Rumphii used to furnish the commercial sago and several other species contribute to that end at home, but the products are not sufficiently voluminous so that we get any. Arenga saccharifera, Caryote urens and several other palms are destroyed for their farinaceous trunks.

Two Fine Native Perennials.

At the last Los Angeles flower show there was shown a large lot of a beautiful perennial flower grown near Oceanside and known to botanists as Leptosyne maritima—pronounce it Lep-tos-y-ne, giving the y the sound of i, with accent on the second syllable—the word is Greek, and means slenderness, a characteristic of the genus, but not of our subject. These flowers were of the size of our wild sunflower, but of a beautiful, waxy lemon yellow in all parts—one of the showiest flowers of its class to be found anywhere, and worthy of extensive planting. Another interesting species of this plant is L. gigantea, which forms a woody, quite tree-like trunk often six feet high. This latter species is most common on Santa Cruz Island.

UNIFORM STREET PLANTING.

IT GIVES STRENGTH AND DIGNITY TO THE EFFECT.

THE first necessity of rational street-tree planting is to have the same sort of tree on each side for as great a distance as possible. One never tires of the same tree, no matter how extensive the lines; there is an added strength and dignity with each successive mile. Of course a highway with curves or bends may be an exception, but straight lines of planting should be of one kind only. The continuity serves but to intensify our appreciation and enjoyment, and the length and regular uniformity becomes stately with advancing years. The visitor, after noting the general effect for a time, begins to study habit, foliage, bark, flower or seeds, and unconsciously becomes a student of nature, with the effect that it never altogether leaves him, and he is born anew.

Next to a lack of uniformity our chief fault in planting streets is overplanting. A few years ago a municipal architect of note was driven down Magnolia avenue, Riverside. In those days the sides were nearly solid with immense cypresses. After the drive, upon being asked what he thought of the avenue he remarked: "It is about as cheerful as driving through a tunnel." Ever since the thinning-out process has been going on until today you may catch fine views of the distant mountains. Later street plantings have been on a more rational plan, though all of the older treets in Riverside, as is the case all over Southern California, are too thickly lined with trees. With such planting all individuality and beauty of outline is lost, and the effect is little less monotonous than that of a continuous wall of brick or stone. Overplanting has been responsible for a great majority of the objections to uniformity of sorts, for if each side of the street presents a solid mass of foliage and you can see nothing beyond, a change of color and form is certainly pleasing. Street planting should never shut out all glimpses of the adjoining or distant landscape, wherefore it is pertinent to remark that all street tree planting in Southern California is overdone.

Unter Den Linden.

Berlin's famous street designated in English would read "Under the Linden," though more familiar to many as "Under the Basswood." The tree used for this planting is Tilia vulgaris, usually sold in this country as T. Europea, as are two or three other species. As one Los Angeles lady remarked: "It isn't so much." The width of the street is more impressive than the beauty of the trees. The species of Tilia most common in the United States is T. Americana, known as the American linden or basswood, quite well known over the eastern part of our country.

Unter den Linden is the widest street in Berlin. In the middle there is a broad, unpaved promenade most scrupulously cared for, and upon one side of this there is a riding path; on the other a stone-paved road for heavy traffic. Inclosing these are four rows of lindens. Parallel with these are two more roadways, and also broad sidewalks, so that the street consists of seven divisions. The trees, however, like all beautiful natural things cooped up in the city, are poor, scraggly, unhealthy specimens, and not at all at home amid the dust, gas and smoke of artificial city life. In other parts of Germany and just outside the city of Berlin, the trees develop into fine specimens.

An Ideal Street Palm.

Some enterprising tract owner who wishes to leave a monument to his memory that will endure and call forth unbounded admiration should plant an entire street to the Guadalupe palm (Erythea edulis) and see that the trees are well tended for a number of years. This palm has the finest color and form, and the largest leaves of all of our fan-leafed palms, a combination which easily places it as the most handsome of the several species common with us. When an avenue of these palms had attained an age of twenty or more years its beauty would be unsurpassed by any street in Southern California. Several of this species on Victoria avenue, Riverside, are the most handsome street palms in the State.

THE GUADALUPE PALM—IDEAL FOR STREETS.

A Forestry Department.

Every city of any size should have a forestry department, and east of the Mississippi many of them have. In our own Riverside we have a tree warden, and never less than two permanent assistants, while in Los Angeles some of our cold-blooded citizens begrudge us the possession of a lone forester. We need a trained and active permanent force of workmen so that the forester (under a revised, up-to-date charter) may begin the systematizing of the care and planting of street trees. We should have every block in the city fully planted during the coming spring so that we may take our proper rank as the metropolis of Semi-tropic California. Our streets at present do not lend any such impression to our visitors.

Clean Vacant Lots.

Every municipality should have an ordinance, and enforce it, requiring all vacant lots to be kept clean at all times, and not make a raid on them once a year, for the task is well-nigh gigantic if undertaken in a large city, but a single month each year.

Non-residents who will not improve their property, and who therefore are valueless to a city, should be sharply dealt with in this matter, and be given to understand that we are on the move no matter if their property is purposely "stagnated." Any owner who allows his premises to become so untidy as to offend the taste of good citizens harbors a nuisance which should be summarily suppressed or eradicated. It gives the city an unfavorable reputation and depresses the price of surrounding property.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experiences with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

THE national Department of Agriculture has been carrying on some chemical tests as to the relative value of chicken meat as food for genus homo bipeds, which should certainly stimulate the family man in securing a small flock of one of the all purpose breeds. And though we as a nation already consume 250,000,000 head, there is no reason why we cannot with equal profit to ourselves eat double that quantity to our advantage. The laboratory investigations go to show that the composition of the white and dark meat is substantially as follows: Water, dark meat 59.48, white 61.38; water in fat-free substances, dark 78.44, white 75.08; fat, dark 24.16, white 18.25; protein, dark 15.94, white 17.06; meat basis, dark 1.03, white .37. Though there are some differences as between the two, practically they need concern us but little. Either makes a splendid food from any point of view.

In his book on Food Adulterations, Dr. Wiley says that for food purposes chicken is eaten at various stages. In this statement we can scarcely agree if allowing for some "spring chickens" on the bills of fare of the restaurants. We have at times thought that some spring chicken was mostly eaten when about forty years old. However, be that as it may, from the view point of the chemist, the full-grown chicken is at its best when still young. With age the meat loses flavor and gains toughness, which of course makes it harder to digest. There is also a marked difference in variety of fowl as to its value as nutritious food. Nature in this regard shows her respect for the eternal fitness of things. The good laying breeds are not strong in the direction of either quantity nor quality of meat as table fowl. From this viewpoint, the wise poultrymen will see to it that his table is supplied with full-grown but young birds of the meat-producing varieties.

The market demands broiling, fryers, and "squabs," all of which are considered more or less in the light of delicacies and luxuries. The greatest food value both in quality of flavor, volume and nutrition is undoubtedly to be had in the young but matured fowl, which can be cooked to advantage in any of the usual ways.

Many people are at a loss to understand why the meat on certain varieties of birds is white on breast and wing, while in others it is all dark. This difference is not wholly accounted for in the books of "nature students" and naturalists, though it is presumed to be due to muscular action. Birds whose chief means of locomotion is walking usually abound in white breast and wing meat, while those of strong wings and great flight have dark meat throughout. This difference in color is evidently influenced by the amount of hemoglobin (the principal red substance in blood) present in the flesh.

Much has been said both pro and con on the advisability of drawing poultry after killing for market. When placed in cold storage it is claimed that the undrawn specimen keeps better. In a cold country, where great quantities of poultry is marketed in a frozen condition this may have some virtue but in our own climate, we are of the opinion that the average consumer and buyer will prefer the drawn bird when buying his chicken dinner.

A Circus Curing Egg-Eating Habit.

The following novel method of curing fowl of the egg-eating habit is given by A. W. Berry in the Farm Stock Journal:

"Perhaps some readers of your paper would like to know of a method I employed to cure a flock of hens of the egg-eating habit which had developed to such an extent in my flock that I had almost despaired of being able to cure them.

"I took an egg and partly removed the contents by making a small hole in each end of the shell and blowing out the white, sealed one hole with a little paste and broke the yolk still remaining in the shell. I then filled this with ammonia, shaking the egg thoroughly to get the two well incorporated. Ater sealing the remaining hole, I took the 'egg' to the henhouse and laying it down on the litter cracked the shell in sight of the hens, thus inviting them to the 'feast' I had provided. They eagerly accepted my invitation, and after one mouthful as eagerly made way for the next. Please do not ask me to describe the result from that taste. Talk about a circus! Well, in conclusion, let me say that nothing happened except that although I invited them the next day to a 'banquet' in exactly the same manner, but with an egg that was still warm from the nest, they one and all disdainfully refused the invitation and never as long as any of them lived did they eat another egg."

Eggs Which Lack Shells.

In our last issue discussing the anatomy of the laying hen, some reference was made to soft-shelled eggs. It was shown that soft foods wanting in shell-forming ingredients were responsible, but not always wholly so. There are other contributing causes. Touching on this phase of our subject, a late issue of the Michigan Farmer says that a great deal of mischief is done by feeding on overstimulating foods and the reckless use of condiments which overexcite the ovary, and inflame the lining membranes of the oviduct. In this way the egg-producing organs are stimulated to excessive production with the result that the oviduct becomes diseased and those organs which produce the mineral matter for the shelling of the egg are too debilitated to perform their function properly. It is worthy of note that fowls suffering from inflammation of the oviduct often lose the use of their legs, the trouble being frequently attributed to cramp.

A very common cause of shell-less eggs is internal fat, which blocks the walls of the oviduct and impairs its functions. Worms in the hen's intestines sometimes lead to eggs being expelled before they are properly shelled. Narrow perches are also responsible for shell-less eggs, the eggs being dropped prematurely, owing to the struggles of the fowls to retain their balance. Similarly, fright will cause a fowl—more especially a pullet—to expel the egg before it is ready.

When a fowl has acquired the habit of laying shell-less eggs there sould be a complete change of diet. All soft food, except what is cooked, or juicy vegetables, which may be freely supplied, should be withheld for a time, and grain only be given. Enough Epsom salts should be added to the drinking water to make it taste faintly saline, and for a few days the fowl should be housed in a quiet place. To help steer clear of shell-less eggs, always supply the fowl with plenty of flint grit and guard against internal fat by feeding moderately—two meals a day are ample—giving a plentiful supply of green stuff. Perches must be of the proper size, and, above all, leave condiments and all that sort of thing severely alone.

Warnings for the to-Be Exhibitor.

Bear in mind that any specimen is not in show condition when infested with lice, suffering from a cold, subject to scaly legs, torn in any part from fighting or from accidents, with off-colored feathers, with faulty combs, legs and shanks, or possessed of any of the disqualifications enumerated in the standard of perfection.

Bear in mind that good birds often lose to inferior ones because nervous and wild. Your unstrung specimen always looks angular and frightened. He will not be at ease, but always under tension, which largely influences the judge's opinion in favor of the tame and contented specimens.

If you are "out to win" bear these things in mind before you enter the birds, and overcome them by proper grooming.

A Southern California Branch.

On the evening of October 8 there was perfected in the assembly rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles, a permanent branch of the American Poultry Association, with a charter membership of about fifteen poultry breeders and fanciers. The object and aims of this new organization are to foster and develop the breeding of standard fowl in the southwest, to encourage the holding of shows whenever the same shall prove feasible, and to come in direct touch with the parent organization. The officers chosen for the first term are as follows: S. Tyler, president; Charles T. Paul, vice-president; Charles Andrews, second vice-president; John D. Mercer, secretary; and William M. Humphreys, treasurer.

The American Poultry Association was organized in 1873 in Buffalo, New York. In 1876 it published the first edition of the American Standard of Perfection, a book which has gone through many editions and revisions since that time. By its rules and regulations poultry is now judged, bought and sold, in the United States and Canada. The work has proved invaluable, and has probably wielded a wider influence in bringing up the economic and ornamental value of fowl than any other book now in print. And though an excellent working treatise in its present condition, it is now proposed to issue breed standard showing the different variety of fowl in their natural colors.

That the poultry industry can be developed and improved the newly-organized branch fully believes, and proposes to at once devise ways and means whereby this may be accomplished. As a means to that end it cordially invites fanciers and breeders to become members.

A Cheerful Word Along the Road.

In a country where the outdoor life is so alluring as it is in Southern California, there are necessarily many people who engage in some division of agriculture without previous experience or aptitude for their new vocation. Of this number poultry culture commands more than its share. Requiring a camparatively small capital, many go into it only to fail, while others meeting with only an indifferent success, are quite apt to take a pessimistic view of the situation. It is with a view to overcoming these objections and want of practical information that the Los Angeles County Poultry Association is holding a series of open meetings. At the one held last week some of these failures were explained away. One breeder found that by trap-nesting many of his hens produced only about 65 eggs per year, thus entailing a loss for every one behaving in that manner. By weeding out the drones he has in about a year brought the average up to 150 eggs per year, with not a few hens of 200 eggs per annum. Thus what had been a losing game was converted into a paying business. Another breeder suffered loss by reason of not understanding the basic principles of artificial incubation, which when once mastered, he was now doing a fine business in hatching for others, selling day-old chicks, and besides keeping up a flock of his own. Another reported bad luck in the showroom, but learning how to select, groom and wash his birds, made a splendid winning at the last show, with the result that he sold all of his breeding stock at good prices. And so the list might be continued.

The trouble is most of us are wanting in continuity of purpose. Not knowing by training or experience any of the obstacles to overcome, many jump to the conclusion that "there is no money in the poultry business," and go out quite as easily as they went in, with something to charge to the account of experience. Had they shown a spirit of study and observation, learned of their mistakes and overcome leakages and wrong practices and shortcomings, they would have found their proper level and made a success of their venture. There are many men and women in Southern California that are successful with poultry, and this, too, in spite of the fact that the country is strewn with second-hand incubators and other poultry paraphernalia. The Times liners contain many bargain offers along these lines, but they do not emanate from successful people. And it is quite true that every one in business of any kind experiences reverses and moments of despondency, nevertheless the quitters never get to the top—not even in the poultry business. The man who "sticks" and goes ahead is bound to be heard from favorably. Brain and brawn, blood and iron, heart and soul, put into an enterprise are sure to land right side up sooner or later. What class do you belong to?

BRITAIN'S BIGGEST BELL.

In the course of the hearing of a case that was being tried in the High Court of Justice the other day, it was stated by an eminent King's counsel that Big Ben is the biggest bell in the British Isles.

The statement was apparently acquiesced in alike by judge, jury, and spectators. At all events, it passed unchallenged. And no wonder, since most standard books of reference assert the same thing.

They are, however, all wrong. Britain's biggest bell is not Big Ben, but Great Paul, which hangs in St. Paul's Cathedral.

It is a very hermit among bells. Its abiding place is situated far away in the innermost recesses of the building, in a chamber forbidden to the public, and is to be reached only after much clambering of tortuous stairs and traversing of many devious passages.

Perhaps it is for this very reason that its claims to superiority of bigness over all its British rivals have been, up till now, nearly ignored. "But its sound," you say, "will surely betray it?" Not at all! Indeed, so securely is the monster buried in its aërial mausoleum of solid masonry, that, though rung every day, London is totally unaware of the fact. Just a whisper of it you may hear if you chance to be standing in the churchyard between 1 o'clock and five minutes past, the ghost of the echo of a distant tintinnabulation, so to speak, but you will have to listen intently.

Yet Great Paul weighs nearly seventeen tons, and is rung by the combined labor of four men, who swing it to an fro for the regulation five minutes until toward the end it is swinging through nearly two-thirds of a circle, and both sides are thundering with the crashing blows of a clapper which itself weighs a third of a ton.

Big Ben, on the other hand, weighs only thirteen tons 11 cwt. and is, moreover, incapable of being "rung."—[Pearson's Weekly.

The ardent Frenchman looked tenderly at the little young mistress of his soul. "Je t'adore!" he murmured.

"Maybe I'd better," she returned. "You can't never tell who's listening in this yere house."

50-CENT EGGS

F. W. Healy, the well known banker and poultry fancier of Pasadena, writes: "After hearing others praise Egg-More, I determined that if there was anything to keep the hens laying through the fall and winter months, I wanted it. I bought a package of EGG-MORE and fed it and the improvement was very marked. Keeping on with it I soon proved the truth of your statement that you can't put all your eggs in one basket if you feed Egg-More. I have raised poultry nearly all my life and for twenty years in California, but never did my hens lay so well as since I began to use Egg-More. I consider it the best egg producer on the market, and I do not intend to be without it." The cost is but a very small per cent. of the increased egg production. 4 lbs. 50c; 25 lb. pail, $2.00; 50 lb. sack, $3.75. Freight prepaid by us on pail or sack if your dealer doesn't keep it. Bismya.

OLDEST CITY IN THE WORLD, AMID DESERTS OF MESOPOTAMIA.

From Putnam's Monthly.

IN a sand-swept belt of Central Babylonia, that country of ancient ruins, in a region dangerous and deserted because far from water, and on the border of the territory of several hostile Arab tribes, lies the low ruin of Bismya. Few explorers have ever visited it, and those few did so at the peril of their lives. Dr. Peters of New York, while excavating at Nippur, discovered at Bismya a clay tablet of an ancient date. German explorers are reported to have said that the ruins originated with the civilization of the Arabs. However, not only the age of the ruins, but the name and history of the ancient city of which they are composed, remained a mystery until recently.

In the autumn of 1900 application for permission to excavate the ancient Babylonian city of Ur was submitted to the Sublime Porte. A year spent at the Turkish capital in pushing the application from one department to another resulted only in a refusal. Permission to excavate at other points was then requested, with the same result, and it was not until the autumn of 1903 that an American fleet; then in Turkish waters, forced from the Porte an irade, permitting the excavation of Bismya.

The result was the discovery of the oldest temple in the world. The walls of the tower soon appeared; the summit was cleared, and the first inscription discovered upon the surface was a brick stamped with the name of Dungi of 2750 B. C. Just beneath it were other bricks bearing the name of Ur-Gur of 2800 B. C.; a little lower appeared a crumpled piece of gold with the name of Naram Sin of 3750 B. C., and just below that level were the large square bricks peculiar to Sargon of 3800 B. C., probably the first of the Semitic kings of Babylonia. Although we had dug but a meter and a half below the bricks of Dungi, we had revealed several strata extending over the period from 2750 B. C. to 3800 B. C., or more than 1000 years, and still 11 meters of earlier ruins lay beneath us. We dug lower; unknown types of bricks appeared, and two and a half meters from the surface we came upon a large platform constructed of the peculiar plano-convex bricks which were the building material of 4500 B. C. Shafts were sunk through this platform and through stratum after stratum of the mud, brick, dirt, ashes and potsherds below. Five and a half meters beneath the surface we discovered a large bronze pin terminating in a spike. At a depth of eight and a half meters were two large urns filled with ashes; two meters below them was a smaller urn, and away down to the desert level, 14 meters from the surface, the ground was strewn with fragments of baked, thrown pottery of graceful design. We were then down among the beginning of things.

The few upper strata of the ruins could be dated from the inscriptions which they contained, but below them was nothing to guide us but the depth of the débris in which the various objects were buried. The upper two and a half meters represented the period 2750-4500 B. C. Then how long a time is represented by the remaining 11 meters of the ruins beneath? No one can say. One may only surmise that the early Mesopotamians who first settled in the plain, and who formed upon the wheel the graceful pottery still found there, lived fully 10,000 years ago, and perhaps earlier. So great was the antiquity of the ruin which we had feared might be modern.

Trenches were dug about the base of the temple tower where there seemed to have been secret passages for the priests. While excavating beneath the west corner of the tower, a bright-eyed Arab excitedly called me to the trench, and pointed to a piece of white marble projecting from the clay. Transferring the agitated Arabs to another part of the ruin, I waited until the work of the day was over, and then, with my own hands, dug out the oldest statue in the world.

The statue is remarkable. Not only is it the oldest statue in the world, but it is the only perfect Babylonian statue yet discovered. The style of its art, its costume, its arms which at the elbows are free from the body, its location when found and the archaic character of its inscription all point to a date not far from 4500 B. C., and justify the assertion that at that remote age Babylonian civilization was at its highest point. The brief inscription, containing a mass of the information for which we had been seeking, gave "Emach" as the name of the temple, "Udnun" as the city in which we were excavating, and "Daud" or David is the Sumerian king whom the statue represents. The names of the temple and city had appeared on the recently discovered Hammurabi code, but the name of the king was unknown excepting as that of the Hebrew David, who lived 3500 years later.

It has long been a theory that the early dwellers of Mesopotamia burned their dead, for though Babylonian graves have been found in abundance, they date from toward the close of the empire. At the south corner of the Bismya temple tower we came upon an oval chamber which had originally been covered with a dome. At one of its ends was a circular platform about six feet in diameter, with a pit beneath it four feet deep. As the pit was cleared, it was found to contain two feet of ashes mixed with the sand which had sifted in. The smoke stains upon the adjoining wall, and the terrific heat to which the bricks of the platform had been subjected, marked it as a crematory.

In the eastern parts of the ruins, which mark the residential portion of the city, little remained save the foundations of houses, and scattered implements. As in every age in Mesopotamia, few houses possessed more than a single room. The thick walls of mud brick admitted the light only through the doorway. The height did not exceed a single story, and the roof was probably flat. Earth served as flooring, and the only remaining furniture is an occasional divan of mud bricks built along the wall. In the larger houses a cistern of clay was built into the floor, and then as now it was the duty of the daughter of the family to fill the earthen jars with the water of the canal in the plain below, and bring it to the cistern. Frequently, too, a house was provided with a system of drainage, which speaks well for the sanitary ideas of that age.

Of the household utensils, few remain. Pots were found in abundance; stone saws, axes and mortars were less common; bronze needles and knives came to light, but were so corroded that they were preserved with difficulty. The occasional discovery of small terra cotta bas-relief suggested a desire to beautify the walls of the houses, and small clay images, probably the household gods, spoke of the occupants' piety.

The Babylonian was essentially a warrior, for most of the bronze objects which the ruins of his home have yielded are spearheads (both flat and round) and arrowheads. About the thick walls with which he fortified his city were found traces of the fierce battles which he had fought. At its outer edge, just where the moat may have been, were thousands of sling balls employed in the wars of those days. Their location shows that they were hurled from without the city at the inhabitants upon the wall, but many of them, striking below their mark, fell into the trench. Though the date of this prehistoric battle is uncertain, its result is apparent.

It seems that the city fell into the hands of the besiegers. Its temple was plundered; the statues were beheaded and thrown from their pedestals, and the chambers of the priests were razed. The fate of the people and their homes could not have differed from that which usually befell oriental cities in time of war. The prosperity of Udnun departed, its civilization came to an end. It was not until 3800 B. C. that Sargon, perhaps one of the first of the Semitic kings in Mesopotamia, built another city upon its ruins.

EDGAR J. BANKS.

GERMANY SUPREME IN THE AIR.

SOME IMPRESSIONS OF AN ENGLISHMAN AT THE BRUSSELS BALLOON RACE.

[Manchester Chronicle:] "You must go to the fête of the balloons; ach, you muzt go to the Parc du Cinquantenaire and zee the 'balloons' of all nations zail to heaven." Thus spoke the waiter in his best Sunday English on the best of all Sundays as I was taking dejenner after high mass at Brussels Cathedral.

And we did go to the Parc, where the aëronauts of Europe were crowning their conference by starting on a long-distance race. A balloon race! I am just like the average Englishman—one balloon skyward is such a novelty that I make my neck ache at the spinal junction by studying the uncanny monster floating above in circumambient ether. I calculate that those two last words would trouble my waiter—but nevertheless I owe him eternal gratitude for inspiring me with the idea to see "la fête des balloons"—because, after all, balloon races are still rare—though the day is toward when we shall travel by airship for our summer vacation until a Marconigram to cloudland recalls the vessel to earth.

All Brussels had been possessed of the idea of going to the park, which was formerly a vast plain for military maneuvers, but is now a miniature sort of Crystal Palace. The workman and his wife and children were there, and the middle classes swarmed the streets abutting on the place where the balloons were anchored. There were folks of all nations, from Jean Crapaud to the fat Mussulman, from an Indian Princess to a "daisy" from Chicago. Brussels is essentially an international city, and was the right rendezvous for an international balloon race.

From early morning the balloons had been inflating themselves. We saw them when they had attained aldermanic proportions. Every balloon seemed to have picked up the bottle labelled "Drink me," and then "swelled wisibly," like "Alice in Wonderland."

There were about thirty balloons anchored round a glass building like a huge conservatory, but they dwarfed the glass house and made the buildings seem mean toy palaces. They looked like a very successful crop of huge watermelons.

Near the entrance gates were two balloons different from all others, inasmuch as their fabric was yellow silk—"jaune citron," the little Belgians called it. Really one never knows why we take fancies. I was fascinated by their topaz-like texture, and I determined to watch "Yellow Jack," as I christened the first of the pair.

When inflation had been fairly well completed, but before the balloons had been monstrously distended with hydrogen, the aëronauts began to send up balloons in miniature—little trial balloons with streamers attached. They were lovely in variety of colors and diverse in shape, and as they mounted the aërial Alps and glistened in the sun they looked like floating jewels and precious stones thrown by the gods on high from the Palace of Truth.

Patience was necessary before the first ascent, but at the last a balloon sailed majestically away, and its graceful departure, borne on a southeasterly breeze over the tops of the houses, and away in the direction of Paris, gave a celestial aspiration to all our noses—especially as there were concomitants.

Hundreds of balloons as large as a kite, and as richly red as a danger signal on a clear night, rose with the first balloon like a host of ministering angels. 'Twas a moving spectacle in the heavens.

As I saw these things in the bright light I thought how man was conquering the world—slowly an 'it pleases—but still conquering down in the dusky depths of the deepest mine, above in the azure of realms of rarer air, and transmitting thoughts fathoms below the bosom of the ocean, and whirling winged words through atmospheric heights from continent to continent.

One was tempted to muse upon what the world would be like a thousand years hence when the wife of an artisan exclaimed:

"John, John! There's another!" And John, without removing his long, hanging Dutch pipe from his lips, watched another balloon, with the aëronauts waving their arms from the car to the multitude, glide away into space. Some of the intervals were trying in length, but we had patience. My companion was anxious to depart. "No," said I; "let's see Yellow Jack sail away." Patience was rewarded. I thought it was when I saw three balloons in the air at once. At one time there were six mighty balloons—all in a row suspended between heaven and earth like gigantic pears—and as one peered down the line they suggested that they were traveling along an aërial avenue for Paris.

Each balloon was labeled with the town of origin, was numbered, and carried the flag of the country it represented. To me as an Englishman—even although Great Britain could not send three balloons so as to enable them to compete as a nation—it was a source of delight to see the Hon. C. S. Rolls in his "Britannia" embark with dignified ease, in his car being Mr. Frank Butler, the founder of the Aëro Club.

Then we saw Usuelli, the soaring Italian who last year sailed over the summit of Mont Blanc. But just when patience was becoming exhausted, away went "Yellow Jack"—the great German balloon of Herr Erbslön—labeled "Pommern"—of course, the Teutonic spelling of Pomerania. This looked most peculiar. It was not of the customary pear shape, 'twas a great golden apple—Atalanta's fatal allurement magnified by a million and sent floating through the air with a message to tell us all not to be eternally groveling on earth looking for money. This colored aërial cruiser from Cologne held me spellbound, especially as it mounted toward the empyrean and seemed to overtake Mr. Rolls.

And "Yellow Jack" won the race. When last I saw the gossamer vessel, with its human freight, it was traveling at considerable altitude and pace. This chromatic trifle, lighter than air, remained aloft for 621 miles. Just take the map and grasp, if possible, the distance of an aërial flight from Brussels across the whole of France to Bayonne, so near to the Pyrennees and the land of Spain. That is a journey for the "mappers" who fly pigeons to trace for their friends on the plan of Europe.

The distance record for unsteerable balloons was 416 miles, established in the Gordon-Bennett Cup. Six years ago two German professors rose in a balloon to a height of 10,800 meters. That has never been equaled. And now a German has captured the long-distance record in aërial flotation. France is supposed to have the best warship for the air—and England is lagging in the rear.

A Swiss, M. de Beauclair, ranked second in the Brussels race with 555 miles, while Prof. Huntingdon, of England, was third with 552 miles, and the Hon. C. S. Rolls, fourth, with 530 miles. Those distances are calculated by trigonometry—"a vol d' oiseau"—as a bird flies.

The Etoile Belge gave an interesting interview on Thursday entitled "In the Blue," being a chat with M. Leon Gheude, one of the Belgian aëronauts, who traveled all through the night and came to grief at Angoulême through his guide rope slipping itself round the trunk of an isolated tree when the balloon was going about seventy miles an hour, and dashed the vessel against some rocks, but they were saved from disaster by some soldiers who were out maneuvering.

Ballooning is the sport of brave men with scientific knowledge. M. Leon Gheude tells how that for nearly sixty hours he was without sleep. He and his companions gulped twenty-four fresh eggs and drank five pints of coffee between them. When his balloon was 3000 meters above earth his face was burned in the sun, while it was freezing in the shadow. The bread they ate was covered with hoar frost.

CHILDREN TO LET.

Quite a flourishing trade is done by the poorer classes of Madrid, who let out their children to beggars at so much per hour. The intending hirer applies to the parents of a likely child; the price is agreed upon, a small amount paid down as a guarantee for the return of the little one, and the beggar forthwith sets out with his human implement of trade to implore the public charity.

The children whose task it is to soften the hearts of the passers-by are required to possess special qualifications. They must have hungry-looking faces, be first-rate criers, and not very ugly, for a good-looking child is more likely to earn extra pennies on account of its pretty face than a less favored competitor.

While the professional beggar and his hapless charge wearily walk the streets of Spain's capital, the father of the child, comfortably seated in a tavern hard by his home, proudly remarks to his better-half, as he contentedly sips his wine: "What a splendid career our Joey has before him! He is hardly three years old, and is already a bone of contention between the one-eyed man of Veneras street and the wooden-legged one of Arlaban! As soon as he grows up we'll make a beggar of him!"—[Heraldo de Madrid.

MUSICAL VEGETABLES.

Paris was invaded yesterday by a Belgian band known as the Cookery Academy.

This band, which is forty strong, is not composed of cooks, but of philanthropists. It is a group of young men and girls who use their spare time for the collection of funds for charitable purposes.

They wear a quaint medieval costume, and their instruments all have the forms of vegetables of all kinds and immense knives, forks, and spoons.

The academy has collected £8000 for various charitable objects within the past few months. They paraded Paris yesterday, and today on behalf of the conscripts whose two years' service is just beginning.—[London Express.

Farming in California—The Land and Its Products.

CONDUCTED BY J. W. JEFFREY, AGRICULTURAL EDITOR.

Deserved Promotion.

THE appointment of C. E. Bemis to fill a vacancy upon the Board of County Horticultural Commissioners reflects great credit upon the Supervisors of Los Angeles county. The new commissioner takes charge of his office fully conversant with the work. He has the required judgment and common sense to make his administration of value to the fruit growers of the county; his observation of insect life is accurate, though not held by him as scientific. Mr. Bemis is capable of giving practical advice to orchardists, and that faculty is worth more to the farmers than anything else they might need at the hands of their commissioner. The Supervisors needed no coaching to secure this appointment, as Mr. Bemis was given unanimous support upon the part of the appointing board.

White Fly Parasites.

WORD comes from George Compere in India that he has discovered the parasite of the white fly. Of course we would rather see this Indian destroyer at work in Florida than to read about it, especially as our information about the new find is so meager. Yet there are plenty of aleyrodes here that do not attack citrus plants, and the importation should be tried on those. There will be none of the aleyrodes citri left for the parasite if the authorities can prevent it. What a boon to Florida it would be, however, if successful. If it wipe out the fly in that State our people would rest free from anticipation of the continued importation. Mr. Compere writes that the parasite will be along about next May.

Dr. Howard writes that most of the parasites of the aleyrodes family abound in the State of California. Whether the native fly destroyers attack the citrus white fly we hope will never be determined here, because it would be suicidal to relax one iota of the policy of extermination placed against the pest at Marysville, Bakersfield and Oroville. However, if the new fly killer comes on time it should be worked out somewhere to the full measure of opportunity, as should every beneficial insect with promise of lessening the damage from the farmer's foes. So should the native parasite of the white fly be given a chance at the citri should the present repressive measures finally fail. I have bred out scores of the native destroyers from one lot of the common greenhouse aleyrodes. This accounts for the scarcity of the latter.

Raisin Housing.

ON THE 17th of October I had the good fortune to see the activities of the raisin-makers along the line from Fresno northward. The raisin men had heard of the three days' rainfall at Los Angeles and were hustling the fruit into the packing-house at a rapid rate, not confining their working hours to daylight by any means. Some of the finest grapes ever seen in this famous district are now on the trays and in the sweat boxes. All along the railroad stations little boys no larger than minutes with voices like gimlets are selling "fine Tokay grapes, five a bag," with the red bunch on top, but all large and juicy. Such a vintage indicates that insect pests and vine disease have not decimated the money-making vineyards.

Table Grapes.

PERHAPS the keenest inquiries upon the minor horticultural industries come from those who would engage in growing table grapes. I have answered many letters on this subject from prospective growers in Southern California, and since visiting Lodi I can see the wisdom of grape men's turning their attention to table-grape production. The vineyardists at Lodi are riding in their own automobiles as a result of profits made within the last few years from the finer grapes. It is very strange that there is so little information in print upon this most interesting topic. I have seen an occasional article giving in detail some of the phases and experiences in table-grape growing. The State commission is trying to get an exhaustive treatise upon this subject, and if secured, it will be produced at the State Fruit Growers' Convention.

It is said there are hundreds of grape farms awaiting the coming of Inyo-county water—situations lavish in everything, including unobstructed sunshine, that is necessary to the production of good grapes for use fresh. These localities are especially numerous in the Los Angeles River Valley from the Arroyo Seco to San Fernando. They are rich beyond measure, and of that quality of fertility that produces fine grapes. A good treatise would be of immense value to the fresh-grape industry, and it should come from some section where financial success has already crowned the farmers' efforts in table-grape growing.

State Convention.

MARYSVILLE has been selected as the place for the meeting of the State Fruit Growers' Convention. This location was named, perhaps, on account of the white fly infection found there last May, and it may be considered a compliment to that city and somewhat in compensation for the suffering inflicted upon the people of Marysville by some one who brought this pest to the city. The programme was partially arranged before the induction of the new State commissioner, and I understand it will be a very comprehensive programme. The time is now short for the completion of the arrangements for this convention, but an active committee at Marysville is working for the proper entertainment of the visitors, including a ride to Oroville, where golden orange growing and gold dredging are carried on in the same field. The trip will reveal the fact that the northern part of the State is doing something in the building of electric-car lines as well as its southern rival. The country up north is now called "Superior California" by the natives, and the people of the region round about the convention site hope to demonstrate to the visitors something of the advantages of that section.

I am sure this convention will be interesting and instructive, for many effective workers in horticulture have volunteered to lend a hand. Several dozen prominent orchardists, scientists and teachers have been easily drafted into this service and the proceedings of that convention will be an addition to the horticultural libraries of the State. The convention will begin on the 2nd day of December.

Storing Onions.

ONE of the big problems in onion raising is the storing of the crop until selling time. Onions cannot ordinarily be sold in large quantities until after the first of December, and meantime they must have some protection. The ideal way is to place them with tops on in a large shed. They cannot be piled over eighteen inches deep nor can they be kept sacked, so that a large amount of room is absolutely necessary to any one going into the onion business on a large scale. It will require about 600 or 800 feet of floor space to store a carload of onions. The bulbs will stand several degrees below freezing point without freezing, so that the storage shed need not be warm, and if the onions are put in with the tops on, they will stand a great deal of cold without injury. In curing onions in the field greater care must be taken with the white varieties than with the reds or yellows. The whites will sunburn more easily than either of the other varieties. When they cannot be stored in sheds, but must be cured in the field, it is a good plan to put them in small piles with a light covering of straw and leave them until they have cured. If it becomes necessary to expose those in the interior to more air this may be done by means of wooden rakes, but the straw should be replaced as a covering to prevent the bulbs from sunburning.—[Denver Field and Farm.

Power of Plants.

THE amount of water which a tree pumps out of the ground for its own use is simply enormous. The botanist Scott declares that a birch tree draws its own weight of water in a single spring. All this huge amount of fluid rises to the leaves, and is given off by them into the air.

Every one must have noticed how a growing tree will burst a stone or brick wall, however well mortared. An ash trunk has been known to raise a boulder weighing three-quarters of a ton. The strength of trees having hard, woody trunks is not so wonderful; what is surprising is the force which a soft vegetable can exert during its period of growth.

Even such humble growths as the fungi can and do exercise a Samson-like strength. The ordinary cellar fungus will lift large slabs of stone flooring, and has been known to burst through an inch of solid asphalt.

Onion Shortage Eastward.

JEROME B. RICE CO., Cambridge, N. Y., says in its annual report concerning the onion crop this year: "There has been a falling off in acreage in the United States of something over 2000 acres and a total shortage in yield of quite half a million bushels as compared with the crop of a year ago, and taking it as a whole we might say that the quality of the stock being harvested is hardly up to the average. As a rule, the onions average small in size and show a considerable percentage of 'thicknecks' and picklers, and this is especially true of the West, where they suffered from extreme wet and cold weather in the spring, which retarded growth, and an abundance of weeds during the growing season, all of which is not conducive to the production of first-class storage stock. The crop is fully three weeks late in maturing, and many of our correspondents report the onions as still green and growing."

The Real Arab Horse.

THE Arab horse is virtually a pony, standing 14.2 hands, oftener under than over, observes a correspondent in the New Orleans Picayune. He is not fast, even at the gallop; indeed, he is slow. He is a very poor trotter, both as regards speed and action, a bad hack, and cannot walk without continually sticking his toes in the ground. He is totally unfitted for harness, and is uncomfortable to ride except at the gallop; this is his natural gait, and in it his movement is free, smooth, delightful and easy. As regards his general makeup and formation he is perfect, and his constitutional and physical soundness is wonderful. He has great bone substance, vigor, resolution, strength, staying powers, courage, boldness, the soundest legs and feet and extraordinary lung power, which is due to the atmospheric conditions and free life to which he has been used from time immemorial; extraordinary eyesight, good temper, mild manners, tractability, instinct and sagacity, and for his size is a wonderful weight carrier.

It is this extraordinary constitution and anatomical perfection and this magnificent courage, nerve and mettle of the Arab steed which have made the thoroughbred of today what he is, and not his speed, which has only existed in songs.

The Arab attaches far greater importance to bottom and sobriety than he does to what might be called "artistic beauty." Of such a horse he will say: "Let us not be in a hurry. Let us see him work. He might be only a cow, with a lion's hide on his back." When you consider what their idea of bottom is, it may be sufficient to know that it means a horse should be able to travel with a man on his back, a change of clothing, food for rider and horse, his gun, flag, etc., from sixty to ninety miles a day for four or five days in succession, and after a couple of days' rest be able to repeat the task, and this under a sweltering sun. Further, it is not uncommon for pure Arab horses to cover from 125 to 150 miles in the twenty-four hours, and this without food or water until his journey is finished, and then the Arab, when he dismounts, wants to see his horse shake himself and neigh loud and shrill and paw the ground for his food.

Asparagus Culture.

ASPARAGUS is not so readily grown as radishes and turnips, at the start, but since one planting endures ten or twelve years, and often longer, it pays for the extra care required for the first year or two. It is not necessary to start a plantation from the seed, as there are plenty of reliable persons who make a business of supplying one or two-year-old plants at a very reasonable price. In a small way asparagus can be grown in beds four feet wide. It can be grown on a large scale in the field like any other crop, with rows four feet apart with plants about eighteen inches distance in the row.

A good sandy loam is the best soil for asparagus. The soil should be deeply broken, working in a liberal application of ground bone, mixed bone from dust up to pieces the size of a common pea or even larger. With the bone also hardwood ashes, a peck of ashes or lime to every fifteen or twenty square feet. Lay off broad furrows two feet apart if in beds and deep enough so that the tops of the plants will be three inches below the surface. Trim off all long and broken roots and spread out the remaining roots evenly in every direction in the trench; throw in a little soil and tamp down firmly, sprinkling in at the same time bone meal freely. Finish with covering the plants evenly. One-year-old plants I think are the best, but two-year-old may be used if transplanted properly. Weeds must be kept down by cultivation.—[Agricultural Epitomist.

Change by Excessive Fertility.

IT has recently been discovered that, by excessively fertilizing the soil, varieties of fruits and vegetables may be permanently changed in character and quality. This reminds me of an incident which occurred many years ago, and which has been unaccountable until hearing of this new method of changing varieties. At the rear of my home was situated a poultry-house, and near it a poultry yard. The previous owner had kept large flocks of poultry in this house and yard for many years, thus the ground there was about as rich as it could possibly be made.

Close to one corner of the poultry yard thus enriched was standing an apple tree in full bearing, supposed to be a Baldwin. The roots of this apple tree extended into the poultry yard, and also beneath the poultry-house, thus this apple tree was overfed to a remarkable degree.

The first year in this place, this apple tree bore heavily. The fruit was large and fine, and had every appearance of being Baldwins. I placed a portion of these apples in a barrel in the cellar, where they were overlooked until the next April, when I found them in perfect condition, more beautifully colored and of finer quality than I had ever seen before in the Baldwin. I have since propagated from the tree, which I called "Great Baldwin" on account of its superior quality.

Now the question arises, is it not possible that the character of the fruit from this tree was changed by the overfertilization of the soil in which the tree was growing?—[Green's Fruit Grower.

North vs. South.

CALIFORNIA is a large State, but it is too small to harbor any attempt to sectionalize the fruit industry of the commonwealth. Fortunately the late attempt to array one part of the State against the other fell so flat that is will be a lesson for some time, teaching that no one of intelligence believes in the idea of opposition of interests. One thing especially opposed to the cultivation of sectional prejudice, is the necessity of cooperation in the handling of the insect problem. If there is not unity of policy on this point throughout the State all will be in danger. If any one tries to tell you that there is a north, or a south in opposition on anything relating to our paramout industry, just tap your forehead significantly and go on your way.

Gardening in California—Flower and Vegetable.

THE simplest and easiest way for any one to solve the fertilizer problem from the gardening point of view is to buy a bag of ready-mixed fertilizers, and thousands of people do this every year. It is not, however, the intelligent nor the economical way. Economy, however, does not cut as much of a figure in the small home garden as in farm operations or in professional fruit and vegetable gardening. We spend more than $50,000,000 a year on fertilizers, but at a rough guess it is doubtful whether the fertilizers bought for home and garden use would amount to more than a million or two.

If I had only $5 to spend on my garden this year, I think I should put $4 of it into fertilizers and $1 into seeds and plants. The reason why the general run of gardens in this country have only ordinary success is that a person commonly thinks first of the plants that he wants to eat, while the needs of the soil come afterward. Year after year I make the same old mistake of buying a great variety of seeds; most of which are forgotten in the spring rush, or if I get the rare things planted the chances are that they never survive, or drag out a miserable existence. Every single plant in a garden ought to be a success, and the only way to have a successful garden is to have the soil rich. There is a great deal more satisfaction in having a few sturdy plants that are simply bursting with health and vigor, than half-starved specimens of rarities and novelties. Any one who reads this magazine ought not to be satisfied with a garden that is simply "good enough." It ought to be a very good garden, and the only way to have a very good garden is to enrich the soil by fertilizers or manures.—[Garden Magazine.

Value of Wood Ashes.

PROF. SCHUTT of the Canadian Department of Agriculture has been making some exhaustive experiments showing the heavy value of wood ashes to farm and garden crops. After giving the analysis of the ash of rock maple, or what we know as sugar tree, which contains over 12 per cent. of potash, about 3 per cent. of phosphoric acid, and about 42.5 per cent. of lime, he says:

"Good samples of commercial wood ashes will contain, as a rule, from 5 to 6 per cent. of potash and from 1.5 to 2 per cent. of phosphoric acid. It is thus seen that the sample under consideration is much superior, as regards its most valuable element, potash.

"We have frequently in our publications called attention to the fertilizing value of wood ashes, especially as a source of potash. Without unnecessarily repeating what we have said as to the composition of ashes and the crops for which they are best suited, it may be advantageous to point out that while the commercial value of ashes will depend upon the potash and phosphoric acid content, the manurial value will be considerably higher. The presence of a large amount of lime, the mild alkalinity of the ash, the particular combination in which two elements of plant food are held, are all, undoubtedly, factors that enhance the value of wood ashes as a fertilizer. In other words, the benefits derived from their use include, in addition to the supplying of mineral plant food, the correction of sourness, the conversion of injurious iron compounds into harmless forms, the encouragement of nitrification, and the general improvement of the tilth of the soil. It has frequently been noticed that soil to which ashes have been applied is much better able to resist the injurious effect of a protracted drought than adjoining land that has not been so treated."

Bulbs for Spring Flowers.

PLANT hyacinths, tulips and daffodils five to six inches apart. The poet's narcissus and some others that have comparatively small bulbs, and also the lilies, need only to be four inches apart. Snowdrops, crocuses, scillas and other small bulbs may be set two and one-half to three inches apart.

Hyacinths, tulips and daffodils of the ordinary kinds are covered four inches, but the narcissi with the largest bulbs (such as Emperor, Horsfieldii and Sir Watkin) thrive better when planted an inch deeper. Plant Spanish and English iris three inches deep. Crocus, snowdrop, chionodoxa, scilla, winter aconite and other small bulbs require two and one-half inches of soil over them.—[Garden Magazine.

New Theory of Evolution.

PROF. HUGO DE VRIES, director of the Botanical Gardens, Amsterdam, who disputes Darwin's theory of the "origin of species," explained his views at length in the lecture hall of the New York Botanical Garden last summer.

Prof. De Vries differs from Darwin in asserting that a species of plant may be seen to develop at once from the parent plant, while Darwin's theory demands many generations, marked by innumerable minor differences and years of time.

He bases his conclusions upon actual experiment, and although his earlier investigations covered a wide field, his best and most conclusive results were obtained through careful culture and observation of the evening primrose, Oenothera. Twelve new species derived from the original were described at length by Prof. De Vries, and their differences were further illustrated by colored plates and lantern slides.

Dr. De Vries's discoveries led to the establishment of a laboratory at Cold Spring Harbor, where the investigation of evolution in both the plant and animal kingdoms will be conducted for at least half a century at the expense of the Carnegie Institution. Experiments conducted by Dr. D. T. MacDougal at the New York Botanical Garden since Prof. De Vries presented the results of his researches to the world of science, have already confirmed several important features of Dr. De Vries's discoveries.—[American Gardening.

Filling Plant Vases.

THE same class of plants of a larger size are used in our rustic baskets and iron vases, so many thousands of which are now used in our cemeteries. Perhaps some of my readers are in this laborious business. There is really not a great margin in the vase business, but when you get a fair price for the "care" or watering and you have a good number, there is a good remuneration for your work providing you have enough of it to do.

We have one style of filling that we call "good mixed." That means that we use a variety of plants and use our own taste. There is generally a Dracaena indivisa, a small phoenix or canna in the center. All palms, excepting the phoenix, burn with us when exposed to cast-iron vase conditions. Besides the edge, or drooping plants, we use double zonale geraniums, silver leaf geraniums, distinct coleus like Verschaffelti and Golden Bedder, achyranthes, centaurea, and if in a shady position under trees, Rex begonias and fuchsias. Don't put pelargoniums or feverfew into a vase; for that purpose they are a fraud. For large vases the English ivy is the best of all droopers. Many people are tired of a mixture of plants and want their vase filled with a solid color of geraniums, or perhaps Begonia Vernon.—[Florists' Exchange.

Lettuce Under Glass.

GROWING lettuce under glass has become a very important industry around Denver as well as other large cities. The seed is sown about this time of year for the holiday trade. For the seed-bed 2½-inch flats are filled with sifted garden loam, mixed with one-third its bulk of clean sand. This is firmed moderately and the seed sown one-eighth inch deep in drills two inches apart. When the plants are one and one-half inches high they are picked out into similar flats, but of richer soil, and set at distances of two inches each way. After an inch or so more of growth has been added, the plants are set in a bench six inches apart each way, but alternating in the rows. The plants in flats are watered with a fine sprinkler, using great care against watering the young plants too freely, and the ventilation is given proper attention. For the plants in the bench the best practice seems to be to sprinkle for a week or so and then water between the rows with a full stream from a hose, doing no spraying. A little care in the preparation of the soil will give an even distribution of the water. Watering thoroughly when needed seems to give better results than applying water too frequently.—[Field and Farm.

The Garden Compost Heap.

IN NUMEROUS instances plant diseases are spread from the garden compost heap, on account of the gardener throwing old and diseased plants into the compost heap to make manure for the next year's use.

The experiment station men have discovered that corn smut, potato scab and cabbage club root are many times caused from the manure, or compost heap. Some gardeners will burn all affected plants rather than to utilize them for manure and have them become mixed with their soil. They believe that such a practice of putting them in a pile will result in the multiplication of diseases and also of insect pests.

As a general rule it is not best to spread refuse of one crop on land that is designated for the same crop, whether in the garden or field. Onion refuse should never be spread on land that is calculated for onions, on account of the danger of propagating the smut: Cabbage refuse should not be spread on cabbage land on account of the danger of propagating club root and black rot, and so on for all sorts of refuse. Burn it and destroy its power to progagate disease in your gardens and on your farms, or else put it on soil that is to be planted to some other crop.—[W.

The Oldest Rose Bush.

It would doubtless be a hard task to prove which is the oldest rosebush in the world, although we are willing to grant that it does not exist in California or the United States. The claim is made that it grows at Hildesheim, a small city of Hanover, and was planted on a church by Charlemagne, but this is only tradition. Absolute proof does exist however, that it is more than three centuries of age. It was mentioned in a poem written in 1690, and was then of considerable fame; it was also mentioned in a work seventeen years earlier. At present it's size is about forty feet high and of the same spread.

PALACE TO POORHOUSE.

ROMANTIC AND SUMPTUOUS LIFE OF ENGLISHMAN ENDS IN POVERTY.

From a Staff Correspondent.

LONDON, Oct. 5.—Once commander-in-chief of the forces of Burmah, Burmese Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and English gentleman by birth and education, one more man with a past has just ended his days at the Enfield poorhouse. It is the old story of how greatness comes to nothing, and nobody knows why.

Maj. Robert Adeane Barlow was the grandson of Admiral Sir Robert Barlow and Gen. Robert Adeane, Member of Parliament for Cambridgeshire, and an equerry of King George IV—that was what he came from. Rugby School, under the famous Dr. Arnold, and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was a classmate of Lord Derby and Sir William Harcourt—that was what he went to.

After college, he set out for Brazil to manage a big business concern at Rio de Janeiro. In six years he was back in England again, only to be sent out to India and Ceylon to persuade the mandarins to allow the opening of a railroad through Burmah to China. When he got as far as Burmah, the King took a great fancy to him—so great a fancy that he made him commander-in-chief of his army of 12,000 men.

Then the major suddenly became the great man of Burmah. He was made Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, he was given a gorgeous palace to live in, fitted up with all the splendors of the East; he was given two elephants to take turns carrying him, and his position demanded that three gold umbrellas should be carried before him whenever he went forth in state.

The King offered him also the felicity of 500 wives, an offer which the major was always careful to mention that he refused. He was the first man, the King said, who had ever been so silly. But he did take a salary of $30,000 a year, and he was commissioned to value the royal treasure, which he assessed at $10,000,000.

But the major soon got tired of this particular splendor, and sought fresh fields. So he moved away; and before he knew it, he was major-general in the Abyssinian army. Then he was captured and imprisoned in Egypt, and his case was the subject of questions in the House of Commons.

That was in the '70s. In 1880 he came home to the little English village of Enfield, where the poet Keats once lived. He asked permission to go out with Gen. Gordon to Khartoum, but the general refused. That was the beginning of all his troubles. Everything went wrong after that. His family died, his money disappeared, and at last in 1895 he entered the shelter of the poorhouse, which he never left except to drive with old friends.

To the master of the poorhouse, who knew something of his amazing career, he was always a polished, courteous old gentleman who rarely referred to his past, but whose education, manners and breeding told their own story. His chief recreations were backgammon and chess. He never gave the slightest trouble, never grumbled or seemed discontented. On special nights he used to wear some order on his coat which he called the Star of India.

Two pictures he always carried in his pocket, one a portrait of himself seated on a white elephant in full state regalia, the other of a handsome woman whom he spoke of as his daughter, who, he said, had married a prince of the house of Bonaparte.

A HEART'S UNFILLED LONGING.

One of my dreams has at last come true,
  But, alas! now that it is here.
I am not quite pleased with the fabric of fact;
  I am not quite content, I fear.

I do not mean the dreams of the night
  That come on slumber's dark wings;
But the fanciful dreams of my waking hours
  That grew from the heart of things.

I used to dream of a home of my own,
  And plan all the things to be there—
The pictures, the books, the cosy nooks,
  The fire, and my easy chair.

In dreams I would fill the house with song
  As I worked in this home of my own;
But now that I have it, I cannot sing,
  For I live in the house alone.

In the days that I dreamed, love walked by my side.
  And the skies were blue above me;
But the home I have gained is but four square walls,
  For there's no one there now to love me.

Influence of Mental Attitude.

FOLLOWING are extracts from an interesting and instructive paper, by Dr. Charles Hoyt, of Chillicothe, Ohio, of which the editor is indebted to W. C. Patterson, of Los Angeles, who is a close friend, and was formerly a patient, of Dr. Hoyt:—

"Mental attitudes are the greatest power in the world today for good or evil, and the power behind the throne in all the great enterprises in the world of science, finance, commerce, government, religion, moral uprisings, trusts and business movements generally. These great mental attitudes that produce the forces that move the world are the result of innumerable suggestions, that reach the masses from every point of the compass, and from an innumerable number of sources. Sometimes movements of great magnitude have their origin in the mental attitude of one person, centered upon some particular subject, and are carried forward by the suggestions given off from that mind to others, which form an endless chain of thought, which finally encircles the world. Such instances might be cited as the Murphy movement, Dowieism, Eddyism, and dozens of other isms, 'pathies and movements for good or evil, that have spread from pole to pole, and have had their origin in the mental attitude of some one person. Other great movements have had their origin from a great variety of sources, of which the newspapers form no small part. The daily and hourly suggestions contained in the great mass of literature coming from the press of the country, serve to mold the opinions of the people, and produce the mental attitudes necessary for the carrying forward of the great movements that sweep the country from one end to the other. Before any great thought or discovery can take root and grow, the people must be got into the right mental attitude to receive it, and this is brought about by suggestions emanating from one to another by personal contact and by reading the printed matter sent broadcast from the press of the country every day. . . .

"In the struggle for supremacy between heredity and environment, the latter is likely to gain the victory. I am a most firm believer in heredity, and that blood will tell, but without proper surroundings, that will furnish the proper suggestions to stimulate and arouse, latent powers may remain hidden and unknown both to ourself and to the world. Men and women are what they are, not so much on account of their ancestry, as of their circumstances and surroundings. Great men and women have, as a rule, been surrounded by environments and suggestions that have made them great. . . .

"My study and observation teach me that nearly every person, no matter what his station in life may be, has within himself more power, more intelligence, more usefulness and ability than he has ever been able to express. This is because of his or her lack of knowledge of the greater self, to inspire and build within themselves a radiant center of personal energy, that will inevitably produce a mental attitude bringing to each and every one greater health, wealth and bodily comfort, success in worthy undertakings and a happier daily life.

"We should therefore endeavor to build within ourselves a radiant center of energy, which will, by careful study, bring about a mental attitude that will cause the sun to shine daily into our lives, as well as those of others, with whom we come in contact, in the everyday walks of life.

"The one thing most needed in this world is courage. In obedience to the exhortation of the Lord: "Be of good courage," we must conquer fear; for men who succeed are not craven or shaken by fear, but with dauntless spirits have risen superior to every obstacle and every danger. Why was Washington so calm, so confident, so invincible? Because he triumphed over fear. What has transformed the boundless West into a paradise, but courage—in other words, the mental attitude to do or to die. The mental attitude of the Japanese has made it possible for them to triumph over every obstacle, and over overwhelming majorities, as did Washington and his followers, in the early and trying days of our own cherished country. . . .

"How few men get as much out of life as they would be capable of getting, if they possessed correct mental attitudes, so that they could eliminate fear and morbid influences from their minds, and not climb imaginary hills, or borrow trouble. Nearly all the trouble in this world is borrowed. The evil results of this constant borrowing of troubles is almost as bad as the habit some people have of borrowing money from the bank, and certainly a great deal more unnecesssary.

"A writer has said: 'Men pay great respect to musty, rusty, shelf-worn aphorisms. They are apt to regard them as expressions of fixed laws of nature and potent factors in life. A clear perception of the affairs of life should teach a man that if, through the mistakes of inexperience, vice or indolence, the first flood tide is missed, the next is equally available.'

"An aphorism of Shakespeare that has been of immeasurable injury to the world is this:

> " 'There is a tide in the affairs of men,
> Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
> Omitted, all the voyage of their life
> Is bound in shallows and in miseries.'

"Tramps, vagrants and desperates are fond of quoting this assumed wisdom.

"Another writer says: 'There is an ebb and flow of the tides of the ocean twice in twenty-four hours. The mariner who misses one ebb tide does not for that reason abandon his voyage, nor does he, for that reason, run his sail into a shallow. He simply, wisely waits for the next flood. So it is in the affairs of men. They ebb and flow many times in a lifetime. So if there is any logic in the analogy between the two tides, the lesson is, man should be full of hope and not of despair.

" 'Because you have let many opportunities of bettering your condition in mind, body, spirit and finances 'get away from you,' in years gone by, it is not too late for a new start. Even a small beginning of a good career will greatly aid in the next well-considered start.' . . .

"From a health point of view, mankind generally has been very thoughtless about mental states and attitudes, though giving great attention to the study of the various organs of the body.

"We need, however, to look further into the structure of man than the various organs of the body, to understand why every mental attitude has its influence for good or ill upon the health of the body. When we consider how strongly and wonderfully constructed the human body is, we will appreciate how important is the matter of healthy-mindedness. We will then be impressed with the great value of an active health center of energy and correct mental attitude.

"The sub-conscious mind is an important factor in determining our health, comfort and happiness, as it controls organic life through the organic nervous system, and therefore every mental attitude has its corresponding influence upon the organs and conditions of the body.

"Advertising has become one of the chief factors in our great commercial activities. Every known disease is pictured and exaggerated and reviewed in the most suggestive and fear-inspiring manner, and by every possible method; not only by the popular press, but upon every fence, stump, tree and barn in this broad land. Man's susceptibility to disease, his weaknesses and limitations are emphasized and exaggerated in all the channels of popular print, until it would seem that civilized mankind were all sick, and struggling under a load of disease. You cannot make a turn in the road or look up and down the street or seek the important news of the day, without having disease, disease flaunted before your vision, until you begin to feel that the whole world must be sick and in distress.

"Now, on the other hand, how little you see in print or otherwise that is suggestive of health, cheer, optimism and your own greatness and self-sufficiency! Commercialism has made capital out of your very fears, and obscured your larger self and nature's true and efficient remedies, which are so abundant and at your command when you have eliminated fear and worry from your mental atmosphere. Some minds are like the purest mountain streams, that ripple and sparkle and carry with them peace, pleasure, health and a new inspiration to live and enjoy all the good things of this life. On the other hand, there are many dingy, dark, cold, musty minds, that fill one's soul with forebodings, as upon entering musty rooms, into which God's sunshine has seldom penetrated. This flaunting of disease constantly before the eyes of the people, by every form and method known to the sharp-brained quacks and proprietors of patent medicines, who have learned by experience the value of advertising, has been the means of producing a great army of introspective, susceptible invalids, nearly every household being blessed with one or more of them, who, by their fears, forebodings and complaints, make life a burden for every one about them.

"What a Godsend it would be if they could be taught to make proper suggestions to themselves, as well as to their friends, and instead of saying, when asked how they feel by those they meet: 'Oh, I feel tolerably well,' or 'I have a pain here or there,' or 'This is wrong,' would say, even at the expense of the exact truth, 'I feel first-class,' 'I was never better in my life,' or some similar expression, thus making a good, healthful suggestion to themselves, instead of saying something that will have the opposite effect. Constant dropping wears away a stone, and constant suggestion makes an impression for good or evil upon the mind. There is no mind, however strong, that is proof against the marvelous power.

"Our Puritan ancestors, while good people and full of enthusiasm in the service of God, were, as Artemus Ward said about the coon, "peculiar cusses." The fundamental tenet of their religion was, that whatever was pleasurable was necessarily sinful. From Baxter's utterances, for instance, it would seem that the only pleasurable emotion which he considered at all right and legitimate was the holy joy that all other sects and beliefs were destined to suffer eternal torment in the next world. Public amusements, dancing, games, laughter and pleasures of every sort came under the ban, and they even sought to place limitations upon the parental love, if a little too pronounced, as being displeasing in the sight of a jealous God. As the little Puritan child said to her mother, when refused the second piece of pie: "Oh, mamma! it seems as though everything in this world that is real nice is either wicked or indigestible." This expresses, in a nutshell, the true situation

Care of the Body.

the minds of a great many persons—that food is unwholesome in proportion to its palatability.

Again, the popular idea of medicine was derived from the same puritanical source. Hence, the efficiency of medicine was measured by its nastiness. No medicine that was pleasant to the taste was considered of any therapeutic value. The old Thomsonian system of medicine was devised with special reference to that principle. In the Thomsonian Materia Medica, No. 1, stood that supreme herbal abomination known to botanists as lobelia inflata. If that herb had been selected to stand at the head of the list solely because of its nasty taste, no better selection could have been made. No human stomach could retain a dose of No. 1 more than five minutes, providing the patient had vitality enough to throw it off, and if he survived the trying ordeal, a favorable prognosis was made, because a patient who could survive the dose must necessarily have a strong constitution.

Diet and medicines were not the only tortures inflicted on patients by doctors in early times, for they practiced upon the principle that whatever was gratifying to the patients must necessarily be inhibited. In cases of fever, patients must be kept in a close, hot room, and not be allowed to drink cold water, or even indulge in the thought of ice. Why? No one was ever able to give a better reason than that fresh air, cold water or ice, would have given comfort and pleasure to the patient. Intelligent physicians of the present time are often seemingly careless of a sick person's diet, because they have learned by experience that many times the patients' desires and cravings furnish a safe guide to go by in prescribing what this or that patient shall eat. [If the appetite is normal yes. But how many civilized people after generations of wrong living have a normal appetite? Ed.] Besides, nearly every article of diet formerly considered improper and indigestible has been found to be perfectly safe and wholesome, when taken by any one enjoying a good healthy mentality. . . .

For instance, watermelons at one time were supposed to be sure death or a terrible case of cholera morbus. Fortunately for the watermelon trade and the rest of the world generally, it was discovered some years ago that there is absolutely nothing in the constituent elements of watermelon to justify its bad reputation. The celebrated Dr. Tanner experimented with it and found it was more easily digested than any other known product of the soil, and on this account he chose it as the very best article of food to use in breaking his forty days' fast. . . .

I might go on and name similar instances of indigestible articles almost without number that have been proven to be perfectly safe articles of food for any healthy stomach, but it is not necessary to do so to prove my position. If I were called upon to name the most prolific source of suggestions adverse to health, I should unhesitatingly say that it is the newspaper literature relating to diet. The exasperating feature of it is that not one newspaper article in a hundred concerning diet is written by any one who knows anything about the subject. They are generally written by young men or young ladies who are learning the trade of newspaper writers. Their hignest ambition is to write something that will be extensively quoted and copied by other papers, whereupon they proceed to guess out a long list of articles of diet that are unhealthy and indigestible. In order to be entirely original and startling, they generally select one or more articles of food that are especially popular in the community, and tell their readers how they are slowly but surely sapping the foundations of their vitality, besides causing some terrible disease of the stomach. [Dr. Woods Hutchinson, for instance. Ed.] One of the wise sayings of the celebrated Dr. Abernathy was that 'when a man begins seriously to dissect himself he will soon be a fit subject for the undertaker.' This is what the average reader does, as soon as he reads a newspaper item on diet. That is to say, the next time he indulges in an article of food inveighed against he proceeds to institute a series of introspective observations, with special reference to the behavior of his stomach after partaking of that forbidden article. He is generally rewarded by finding just what he is looking for, and proceeds to have all the symptoms and conditions described in the newspaper. After two or three more trials of the same thing he becomes thoroughly convinced of the truth of all he has read and proceeds to lecture his family and friends on the particular articles of diet, the result being that he finally succeeds in getting them banished from the household bill of fare.

The next newspaper article attacks some other kind of food, and so on through the whole list, the result being one or more confirmed dyspeptics in every family. This is the way dyspeptics are created, nine times out of ten. The stomach becomes atrophied from lack of use, not from over-indulgence in indigestible food. It atrophies precisely as any other organ of the body will, from lack of use. The only way to give it exercise is to give it plenty to do, by eating a reasonable amount of good food, taking care to avoid those mental conditions which interfere with the normal action of the stomach."

Commenting upon the above article, so far as it refers to diet—and to further references, for which no space could be found, such as a defense of the Great American Pie—the editor of the Care of the Body begs to remark as follows, to wit: To ignore the importance of the bodily functions is as shortsighted and foolish as to ignore the power of the mind. Therefore the editor does not agree with Dr. Hoyt, when he says that if you think so you can eat as you please.

It is quite true that much foolishness is printed on the subject of diet, in the press, both lay and medical. The medical press especially, for "regular" physicians—with a few creditable exceptions—are notoriously ignorant regarding the foundation of food, as it affects health and disease.

It is quite true that it is a great mistake to be always worrying about what goes to your "tummy," and what goes on there. That is the other extreme from the "regular" "Eat what you like," or "Eat what seems to suit you." Poor humanity runs to extremes. The wise man setties, once for all, upon what he believes to be a rational and wholesome dietary, and then dismisses the subject from his thoughts. Habit will make it the most delightful to him.

Do not, however, lose sight of the fact that man is what he eats. "As a man thinketh, so is he," say the "New Thoughters," but the thoughts depend on the food. There is a certain kind of food that is natural to man, tending to health—to physical and mental vigor—and to long life, and there are foods that tend to make the body a fit breeding ground for disease.

The vast importance of diet is now generally recognized by some of the foremost physicians of the world. In time it will be further recognized as the foundation of all reform—physical, mental and moral reform.

Oh yes, we know that some people reach old age, and are apparently well, on a most unorthodox diet. Also, we often read of centenarians who have drunk whisky or smoked, or both, since they were young. Shall we, then, recommend whisky and tobacco as aids to long life? These people, in a great majority of cases, have otherwise led plain, sensible lives. Their forefathers—who didn't use whisky and tobacco to excess—handed down to them good constitutions. Their children—if they have any—will not be able to indulge in such excesses, and if they do, the children of those children are likely to be physical, mental and moral degenerates. Finally, these people themselves will not have lived on so high a plane as they might. There is a great difference between living and existing.

And the damage done in the world by wrong diet is ten thousand times greater than the damage done by alcohol or nicotine, because a vast majority of "civilized" people eat wrong—improper food, or too much food—and only a percentage use alcohol or nicotine, while those eat wrong also.

As to pie, a mixture of emasculated white flour, hog fat and cooked fruit makes an indigestible substance than can only be "negotiated" in the strongest stomach, and as food can only be acceptable to those, like Dr. Woods Hutchinson, who claim that white flour and pork are the basis of American civilization.

But, you say again, our New England forefathers have eaten pie, and douganuts, and baked beans, for generations, yes, and see how many of their descendants are coming to California to seek relief from consumption and other diseases to which they have inherited a tendency.

"Be sure your sin will find you out," whether it takes the form of an "error of the mortal mind" or errors of the mortal body.

Medical Monopoly.

FOLLOWING is an article, showing the injustice of the present State medical law. It is furnished, at the request of the editor, to the Care of the Body, by Miss P. S. Michelsen, of Los Angeles, who, as stated last week, has made a special study of medical laws, and has taken up the cudgels for practitioners of non-drug schools, who are now being prosecuted and persecuted by the California State Board of Medical Examiners:

"There has been said much of late as to whether or not certain systems of treating the sick were legal. Let me preface my remarks by quoting from the statute which went into effect last May:

"'Section 6. Three forms of certificates shall be issued by said board, under the seal thereof and signed by the president and secretary: First, a certificate authorizing the holder thereof to practice medicine and surgery; second, a certificate authorizing the holder thereof to practice osteopathy; third, a certificate authorizing the holder thereof to practice any other system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted not referred to in this section.'

"Therefore, all systems must be recognized by the Board of Medical Examiners., But, with Prometheus, 'I mistrust the gifts of the gods.'

"For 'all applicants for a certificate must file a diploma from some legally-chartered college, the requirements of which shall have been at the time of granting such diploma in no particular less than that prescribed by the Association of American Medical Colleges for that year.'

"The examination shall be upon the following fundamental subjects, to wit: 'Anatomy, histology, gynecology, pathology, obstetrics, general diagnosis, hygiene, etc.' 'Applicants who failed to meet the above requirements must be rejected.'

"All examining boards must act by virtue of some statute whose object and aim is to protect the public from incompetent and unscrupulous practitioners.

"Prior to May 1, 1907, physicians and surgeons were examined by a board composed of members of their own school. In addition to the subjects at present required, they were examined upon therapeutics, materia medica, and surgery, and the theory and practice of medicine and surgery. Only members of their particular school of medicine could participate in this part of the examination. The osteopaths were also examined by a special board, and upon the additional subjects of the theory and practice of osteopathy.

"Contrast the past with the present statute. Then each applicant was thoroughly and practically examined as to his standard and practice, by men competent and learned in the theories of the several schools. The public could then feel that, at least to some extent, the applicant had demonstrated his ability to practically apply the theories of his system. What guarantee of competency has the public, since the present statute went into effect? Absolutely none! What individual, who, because he knows the rules of chemistry, or the theory of bacteriology, is competent to perform a surgical operation, or administer poisonous drugs? What guarantee has the public that the various remaining schools designated as 'all other,' etc., are more than quacks, as there are only physicians, surgeons and osteopaths represented upon the board? Where is the protection to the 'dear public' against incompetent practitioners of the 'mallet cure,' when we bear in mind that the only subject in the examination of the present State Board is anatomy, and further recall that not a member of the board knows any of the remaining theories of the chiropractors, and are hopelessly at sea as to the theory and practice of adjusting the spine, and wielding the mallet, as taught and practiced by chiropractors.

"As it is, no applicants except physicians, surgeons and osteopaths, can secure certificates. All others are rejected, because there are no other schools whose standard is in any way similar to that of the standard of the Association of American Medical Colleges. Thereby, they seek to destroy, by indirect means, a right which they are unable to confiscate by direct attack.

"The statute is an ingenious invasion of vested rights. As well demand that a sculptor pass a painter's examination in order to be permitted to be an artist, as to ask the non-medical, non-surgical schools to pass an examination in no way competent to test the applicant's fitness to practice his profession.

"The act is too sweeping. Besides, the Legislature could no more enact that the 'practice of medicine and surgery' shall mean 'practice without medicine and surgery' than it could provide that 'two and two make five,' because it cannot change a physical fact.

"'The fundamental principle upon which liberty is based in free and enlightened government is equality under the law of the land. It has, accordingly, been everywhere held that liberty, as that term is used in the Constitution, means not only freedom of the citizen from servitude and restraint, but is deemed to embrace the right of every man to the free use and enjoyment of his powers and faculties, and to adopt and pursue such vocation and calling as he may choose, subject only to the restraints necessary to secure the common welfare.'

"As was held in Minnesota vs. Barber, 133 U. S. 319, 'The presumption that a statute was enacted in good faith, for the purpose expressed in the title, namely, to protect the health of the people of the State, cannot control the final determination of the question, whether it is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. There may be no purpose upon the part of a Legislature to violate the provisions of that instrument, and yet, a statute enacted by it, under the power of law, may, by its necessary operation be destructive of rights granted or secured by the Constitution. In such cases, the courts must sustain the supreme law of the land, by declaring the statute unconstitutional and void.'"

The Bed Cure.

IT is said that Mark Twain does all his writing in bed, and does not get up until about 11:30. He claims that this is what keeps him young.

He is doubtless right. There is no cure like the rest cure. Many an overworked man would benefit much more by going to bed for a week—first taking down his telephone receiver, and giving orders to refuse admission to everybody except intimate friends—than by "galivanting" off to the seaside, the mountains or the springs. Try it.

* * *

Christian Science Versus Drugs.

A CHRISTIAN SCIENTIST and his wife, in New Jersey, were recently found guilty of manslaughter, for letting a 7-year-old child die without medical treatment.

The numerous cures undoubtedly effected under "Christian Science" treatment are due, mainly, to two causes. First: The giving up of all drugs. Second: The giving up of worry, or fear. These two steps are, alone, sufficient to cure a large percentage of disease. These diseases won't, however, stay cured, if people don't eat right—if they continue to elaborate poison in their systems. Nature's immutable laws cannot be overcome by any cult, sect or school.

The "Christian Scientists" are undoubtedly doing a vast amount of good. If they would avail themselves of simple, natural aids to nature, they might do much more good. And, in the case of children, who are too young to judge for themselves, it is right that they should be forced to take such steps. This does not, by any means, infer the use of drugs, or serums, or poisons of that kind.

Of course, the doctors are not altogether in love with "Christian Science." It would be strange, indeed, if they were. The Eddyites must have kept many millions of dollars from the coffers of the drug dispensers.

Woman's Era.

THE editor of the Care of the Body recently asked the editor of the Sunday Magazine to furnish a brief list of names of persons who might be able to contribute special articles for the Midwinter Number of The Times, upon which the "Body" man is now at work, for the twenty-second year—having, consequently, little time to devote to the care of the body, the mind, or the soul—not even his own. Ten names were received, of which nine were those of women, and one that of a Britisher.

This caused the editor to ruminate as to what chance there is going to be, poco tiempo, for us common, plain American males. With heathen Asiatics taking the menial work, and able American females the higher work, the outlook for the biped who parts his clothes in the middle is not encouraging. Nor does such a condition portend prosperity to woman herself, or to the family, "in the long run." That abnormally high prices for all necessities, with no increase in income, may force married men to make their women folk work, and may cause unmarried men to hesitate about incurring such grave responsibilities as are involved in marriage, may be the inevitable consequences of what we vaguely call "civilization." In the editor's humble opinion, however, they are not encouraging signs of the times.

The Fasting Cure.

DR. LINDA BURFIELD-HAZZARD, of Seattle, who makes a specialty of fasting for the cure of disease, was recently criticised by the Seattle papers because a woman patient died, after a 47 days's fast. The autopsy vindicated Dr. Hazzard, as it was shown that the woman would have died in any event. The normal position and shape of the stomach had been greatly distorted, and there were grave adhesions besides other structural complications.

Subsequently, Seattle Sunday Times, of October 6, made the "amende honorable," by devoting a page to an illustrated article written by the editor on fasting as a cure for all bodily ills. The Seattle paper mentions the fact that, in her eleven years of practice, Dr. Hazzard has lost only nine patients—certainly a record that any physician, of any school, might envy.

The editor hopes, before long, to find space for a comprehensive article on fasting, as a means of cure. Meantime, those who wish to peruse a short but illuminating essay on the subject are recommended to send 10 cents to Dr. Hazzard, for a booklet she has published, entitled "Fasting for the Cure of Disease." Her address is 417 East Thomas street, Seattle, Wash.

Epidemics.

A FINANCIAL panic is like an epidemic of disease. If you talk about it, you invite it. Use a little "New Thought" or "Christian Science," or, better still, a little "Common Sense"—which, by the way, is mighty uncommon sense.

An instance of how easily "intelligent" Americans may be stampeded was recently furnished at Goldfield, Nev. A woman presented a check for $12 at a bank. It was returned to her, marked "No funds." She supposed it meant that the bank had no funds, and went around telling her friends. Whereupon, a run on the bank ensued.

A Los Angeles Hospital.

THE editor recently had occasion to call at the California Hospital. While, of course, there are features connected with this and other hospitals, of which the editor does not at all approve—such, for instance, as diet, and drugs, and what the editor believes to be too frequent operations—yet he must admit that, as a "regular" institution, the California appears to be pleasant, clean and well managed. The company has the good fortune to own about an acre and a half of land, which will soon be near the business center of the city. About a third of this area has been turned into an attractive garden, with beautiful shade trees, flowers, and benches. Here, convalescents are encouraged to spend much of their time, and when they are not able to do that, they are urged to loaf in the capacious sun parlor.

The California Hospital has a capacity for 150 patients. The number of employés is nearly as great, amounting to 140, of whom 100 are nurses. About half of these nurses are students, receiving nominal wages. Dr. Walter Lindley, upon whose shoulders falls the responsibility of managing this big enterprise, takes more than a financial interest in it. Although he is a "regular," in good standing, he and the editor find several things upon which they can agree, as in the case of other intelligent, experienced and liberal-minded physicians. For instance, Dr. Lindley is a great believer in the efficacy of fresh air, and believes that this, with food, is the only cure for consumption, being a disbeliever in the now generally-discredited serum treatment, which a few years ago was all the rage. In addition to the management of the hospital, Dr. Lindley is editor of the Southern California Practitioner.

It appears that the belief that Los Angeles hospitals pay immense dividends is not well founded. Dr. Lindley permitted the editor to see official figures, which show that during the past few years the establishment has only paid to the stockholders a good commercial interest on the money invested. The expenses of running such an institution are, of course, great. For instance, a vast sum is paid out every month for eggs. The average cost for each patient during the past nine months was $3, the average receipts for the same period being $3.65.

The editor would hazard the suggestion that, if a non-flesh, low-proteid dietary should be introduced, the cost of feeding the patients might be reduced at least two-thirds, with a corresponding great improvement in their condition and rapidity of recovery. This has been proved so thoroughly, by scientific investigators, in Germany, that it no longer admits of a shadow of a doubt on the part of any intelligent, unbiased person.

A hospital like the California brings to Los Angeles people from all over the southwestern country, quite a number of whom become permanent residents—if the surgeons don't kill them first.

October Rains.

SO far, the rainy season opens auspiciously for the farmers of Southern California. The rainfall for the month of October, up to noon of the 19th, amounted to .72 inches. The average for the month for the past thirty years is only a fraction more. Only twice—in 1891 and last year—has there been no rain whatever in October, although in seven other years the month showed less than one-tenth of an inch. Six times, in the past thirty years, has there been more than an inch of rain in October, and in 1889 the phenomenal amount of seven inches fell—to be exact, 6.96—which is more than the total rainfall in two of the thirty seasons. That year was the year of the flood in the Los Angeles River, when many were driven from their homes. The tal rainfall for that season amounted to 38.13 inches, which beats the record of the past thirty years.

Judging from the record, one may say that, as a rule, good rains in October indicate a good rain for the season, although this has not always been the case.

These rains and mists, and clouds, are delightful to nervous people, and pleasing to most people, after a long spell of dry, electrical weather. They are also helpful, in cleaning away filth from the air, and from the ground.

Food for Mind and Body.

A FRENCH magazine tells of a publication called the "Regal" (place of publication not stated) printed in ink, guaranteed non-poisonous, on their thin sheets of dough after absorbing all the information the sheet contained, one could eat it, thus deriving from it nourishment—of a kind—for mind and body. Probably, the mental pabulum was about as unsatisfactory as the white flour on which the journal was printed.

Some of our "yaller" journals, if used in this way, would be apt to cause awful nightmares.

WHERE FASHIONS NEVER CHANGE.

If the woman gets tired of the change of fashion she has an opportunity to live where there are no changes if she can afford the expense of travel. In China the fashions never change, and it has been practically the same in Japan, although it is hard to predict what the future may bring forth in that country. The Lapps of Scandinavia have worn the same style garments for 1000 years and the Swiss and Swede peasants have worn the same kind of clothes from time immemorial.—[Unidentified.

Autology

WHAT IS AUTOLOGY?

AUTHOR OF AUTOLOGY.
Harvard University Medical School, '88; College of Physicians and Surgeons (Chicago) '89; Formerly House Physician and Surgeon in Cook County Hospital (Chicago), Professor of Obstetrics College of Physicians and Surgeons, (Chicago). Member of Chicago Medical Society, etc.

"Autology is Life Itself"

"My Dear Dr. Moras: AUTOLOGY took me from the contemplation of a lingering death to the full enoyment of the beautiful and worthy in life with a power I never before experienced.

"Seven months ago I was a complete wreck, with stomach ruined by drugs and wrongful eating, and enlarged liver, kidneys too diseased to work, nervous system shattered, memory and brain feeble, vitality very low and the body itself emaciated, so that my appearance and feelings were equally miserable.

"I had struggled along blindly for above eight years.

"And now I not only am able to work without fatigue from ten to twelve hours each day at my profession as a lawyer, but a large number of my friends, with many different complaints, have likewise been cured. AUTOLOGY IS LIFE ITSELF." D. B. MAXWELL,
Attorney-at-Law, 432 Diamond St., Pittsburg, Pa.

"I have read your book with much interest and profit. I congratulate you on improving on Graham, Trall, Dewey, Densmore, Bellows, Miles, Haig, Fletcher, Smith, Christian, Just, Broadbent, and others."
HENRY BOOL, Ithaca, N. Y.

"No money could buy my copy."
MISS M. L. SMITH, 513 Grand Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.

If I Were a Carnegie

"I know of no way that I could get rid of my millions to better advantage than by placing a copy of AUTOLOGY in every home in the United States. I believe the benefits would be greater than from all the libraries he has established."
H. G. SUMNER, Passiac, N. J.

"You are working a great good for humanity. My heart is filled with gratitude for what AUTOLOGY has done for me. I was crippled with rheumatism to such an extent that I couldn't do my work, suffered all the time, very constipated, nervous, threatened with paralysis, pain and weakness in back and limbs. Now I feel perfectly well and strong and active as 20 years ago. My friends remark: 'How well you look, Mrs. Phillips. AUTOLOGY has saved me from a lingering death." Sincerely,
MRS. H. F. PHILLIPS, Algonquin, Ill.

Every page is pure gold."
R. M. EARLY, Camden, N. J.

"I would not take $100.00 for your book."
D. B. ROBINS, Fredonia, Pa.

Well or Sick You Need AUTOLOGY

Autology is no theory, no fad, no creed. It deals with the practical business of your body and brain as you have learned to deal with the practical business of your home affairs, plants and flowers, your land and grain, your dollars and cents. It tells you how to get the most and best out of every one of your organs and functions; how to cure and cultivate them; how to fertilize and improve them. It makes health and disease an open book, as clear as day to your own mind, divested of all mystery and dread. You become your own physician and specialist, as well as your children's or family's. Read what a prominent physician, educator and author writes:

"I must acknowledge that your book contains more useful knowledge than any other work of its kind. You have written the various topics of the book intensely instructive, practical and entertaining. Indeed you have made the physiological dietary and curative knowledge and facts as much interesing and fascinating as any historical novel. It is the most capital book for every family, for every single person that I know of."—DR. I. AUGUSTUS KERMAR, Estero, Fla.

Well or sick, you need Autology. Without it you are bound to sicken, suffer or linger or die when you shouldn't. With it there will be no such thing as pain or sickness in your life. Do you realize what this means?

"Your Guide to Autology is a wondrous eye-opener; enough to make the doctors delirious—but not with delight." (Mrs.) H. W. GRAVES, 79 Stanley Ave., Victoria, B. C.

"Dear Sir:—I will say that Autology is without doubt the finest, brainiest and yet simplest book on the market today. Why, it reads just like a dream, and the fun of it all, it is all fact and truth; and a follower of its doctrines can reach the highest form of mental, physical, sexual and spiritual realm. Yours for Health and Wisdom."—T. M. WOODHOUSE, M. D., M. E., 195 College St., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

No schooling or training is required to master Autology. That you may know and see for yourself, I will send you

192 Pages of Priceless Information That Everybody Needs and That Money Can't Buy Elsewhere

I Ask You Nothing absolutely nothing, for this valuable little work, which everybody who reads it says contains more truths and good sense and valuable practical advice and information about men's and women's and children's bodies and brains in health and sickness than are obtainable elsewhere at any price.

EVERY CHAPTER IS A GEM

The editor of Health Magazine, published in New York, whose opinion is eagerly sought by thinking people all over the world, has this to say of the chapter on Digestion: "It is a veritable gem, and will prove a blessing to untold thousands." There are over forty-five such gems as fine as you ever want to read, and they cost you nothing, absolutely nothing, now or later, just the time to read them at your leisure. So valuable are they that you'll refuse to lend the "Guide" to your nearest relative for fear of not getting another.

Every Subject is not only treated in a unique way, in plain every-day language, as interesting as a novel, but it is as vital to your well living as breathing and eating. Send for it and judge for yourself. It is free, absolutely free, and sent postpaid.

Here is what the editor of the New Thought Magazine, Chicago, writes about Autology in a recent number:

"Dr. Moras broke away from the old drug systems years ago and devoted his scientific training to advocating and disseminating knowledge of 'Nature's Remedies.' In reading the volume we kept marking the paragraphs we wanted to quote for the benefit of our readers, but when we finished and looked back at the unbroken line or marked pages we gave up. Read it for yourselves! It is thoroughly practical, thoroughly original, thoroughly valuable. When you've read the chapter 'What You Are Made of and Why You Eat,' when you've considered 'The Origin of Diseases,' 'Nutrition and Mal-Nutrition,' when you've mastered 'What to Do and What Not to Do,' and when you've got the strong meat out of the chapters on 'Prejudices in Your Way,' the essence of good sense in 'Natural Remedies'—when, in other words, you have read this book, you'll urge your friends and neighbors to go and do likewise."
